THE ASSEMBLY'S SPEAKER.

THE CONTEST BETWEEN MR. SLOAN AND MR. HUSTED.

HARD STRUGGLE AND AN UNCERTAIN RESULT—BOTH PARTIES CONFIDENT—TACTICS OF SLOAN AND HUSTED CONTRASTED—THE MEN WHO PLEDGE THEMSELVES TO BOTH SIDES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Dec. 31.—In some respects the present contest for the Speakership differs from most others which have taken place at Albany, in being very quiet and very good tempered. It is as earnest as any, but there has been up to this time a refreshing absence of noise and acrimony. In the last political contest which happened here there came flocking in from all parts of the State, and especially from New-York, such a crowd of politicians of all sorts and grades as to almost bewilder one by their number, and the halls of the Delevan were crowded in a style which made it difficult to move about. To-day there has scarcely been any more crowd there than one can see any Sunday during the session, and though the canvass has proceeded with more activity than ever, yet the work is done without noise or fuss of any kind. Something of the quiet and subdued tone characteristic of Mr. Sloan seems to be infused into the canvass, and Mr. Husted is an individual who always prefers to do his work in dark corners and regions remote from observation. It is quite clear that up to the present moment the outside pressure which is usually so prominent a feature of legislative battles has been almost absent from this. The parties in interest have been left to work out the problem themselves. So long as this continues Mr. Sloan's chances of election improve. Yesterday this gentleman's friends were so absolutely confident of his election that they heard with ill-concealed impatience any less enthusiastic sympath zer express a doubt about the result. They have been much more subdued in tone to-day, and yet to the impartial observer it must appear that it any change has taken p ace in the situation at all, it has been rather in Mr. Sloan's favor than against him. One man confidently calculated for him has gone over to Mr. Husted, but this is balanced by the Husted men who have come out for Sloan.

The truth seems to be that Mr. Sloan's friends are finding out that voluntary pledges of support made some weeks ago cannot be too implicitly relied upon now. There are men woo enjoy a good reputation for integrity who are found to have written pledges themselves to both candidates, and others who have pledged themselves to one have come here and declared for his opponent. "In men can be relied upon," said Mr. Sloan's friend at the opening of the canvass, "we can have 43 votes sure." This was true, but unfortunately men cannot be relied upon. If Mr. Sloan had 55 votes to-night his election would be sure, and Mr. Husted would not go into the caucus as a candidate. Yet Mr. Husted is as confident as ever, and talks as if he were sure of the result.

It is acknowledged on all hands that if Mr. Sloan is successful, he will go into the Speaker's chair almost as no other man ever did, for he will be absolutely untrameled by promises and pledges of any kind. If any of his friends, in their enthusiasm, are ready to give promises and make pledges, everybody knows that the gentleman they assume to speak for will not countenance bargaining of any kind, and the question to be settled is whether a Speaker can be elected on such a basis. Every man who expects to get a consideration for his vote naturally drifts to Mr. Husted. The men who will vote from sole considerations of voting for the good of the party as naturally tend to Mr. Sloan.

In the conduct of the canvass by the two candidates there is a characteristic difference. From long experience in politics, Mr. Husted has grown distrustful of men. A personal pledge from a member he puts little faith in. His effort is always to secure the support of those local leaders who control politics in the locality from which the member comes. "Who are the men at the back of this member?" is his first inquiry, and the men at the back he depends upon to hold the vote. Mr. Sloan has not made much effort in this line. The work done for him by his friends is open and above board, and though it would be more than any one could say at this time what the result will be in the caucus to-morrow, it is certain that there is nothing in the present aspect of affairs to make the friends of Mr. Sloan feel less confident, or to cause them to weaken in their efforts to secure his election.

The late train from New-York brought up most of the Democratic delegation, but neither of the three absent Republican members—Messrs. Cowdin, Corso, and Langbien. These gentlemen are claimed to be supporters of Mr. Husted, but it is by no means certain that they are. Dr. Hayes is here, and is for Mr. Husted. Mr. Strahan is here, and is non-committal. It is thought he is for Sloan. It was rumored that the train would bring up a strong lobby in Mr. Husted's interest, but it does not appear to have done so. Diligent inquiry fails to discover that any of the men it was said would arrive have reached Albany. Mr. Warner Miller, of Herkimer; Mr. Gere, of Tioga; Mr. Skinner, of Jefferson; Mr. Brown, of Cayuga; Mr. Webb, of Dutchess; Mr. Lang, of St. Lawrence; Mr. Fish, of Putnam, and Mr. Baker, of Washington, are the most prominent workers on the Sloan side. In the Husted interest appear Mr. Burleigh, of Washington; Mr. Toby, of Essex, Gallagher, of Erie, and a crowd of others. As the time goes on Mr. Sloan's friends grow more confident. They feel that some of the interests they expected to work against them have not dared to appear in the field. The assertions heard last night that an attempt would be made by Mr. Sloan's supporters to have an open ballot in the caucus are repeated to-night in a way which shows that a strong effort will be made to bring this about. It is generally conceded that if an open ballot can be had Mr. Sloan's election is assured, and even now, when one looks over the list of members put down as sure to vote for Mr. Sloan, it does not appear possible that he can be beaten whether the ballot be open or secret. Yet the inexhaustible resources of his opponent in the arts of political trickery make one doubtful, almost independe of conviction and sympathy.

THE SPEAKERSHIP—CARD FROM JUDGE EMOTT.

[illegible] this morning without my knowledge or authority. I never saw the document until I saw it in your paper. I do not make this statement because I do not agree with the sentiments expressed in this communication or address. Everybody will accept these. The propriety or necessity of a few private individuals adopting this method of advising the House of Assembly is a different question.

THE INTEROCEANIC SHIP CANAL.

PROBABLE BEGINNING OF THE WORK WITHIN TWO YEARS—CORRESPONDENCE WITH VARIOUS POWERS RELATIVE TO NEUTRALITY.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 31.—The commission appointed by the President to examine the various surveys and report upon the most feasible route for an interoceanic ship canal across the Isthmus of Darien, have every reason to believe that work upon this great improvement connecting the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans will be commenced within the next two years. The Clayton-Bulwer Treaty of July 5, 1850, between the United States and Great Britain, guaranteeing the neutrality of this work, provides that friendly powers shall be invited to participate with our Government and that of Great Britain in its construction, as the commerce of the entire world is interested in it. The Department of State is now in correspondence with various friendly powers, preparatory to the negotiation of treaties with them similar to the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty. The cost of a trans-continental ship canal by the Nicaragua route, which has been selected, will be about $100,000,000, and ten years, at least, will be required to complete the work. Hence, it must be under control, as the great outlay of capital required for Government its construction, and the length of time before any profits from it can be realized, present too great difficulties in the way of its construction by private enterprise. Should foreign powers, however, co-operate with the United States in the prosecution of this work, the Government as a participator will become stockholders in it to the extent of their outlay of capital, and the management of the canal, when completed, will be by an international commission, the members of which will represent the respective Governments having capital invested in the work.

BALANCE OF THE GENEVA AWARD.

THE QUESTION OF DISPOSING OF THE UNEXPENDED $8,000,000—THE EXPIRATION OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 31.—The question as to what disposition shall be made of the unexpended balance of the Geneva award, amounting to about $8,000,000, will not be considered at this session of Congress on account of want of time and the pressure of other matters. The House of Representatives on the 6th of July last, about one month prior to the close of the session, passed a bill continuing the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims until the 22d of July, 1877, and authorizing the court to examine and determine claims for vessels and cargoes destroyed by insurgent cruisers other than the Alabama, Florida, and Shenandoah; and also claims for the payment of premiums for war risks. This bill was sent to the Senate, and referred to the Committee of the Judiciary; but on account of great pressure of business at the end of the session it was not considered. During this session the important questions attending the Presidential contest have consumed all time and prevented action on it; therefore, the Alabama Claims Court expired yesterday, in accordance with the act approved July 22, 1876. It is thought, however, that the subject will be considered at the next session, though it must, of course, come up anew in both House and Senate.

Conflicting opinions now prevail among Senators and Representatives regarding the disposition of the unexpended balance of the award; some holding the view that all the claims contemplated by the Geneva Tribunal having been satisfied the balance should be returned to Great Britain, the sum having been awarded by that tribunal to the United States in trust for the payment of these claims, which were for losses caused by the Alabama, Florida and Shenandoah after their departure from Melbourne on the 18th of February, 1863. Others claim that the money was awarded to the United States in gross for losses sustained by our commerce, and the Government has the right to make such disposition of the balance as it may think proper, either cover it into the Treasury to be used in ordinary expenditures, or disburse it for claims of insurance companies, losses by cruisers other than those named, &c.

Papers are now on file in the State Department showing 62 vessels destroyed by cruisers other than the Alabama, Shenandoah, and Florida, the value of which was $1,226,444 03, exclusive of cargoes valued at $425,253. The amount of insurance on these vessels and cargoes is stated at $671,494.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 31.—This afternoon Lincoln Hall was filled with about 2,000 persons of both sexes to strengthen the newspaper attacks recently commenced on gambling-houses in Washington. Several clergymen and laymen delivered addresses, after which a committee of seven citizens was appointed to bring the subject to the attention of the Grand Jury, with a view to the prosecution of professional gamblers and the consequent permanent closing of their houses. This business was suspended several days ago owing to published attacks upon the proprietors, who feared arrest. It was remarked by one of the speakers at the meeting to-day that there was too much gambling at church fairs, and there should be reform in that direction. This expression was indorsed by the audience.

Senator Wright's bill declaring the true intent and meaning of the Union Pacific Railroad acts, which were approved July 1, 1862, July 2, 1864, and July 3, 1866, which he proposed to call up in the Senate this week, applies particularly to the Central Branch of the Union Pacific, and is designed to prevent the issue of any bonds of the United States, or patents for land, as subsidies for any extension of the road in excess of 100 miles west to the Missouri River. The company claims that it has a right to receive subsidy for a road from a point 100 miles west of the Missouri to connect with the Union Pacific at the one hundredth meridian, a distance of about 250 miles, and involving lands and bonds to the amount of between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000. The matter has been before the departments several years, and it was at first decided by Attorney General Ackerman that the company should receive lands and bonds only for the construction of 100 miles of road west of the Missouri. Subsequently the case was reopened, and Solicitor General Phillips, to whom it was referred, decided that the company had a right to construct the road and receive the subsidy for the entire distance from the Missouri River to the one hundredth meridian. A resolution was then introduced in the Senate instructing the Judiciary Committee to inquire into the matter, and that committee made an unanimous report to the effect that the company is entitled to subsidy for 100 miles of road west to the Missouri only. Several Senators oppose the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee, believing that the questions involved are a judicial character, and should be settled in the [illegible]

THE EASTERN CONFERENCE.

DETAILS OF LORD SALISBURY'S INTERVIEW WITH THE SULTAN—THE BRITISH FLEET ORDERED OUT OF TURKISH WATERS BY THE PLENIPOTENTIARY—LAST THURSDAY'S SESSION OF THE CONFERENCE—A CONCILIATORY SPIRIT SHOWN.

LONDON, Dec. 31.—A dispatch to Reuter's Telegram Company, dated Constantinople Dec. 27, which was delayed by the interruption of the telegraph lines, says: "The Marquis of Salisbury, at his audience with the Sultan yesterday, announced that a complete understanding between the powers was achieved during the preliminary conference, and this agreement resulted in the programme which had already been semi-officially communicated to the Porte. Lord Salisbury advised the Sultan to accept the proposals. The Sultan replied that he deeply regretted that he was compelled to decline giving his adhesion thereto, as his powers were limited by the Constitution. Lord Salisbury thereupon remarked in that case Turkey must not count upon money or men from England, who would leave Turkey to her fate.

The Sultan answered: 'It is useless to press me; for if I accept the proposals, it would be at the risk of my crown and life.'

Lord Salisbury then asked on what his Majesty relied for defense in case of war.

The Sultan replied that the Army and people would defend him. He could not depend on them if he opposed the unanimous wishes of his subjects.

At the conclusion of the interview, Lord Salisbury informed the Sultan that he would be compelled to withdraw the British fleet, in order to dissipate the erroneous idea that the fleet supported Turkey in resisting the will of Europe.

On leaving the Sultan the Marquis telegraphed to Admiral Drummond to withdraw his fleet immediately from Turkish waters. The Admiral asked for authority to winter in the harbor of Salonica, but Lord Salisbury refused it. Consequently a portion of the fleet sailed for the Piræus, and the remainder proceeded to Malta.

A Reuter's dispatch from Constantinople dated Thursday, Dec. 28, says the Turkish representatives, at twe day's sitting of the conference, accepted the prolongation of the armistice without opposition. The conference afterward discussed the Porte's counter-proposals for reforms applicable to all of the provinces, without distinction. The Plenipotentiaries did not reject these proposals. This is believed to imply willingness on the part of the powers to modify their original proposals. A mutually conciliatory spirit prevailed, the Ottoman delegates appearing disposed to make such concessions as are compatible with the integrity and independence of Turkey; consequently, hopes are entertained that an understanding will be reached, by which all interests will be reconciled.

The full Council of Ministers held this evening began at 7 and ended at 10 o'clock. The Sultan presided in person. This council was followed by a council of Generals, under the Presidency of the Commander in Chief, which opened at 10:30 and concluded at midnight. Midhat Pasha attended the latter council.

Reuter's Paris telegram says the Porte proposes that the force to be established in the Christian provinces be composed of Christians under European officers. The acceptance of this offer appears probable. The only difficulty is a condition that the officers shall be commissioned by Turkey.

Minister Simon, receiving the syndicate of the stockholders of Paris, said, relying upon the wisdom of Europe, he firmly trusted in a peaceful solution of the Eastern question.

A Reuter telegram dated Dec. 30 reports that Vukovitch and Petrovitch, with 12,000 men each, have reoccupied the positions on the northern and southern frontiers of Montenegro which they held before the armistice.

LONDON, Jan. 1.—The Standard's dispatch from Vienna says it is stated that a third part of the Russian mobilized Army will Winter in Kherson, as tolerable quarters are not to be had on the Pruth.

The Vienna correspondent of the Times reports that at Thursday's sitting of the conference the Turks declared their readiness to enter into the discussion of the points drawn up by the conference only on condition that they might bring forward their counter-proposals, which should, equally with the proposals of the powers, form a basis for the discussion. The European Plenipotentiaries took this condition ad referendum, and afterward held a separate meeting. The sitting of the conference on Saturday was short and formal. All the Plenipotentiaries were already agreed that Turkey should formulate her counter-proposals. The Turks, however, asked for a short delay, as their proposals were not yet ready. This was agreed to. Two months are not likely to prove too long a time for the negotiations. The impression that the question of guarantees presents the chief difficulty is, indeed, likely to prove correct. But there are other points which have little chance of ever being accepted by Turkey in the shape which they have taken at the conference. The principal of these is the cession of territory to Montenegro, which, as projected by the conference, would make Montenegro half as large again as now, and involve a sort of formal recognition of her independence. The delineation of Bulgaria, as planned by the powers, and which would make that province include more than half the Balkan Peninsula, leaving only a narrow strip of country along the Ægean Sea and east of Adrianople, has even less chance of being accepted. The question of the cession of Little Zvornik to Servia may also create some difficulty. When the proposals agreed upon by the Plenipotentiaries are fully known. The impression that Russia has had it all but her own way at the preliminary conference is not likely to be weakened. Russia, however, in return for these concessions in regard to the substance of the proposals has granted one relative to the mode in which they are to be presented. She at first wished to have the armistice prolonged for a fortnight at a time and renewed in case of necessity, and have the proposals of the conference presented as a sort of ultimatum. It could easily be foreseen that no amount of persuasion or threats would have made Turkey agree to this. Russia's attitude was moderate in consequence of the weather, and of the incompleteness of her armaments, which was such that she could not have immediately fulfilled her solemnly announced threats. The Turks have every reason, and also the determination, to avoid a conflict altogether, or at least defer it. Their preparations are also incomplete. Every day's respite is clear gain to them.

The Russian Telegraphic Agency announces that the condition of the Grand Duke Nicholas has sensibly improved.

The Daily Telegraph's correspondent at Pera insists that the removal of the British fleet has no political significance. He says at Thursday's sitting of the conference the Ottoman delegates commenced by declaring impossible every measure affecting the independence and integrity of the Empire. They especially objected to the proposal that the Governors of provinces should be appointed under the approval of the powers. The discussion, however, was on the whole amicable, and the impression is hopeful. The Porte, on Saturday, will offer as a guarantee to sign a proposal solemnly engaging to faithfully execute the reforms, agreeing the conference shall assemble after two years to verify the loyal execution of the new charter. The Porte also consents to the formation of a Turkish gendarmerie under a mixed command of Turkish and continental officers. It is understood that Gen. Ignatieff has declared that his power of making concessions is nearly exhausted.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT NEAR BUFFALO.

BUFFALO, Dec. 31.—A sleeper, the last car on the New-York Express train, which was due at [illegible] this morning, was thrown from the track about 20 miles from this city, overturning the car. The occupants, a lady and gentleman, and the porter, escaped injury, the coupling breaking. A hot journal caused the accident. The car took fire but it was extinguished by the people on the line of the road with snow.

ADVANCE IN FREIGHT RATES.

RESULT OF THE FREIGHT AGENTS' MEETING AT CHICAGO—THE NEW RATES ADOPTED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 31.—The third meeting of the general freight agents yesterday, at the office of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad, resulted in definite action. There were present representatives of the Lake Shore, Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago, Michigan Central, Baltimore and Ohio, and Pittsburg, Cincinnati and St. Louis Railways. They agreed upon an advance of five cents per 100 pounds on certain kinds of east-bound freight. The new rates are as follows:

	Grain.	Fourth Class.
Chicago to New-York	35	40
Chicago to Boston	40	45
Chicago to Philadelphia	31½	36
Chicago to Baltimore	30½	35
Chicago to Albany	30	35

This new arrangement goes into effect on New Year's Day. It is understood that Milwaukee will adopt the Chicago rate.

THE WEATHER.

DISAPPEARANCE OF A PROMINENT CITIZEN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HARTFORD, Dec. 31.—Judge W. N. Matson, of this city, a well-known and wealthy citizen, left home last Thursday, saying he was going to Litchfield for a few days, but as he has not been there it is feared that he has taken his own life. In former years he was not of sound mind for a time, but of late years he has attended to his affairs and been apparently all right, though for a short time past he has acted strangely.

MARINE DISASTERS.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 31.—The Signal Service observer at Oregon Inlet, N. C., reports to the chief signal officer as follows: At 9 o'clock in the afternoon of Dec. 24 the Italian bark Amerigo Pelliseno, 1,000 tons register, from Amsterdam, for Baltimore in ballast, was stranded on the beach 14 miles south of that place during a north-east gale. The crew, 14 in number, were all saved by the crew of Life-saving Station No. 9. She will probably prove a total wreck.

CHARLESTON, Dec. 31.—The bark Disco, stranded on Charleston Bar, has listed and become a wreck. Her cotton is being removed and 140 bales have reached the city, most of which is in a fair condition, but much of what remains in the wreck will be badly damaged by salt water.

A PROPOSED FILIBUSTERING EXPEDITION.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 31.—There have recently been some vague rumors here of a filibustering expedition being organized to invade Lower California, and the Chronicle this morning publishes an article stating that some 200 men, well armed, will ostensibly establish a colony in that country, when, by preconcerted arrangements, they will be attacked by Mexicans, which will inaugurate trouble of such magnitude that either the United States Government will be called upon to interfere, or the whole tier of Northern Mexican States will join in declaring an independent Republic. In either case the invaders will be on hand to reap any benefits that may arise, and having ostensibly acted purely in self-defense there can be no blame attached to them. Contrary to the above, the Alta this morning publishes an interview with Mr. Pritchard, Mexican Consul, who states that all such rumors are mere newspaper sensations made up of whole cloth.

THOUSANDS SIGNING THE PLEDGE.

PITTSBURG, Dec. 31.—Mr. Francis Murphy is holding a watch-night temperance meeting at Library Hall to-night. The hall is crowded, and hundreds were unable to gain admission. Over 5,400 persons have signed Mr. Murphy's pledge, and such a moral excitement has never been known in this city. All classes of society are actively interested, and the deepest feeling permeates the populace. Mr. Murphy has been here three weeks, and it is uncertain when his labors will terminate.

THE PARISH WILL CASE.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Dec. 31.—The excitement raised a few weeks ago in regard to the Parish will case has entirely died out. The absurd rumor in regard to a settlement was as ridiculous as it was false. It turns out that the adopted daughter, Miss Susie Hayt Parish, would never listen to any proposition for compromise and that the contestants voluntarily dropped the case because they had no ground to stand upon. The young heiress possesses not only a large fortune but the highest respect of her friends.

YOUNG MISCREANTS ARRESTED.

NEW-HAVEN, Dec. 31.—Last Summer a married woman of Bridgeport, while walking in the suburbs with a friend, was attacked by eight young rascals, who beat her companion and then, in succession, outraged her. For this crime John Kenney, Joseph Keaney, and John Rogers were arrested, tried and sentenced to the State Prison for life. These have since betrayed their companions, and James Handley, William Logan, John Bracken, Thomas Rowe, and Joseph Farrell, have been arrested.

A MAMMOTH SAW MILL BURNED.

DETROIT, Dec. 31.—H. A. & S. G. Wright's mammoth steam saw-mill, in this city, was destroyed by fire on Saturday morning. Loss, $30,000; insurance, $15,000. The mill was one of the most complete establishments of the kind in the city, having a capacity of 100,000 feet of lumber per day. The origin of the fire is unknown, but it is supposed to be incendiary.

FATAL ACCIDENTAL SHOOTING.

WORCESTER, Dec. 31.—George Hollender, a clothing dealer of this city, 65 years of age, was shot through the head this morning by the accidental discharge of a revolver, which he was cleaning, and almost instantly killed.

ESCAPE OF TEN PRISONERS.

CLEVELAND, Dec. 31.—Ten prisoners escaped from the County Jail at an early hour this morning. They overpowered the guard, bound and gagged him. None have been captured.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CLEVELAND, Dec. 31.—A large force of workmen have been engaged at the Ashtabula wreck all day, and the débris is nearly cleared away. Only two additional bodies were found to-day, and these, with the 34 found yesterday, are probably all that will be recovered. The rest are so completely destroyed by fire that they cannot be separated or removed. Of the 36 recovered, 19 are thought to be recognized. Among them are the remains of Dr. A. H. Washburn, Rector of Grace Church in this city, whose death has thrown a pall of sadness over a portion of this community. Dr. Washburn has been Rector of Grace Church for more than 11 years, and was widely respected and beloved. Memorial services were held in the Episcopal Churches to-night. The remains of the dead Rector were brought to Cleveland by special train, arriving at 10 o'clock to-night.

STATEMENT OF A BRAVE MAN.

Several of the injured brought here Saturday night have been interviewed, and furnish the following statements: Mr. A. Burnham, who is being cared for at the Huron Street Hospital, is the traveling agent of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad. He is an intelligent gentleman, 55 years old, and was fortunate in escaping with no more serious injuries than a painful contusion of the right, and some quite severe bruises on the left, side of the body. At the time of the accident Mr. Burnham was in the smoking car, occupying a seat about midway of the car, in company with Mr. David Chittenden, Cleveland agent of the New-York Central Railroad. The latter was sitting next the window. Mr. Burnham was first alarmed by the violent shaking of the car, indicating that it had left the track, and he thinks he instinctively clutched the arm of the seat. At the same moment Mr. Reid, Mr. Stone, and the conductor, Mr. Henri, sprang up, and immediately following came a terrific crash. Mr. Burnham states that he did not for a moment lose his consciousness, and realized that the car was falling. It seemed an age before it struck. Several almost deafening crashes followed rapidly, filling Mr. Burnham's mind with the apprehension that something would fall upon him, and feeling about he found that he had been thrown among a mass of débris, beneath which were two men. He got up, and on examination found both men were dead. About this time Mr. Reid had got hold of Mr. Tilden, who was apparently lifeless, and was endeavoring to pull him up, calling him repeatedly by name. Mr. Burnham went to the assistance of Mr. Reid, and the two succeeded in removing Mr. Tilden, who was still in an unconscious condition. Mr. Reid went away, but speedily returned, and Mr. Tilden, having in the meanwhile partially recovered, was conveyed to a place of safety. Mr. Burnham heard a cry for help from under a pile of shattered timbers, and turning back he found a man struggling to free himself from the broken and splintered mass that held him firmly down. Mr. Burnham endeavored to get hold of him, but found it impossible to do so, as the advancing fire was now flashing in his face and making rapid progress toward him. He was compelled to leave the unhappy man to the terrible fate of being burned alive. Mr. Burnham saw the necessity of securing his own safety, and climbed or clambered out of the remains of the smoking car on to the bottom of another car. Here he saw two men with their heads protruding from a mass of débris, and who appealed to him for help. He pulled the one nearest to him out, and helped him away, the man's leg being broken; the other succeeded in extricating himself. Mr. Burnham then got out himself, and now first becoming fully conscious of his hurts, sought a place of safety, where he might be able to secure needed attention. Regarding the fate of Mr. Chittenden, who occupied the seat with Mr. Burnham, that gentleman thinks that he was thrown among the timbers and almost instantly crushed to death, and that his body was doubtless burned.

Mr. Burnham expressed himself as fully convinced that the smoking car was off the track before the bridge gave way, and probably the rear locomotive and several other cars, the breaking of the bridge being in consequence of the heavy pounding thus created.

RESCUING THE SUFFERERS.

Another case was that of a young lady who was fastened in the wrecked timbers up to her waist. Half a dozen stalwart men had responded to her appeal for help, but their joint efforts for some moments promised to be unavailing. The fire that was rapidly advancing toward her rendered her almost frantic, and she screamed to the men to persist in their efforts to rescue her. She was finally dragged forth, her clothing from her waist down and her shoes and stockings being torn from her, and in this way she waded knee deep in snow for nearly half a mile to a place of safety.

Another incident was that of a man who escaped from the wreck with his clothes all ablaze, and ran as if mad. The crowd on the bank yelled to him to throw himself into the snow, but he took no heed, and then some one shouted to those near him to knock him down. He was shoved down, but, rising instantly, turned his face toward the burning wreck, plunged into it, and was lost. It was a case of utter frenzy.

THE AUTHOR OF "HOLD THE FORT" KILLED.

A telegram received here from Mr. D. L. Moody, of Chicago, asks the President of the Young Men's Christian Association to obtain and forward the remains of Mr. C. P. Bliss, the evangelist, and author of "Hold the Fort," who, with his wife and children, were on the ill-fated train. Diligent search has been made, but no trace of the bodies can be found. No one here knew Mr. Bliss or his family, nor can it be ascertained what part of the train they were in. They are either burned up or included among the unrecognized dead.

David Chittenden, of this city, was agent of the New-York Central Road, and has been in the employ of that company and the Lake Shore Road for 30 years. He was a native of Newport, N. Y., and was 54 years of age. He was widely known among railroad men. Peter Levenpree, fireman of the engine Columbia, which went down in the wreck, died here to-day of congestion of the lungs. He was found under the wrecked engine, with over 500 pounds of iron lying on his body, causing internal bruises which resulted in his death.

A reporter of the Cleveland Leader was sent to Erie, Penn., to interview Daniel McGuire, engineer of the leading locomotive, the Socrates, which broke loose from the train and escaped the fate of the other engine and cars. He is the only unhurt man who saw the whole of the affair, and under the most favorable circumstances. Mr. McGuire states that his engine was ahead of the Columbia. All stations between Erie and Ashtabula, with the exception of three, were stopped at. The train was running slow at the time of the accident. He felt the bridge give way when two car lengths from the west end. He felt it settle down. He had his hand on the throttle, and pulled it wide open. The drawbar connecting the engines was snapped by the sudden jerk. The trucks of his water tank did not clear and settle down, but the opening wide of the throttle saved the engine, and the trucks were pulled on. He ran up the track 100 yards, and gave the alarm by repeated whistles and ringing of the bell. He saw the engine Columbia sink with the bridge and turn bottom upward. The express, baggage, and passenger cars followed in a heap, the passenger cars landing on the express cars. All went into the river. The fire first broke out in the last sleeper, which swung over to one side and was soon in a blaze. In two or three minutes the entire wreck was a mass of flames. The shrieks of the living and the groans of the dying were terrible to hear; but their voices were soon hushed as the flames embraced them. He further says: "I was one of the first at the wreck. I pulled several out of the ice, and helped to extricate some from the débris. One woman was pinned down by her legs on a burning car. Her cries for help were piteous, and in despair, as the flames circled around her, she shrieked: "Take an axe and cut off my legs!" But it was impossible to reach her and she was consumed. The paint on the burning cars snapped like powder, scaring many workmen. I can not estimate the number burned, but think 100 perished by flame and water. Many were killed outright. A husband and wife in the burning wreck were held down by obstructions, and calmly awaited their fate. Their lips moved as if in prayer. Neither pen nor tongue can describe the horror of the scene. In 20 minutes after the fire started it was impossible to extricate passengers.

The engineer of the Columbia, "Pap" Folsom, of Cleveland, says his engine turned bottom upward. He was thrown violently through the window of the cab, and was badly cut. Maguire helped pick him up, bruised and bleeding. His first words were, "Another Angola horror, Dan." The train was running at the rate of 10 miles an hour at the time. The bridge was considered safe. Passenger train No. 8, with two engines, had passed safely over it about 7 o'clock. His train struck the bridge at 7:32. He thinks frost and weather and the heavy train snapped the bridge. Six engines had tested the bridge without straining it. At the time of the accident the storm was at its height. He could not see two cars length ahead of his engine, and this rendered it next to impossible to give immediate assistance.

HOW A GREATER HORROR WAS AVERTED.

Mr. McGuire thinks no one would have escaped from the doomed train had not his engine been saved, thus enabling him to give the alarm. Terrible, indeed, would it have been had the Socrates gone over in the blinding, furious storm. No one would have known of the disaster, and the next train due at Ashtabula would perhaps have shared the same fate and been thrown into the river. He has been in the service of the company since 1859, and never saw such a storm before.

THE VERY LATEST.

THE TWO CHILDREN OF MR. BLISS IN A PLACE OF SAFETY—THE BODIES FOUND—STORY OF ANOTHER OF THE SURVIVORS—WHERE FRIENDS OF THE MISSING MAY WRITE FOR INFORMATION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CLEVELAND, Jan. 1—1:30 A. M.—It is found that the two children of Mr. Bliss, the Evangelist, are safe at Avon, N. Y. Mr. Bliss and his wife were on the train, but no trace of their bodies can be found. A hat said to have been worn by Mrs. Bliss has been recovered, but nothing more. The reporter of the Leader telegraphs that 36 bodies have been found in all stages of disfigurement. A few which were under water show very little mutilation. Others are burned away so that all that is left of a man or a woman can be put in a cigar-box. They have all been laid out in the freight-house at Ashtabula. Some are without heads, others without hands or arms; others still are burned away except the large bones of the trunk, the bones either calcined to snowy whiteness or covered with black charred flesh. In some the bowels alone resisted the fire. The faces of such as are best preserved by water wear a look of fearful horror. The eyes are open and staring, tongues protruding, and hands are clinched in hair or clothing, or held as if to ward off a blow from above. A. Purington, of Buffalo, Agent of the American Express Company, was found to-day. His body was not disfigured, except a slight bruise on the nose. The body was straight and stiff. The remains of John Pickering, of Chicago; C. E. Crain, of Holyoke, Mass.; William Clemens, of Ohio; Mrs. C. Thomas, of Buffalo, are identified by scrape of letters, railroad tickets, and other articles found in their pockets. The body of Miss Minnie Mixer, of Buffalo, is thought to be identified; also that of her brother-in-law, J. L. Barnard, who was traveling with her. Dr. C. A. Griswold, of Fulton, Ill., was brought to the residence of a friend, C. E. Stanley, of this city. He is badly bruised, but will recover. He can tell nothing about how his injuries were received. He was in the first passenger car. His first warning of the affair was a jerk like the starting of a train. The next he knew he was at the bottom of the chasm, though not in the water. He thinks that while falling he surged back upon the seat in front of him, with both hands and in this position he struck the bottom. He does not remember how he got out. He thinks he pulled himself out through a hole broken in the side of the car, and climbed over the débris to the embankment, whence he was taken to a hotel. He saw several others who seemed to be killed instantly. Within five minutes fire broke out in the other cars, and he heard [illegible] "Put out the fire. For God's sake put it out!" [illegible] Many burned, for [illegible] were pinned down by the [illegible] Hunn, the express messenger, [illegible]

The train with the bodies has arrived. They will all be placed in charge of Vanness & Brown, undertakers, who may be addressed by friends of the missing.

THE CORONER'S INQUEST.

MEN AT WORK REMOVING THE DEBRIS—BURNED BODIES RECOVERED—A CORONER'S JURY IMPANELED WITH A JUSTICE OF THE PEACE IN CHARGE—THE EVIDENCE OF A BRAKEMAN—A THRILLING STORY RELATED BY THE CONDUCTOR.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ASHTABULA, Dec. 31.—Before daylight this morning the labor of the men on the débris piled in Ashtabula River, where the Pacific express went down, was resumed; all who could work to advantage, about 125 being employed under direction of the officers of the railroad. A heavy snow-storm prevailed when operations began, but it did not interfere materially with the men's work. Every particle of iron between the stone abutments of the bridge was swept down by the weight of the locomotive and cars, and the huge pieces of metal, twisted and torn, and piled together with the wreck of the train that was not consumed, presented a seemingly inextricable appearance. The state of things has caused the removal of the wreck o'clock P. M., with about 160 passengers, not counting children, on board; witness was in the forward end of the rear car at the time of the accident. Two ladies, one gentleman, and a porter were in that car. He felt the jar, and knew they were off the track and going down. He climbed out through a window, and was immersed in the river. He could not describe the scene. Everything was mingled in inextricable confusion. The fire broke out immediately. Three passengers escaped with the witness from the car, but the porter was burned. The train was running at about 12 miles an hour. It had slowed up for the station, but was going a little faster than usual on account of the storm. The sleeping cars were heated by Baker's apparatus. There were stoves which burned wood in the smoking cars. The cars were lighted by sperm candles. The drawing-room car had nine passengers from Buffalo. The rear car took fire from the heater. It was supposed that there was another passenger train following, and the witness, not being hurt, hastened to notify it of the disaster.

Bernhard Henn, of Buffalo, next testified. He had been a conductor for 16 years. He had been five years on the passenger train. He was questioned closely regarding the number of passengers on the train, and to the number of tickets. He said that 160 left Buffalo, and he thought there must have been 131 on the train at the time of the accident. He was in the smoking car, and heard a man shout, "We're off the track." The car then tipped up, the stove flew past the witness on one side, something else on the other, and soon after he lost consciousness. He was rescued with slight injuries, through the top of the car. He knew nothing of any orders not to put water on the fire. He had stated to persons soon after the accident that 160 persons were on board when the train went down.

Several passengers contradict the conductor, and claim that at least 200 were on the train. They believe the bodies of many are wholly consumed. The inquest was then adjourned till Monday.

THE RAILROAD BRIDGE.

CONTRADICTORY STATEMENTS AS TO THE STRENGTH OF THE STRUCTURE—THE COMPANY'S EXCUSE FOR THEIR DELAY IN RUNNING TRAINS TO THE SCENE OF THE ACCIDENT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ASHTABULA, Ohio, Dec. 31.—Your correspondent has just interviewed a number of Cleveland men, and others, respecting the bridge which went down. Some of them stated positively that Engineer Charles Collins informed them previous to the accident that he did not consider the structure safe, and they had other reasons for believing that competent engineers would have condemned it, had opportunity offered. Mr. Collins denies ever making such assertion. The bridge was built after Amasa Stone's patent, eleven years ago. Labor on the wreck was stopped at dark, and will be resumed on Monday morning. The river will be dragged for bodies as soon as it is sufficiently clear. It is possible that some have been carried under the ice by the current, into Lake Erie. Judson Martin and his two children, on the train en route to Chicago, and supposed to have been burned, have been found at Ashtabula. Several of Mr. Martin's ribs are broken, and his children badly bruised. None of the injured persons here died to-day, but several lie in a precarious condition, and it is thought that Mrs. Mary Frame, of Rochester, N. Y., who was on the way to visit friends in Cleveland, will scarcely live through the night. The railroad officials state in excuse for their delay in running trams to the scene after the accident that it was supposed no one desired to go to Ashtabula to see friends among the injured, as no one had made such request at the offices of the company, and believing that the passengers were mainly going through it was thought they could wait in Cleveland and Buffalo just as well as at Ashtabula, where they would be delayed in being transferred.

INCIDENTS OF THE DISASTER.

THE HORRORS OF THE SITUATION—THE NUMBER ALL TOLD IN THE TRAIN—THE DEAD TO BE KEPT TILL IDENTIFIED—SOME OF THOSE WHO ESCAPED—THE FIRE DEPARTMENT NOT PERMITTED TO THROW WATER ON THE BURNING MASS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ASHTABULA, Dec. 31.—The train was well filled, and the estimates put the number all told at about 150, only some 75 or 80 of whom escaped. The citizens worked with a will, some going into the middle of the river in the severe cold and bitter storm. The living are distributed about the village, and are cared for in both private and public houses. The ruins are a network of iron in every shape, mixed with clothing, express matter, &c., partially burned. The work of getting out the bodies is of course slow in the absence of a derrick for lifting the wrecks. The bodies are generally badly burned, and but few are recognizable. Some 35 were gotten out during yesterday. None were identified, though three or four from this place were supposed to be among them. George Kepter, of the Erie store, is one of the lost, and A. H. Stockwell, tobacco dealer, is also supposed to be another, and one or two others. Probably some of those who were taken out alive died on the way to places of shelter. The disabled from one side of the fire had to be carried up the steep and rugged bank covered with deep snow, and from the other up a seventy-foot flight of steps with uncertain tread. Physicians from this and adjoining towns are here, and help is extended to all in need. Among those found was a young man taken from the water, with a light ruddy complexion, fine features, black hair, prominent Grecian nose, with a ring on a finger of the left hand.

To-day the number of people here is much increased, and the removal of the débris is facilitated by the use of a team upon the ice. Perrington, the express messenger, has been taken out. Gartwood Stowe, of Geneva, Ohio, and a gang of road hands from the same place, are known to have been on the train, and are missing. The remains, as fast as found, are put into boxes and removed to a station building, where an inquest is being held. The weather will not require hasty burial, and time will no doubt be given for friends to come on and, as far possible, identify the dead.

The cause of the calamity is not very clear. The bridge was built by the company some eleven years back, after a pattern by Mr. Amasa Stone, Jr. The two engines, linked together, brought a very heavy weight to bear upon it, perhaps of not less than eighty tons. Among the saved was the newsboy George Covy, who escaped with a slight bruise. From him it is learned that the train was a full one. One of the passengers at the Fisk House stated that in passing through four of the cars at Buffalo he found them full. Daniel McGuire is the name of the engineer who saved his engine. Folsom, the driver of the engine which went down, was severely injured, but has been taken to his home in Cleveland. J. M. Martin, of East Avon, N. Y., had three ribs broken. His wife was badly hurt, but is expected to recover. His son was severely and his daughter slightly injured. Mrs. Martin gave birth to a child last Saturday morning, which will probably live. The number of adult passengers reported by the company officials is 171, besides children and train men. The following is a list of the dead that have been identified up to 2 o'clock P. M. to-day:

Isaac Myers, and his daughter Birdie Myers, aged 7 years, of No. 12 Charles street, Cleveland.

Mrs. George, of No. 126 Brownell street, Cleveland, her child, Mattie George, and her grandchild.

Mrs. Gary, of Cleveland.

A body supposed to be that of Dr. Washburn, of Cleveland.

Mrs. G. E. Palmer, of Binghamton, N. Y.

J. D. Pickering, of Chicago.

Lucy C. Thomas, of No. 419 South Division street, Buffalo.

L. W. Hart, of Warren, or Akron, Ohio.

A male body with an envelope from the Nation Paper Company, Holyoke, Mass., addressed to L. C. Crain.

A body supposed to be that of Mrs. E. C. Cook, of Wellington, Ohio.

A body of a man from Bellevue, whose name is not yet known.

The American Express messenger, G. A. Parington. This body was taken from the wreck Sunday morning, badly mutilated, but only slightly burned.

The American and the United States Express Companies' safes were removed on Saturday all right. All the live stock and perishable freight bound east will be forwarded immediately from Ashtabula via the Franklin Division of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad to Jamestown, Penn., and from there on the Erie and Pittsburg Road to Girard, Penn., to the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern again. Other freight will follow. All regular passenger trains have been abandoned. Division Superintendent Couch says that regular passenger trains will be running 12 hours after the snow-storm abates. It is now almost impossible to put trains through the snow. Four locomotives were required to draw two cars on the Buffalo Division last evening. It has just stopped snowing. The débris is now about half removed.

Reports are in circulation that Mayor Hepburn ordered the Chief Engineer of the Fire Department not to throw water on the burning wreck. Such are not the facts. The Mayor left the whole charge of the Fire Department under the control of Chief Engineer Knapp, and the Mayor devoted all of his time to helping the wounded, and finding places for them, and has been at work ever since, night and day, taking care of these unfortunates. There is great indignation, however, over the fact that the Fire Department was not permitted to throw water on the wreck after the cars took fire. There is no doubt that many lives could have been saved had water been thrown. The poor sufferers could be seen rising up in the flames and crying for help, and nothing but water could save them. The Fire Department, consisting of two hand-engines, one steamer, and a hook and ladder company, were promptly on the spot, and were ready to go to work; but, it is said, they were ordered not to throw any water. The Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Company have a very powerful steam-pump located within 100 feet of the wreck, and water could easily have been thrown on the fire, but not a drop was thrown.

The Case Avenue Bridge at Cleveland, is now being removed to this place. It is a Howe truss, and will be ready for trains on Thursday or Friday. A few pieces of charred remains were picked up this afternoon, which is all that has been discovered since the American Express Company's messenger was found. One of the injured passengers who has been at the Union Hotel complains of having been robbed of over $200. One of the ladies as she was climbing from the wreck fell on her babe which she was carrying, and killed it instantly.

PARTIAL LIST OF THE DEAD.

THIRTY-SIX BODIES RECOVERED FROM THE RUINS—NINETEEN BELIEVED TO BE IDENTIFIED—THE CHARRED AND BLACKENED REMAINS.

ASHTABULA, Dec. 31.—During the entire day over 100 men have continued the labor of clearing away the débris of the wrecked train and bridge in the Ashtabula River. Only two more bodies and some unrecognizable burned pieces of flesh have been recovered. The belief is gaining ground that many of the passengers were totally or almost wholly consumed. Intense excitement prevails, and scores of persons have arrived here from the East and West in search of information regarding missing friends, but little satisfaction can be given them. Telegrams are also being constantly received asking for news of absent ones. The boxes in the freight-house containing the bodies were numbered to-day, and white paper labels placed on those that have been identified. There are 36 bodies or masses of charred and blackened flesh in the building. Of these the following are supposed to be identified:

Mrs. E. Cook, of Wellington, Ontario.

Maggie L. Lewis, St. Louis, Mo.

Lucy C. Thomas, Buffalo, N. Y.

Mrs. G. E. Palmer, Binghamton, N. Y.

Isaac Meyer, Cleveland, Ohio.

Birdie Meyer, Cleveland, Ohio.

L. D. Waite, Buffalo, N. Y.

Clarence Gage, Charleston, Ill.

M. P. Cogswell, Chicago.

L. W. Hart, Akron, Ohio.

Dr. A. H. Washburn, Cleveland.

L. J. Barnard, Buffalo, N. Y.

Miss Minnie Mixer, Buffalo.

Mrs. George, Matron of Huron Street Hospital, Cleveland.

Robert Stindel, New-York City.

Mattie George, Cleveland.

George A. Perrington, Express Messenger, Buffalo.

John Pickering, Chicago.

William Clems, Bellevue, Ohio.

LATEST CORRECTED LIST OF INJURED.

The following is the very latest complete and corrected list of the injured:

A. E. Hewitt, of Bridgeport, Conn., slightly.

J. C. Earl, General Agent of the Anchor Line of ocean steamers, of Chicago, slightly.

Mrs. Anna Graham, of New-York, slightly.

John J. White, of Boston, leg broken.

Mrs. William H. Bradley, of Chicago, slightly.

C. DeMaronville, of Albany, head and stomach.

Mrs. Minerva Bingham, of Chicago, left leg broken and back badly hurt.

William B. Sanderson, of Maine, slightly.

A. Burnham, of Milwaukee, slightly.

Mrs. W. H. Low, of Rochester, fell head first through a car window, but was only slightly injured.

J. B. Hazleton, of Charleston, Ill., probably fatally.

Victor Nusbaum, of Cleveland, fatally.

Miss Mary Frame, of Rochester, probably fatally; one of her children was with her and killed, and the other may have been.

C. E. Jones, of Beloit, Wis., slightly.

J. M. Martin, of East Avon, ribs broken.

Peter Levenbroe, fireman, slightly.

John J. Lalor, of Chicago, slightly.

F. Osborn, of Tecumseh, Mich., burt on head, back, and shoulders. [His brother, Richard, was on the train and is supposed to be killed.]

Richard Harrold, of Cincinnati, slightly, on hip, back, and ankle.

A. Maillard, of California, back and head.

Dr. C. A. Grisworld, of Fulton, Ill., head, not seriously.

Dr. H. Clark, of Wakefield, Mass., ribs fractured and nose broken.

F. A. Ormsby, of Boston, slightly.

C. H. Tyler, of St. Louis, hand broken.

R. Austin, of Chicago, burned.

Alexander Morris, of Somerville, Mass, leg broken.

Walter Hayes, Lexington, Ky., dangerously.

J. W. Loodell, Troy, N. Y., internal and probably fatal.

Charles S. Carter, Brooklyn, N. Y., slightly on back and hip.

W. H. Vosburgh, of Buffalo, ribs broken.

Mrs. G. A. Davis, of Kokomo, Ind.

H. Tilden, General Superintendent of Waterworks of the Lake Shore Road, badly hurt on hip and shoulder.

Alexander Monroe, Somerville, Mass., leg broken and severe contusions on skull.

A. Maillard, San Rafael, Cal., on back and head, but not seriously.

H. T. Tomlinson, Bridgeport, Conn., arm and leg.

G. M. Read, Cleveland, Ohio, injuries not given.

C. N. Cage, Charleston Ill., fatal injuries since dead.

Thomas Jackson, Waterbary, Conn., back and head.

Louis Bouhalay, Kent's Plains, Conn., in hip and head severely.

Charles C. Richard, Biddeford, Me., arm, head, and leg.

P. B. Lewyllins Parker, Illinois, head severely.

J. E. Burchill, Chicago, slightly.

D. L. Brewster, Mittwaukee, slightly.

Edward Trueworthy, Oakland, Cal., ribs broken and head cut and bruised. [His mother, Mrs. Emeline Trueworthy, and his sister, Mrs. Emma Coffin, were on the train, and are believed to be dead.

H. D. Champlain, Cleveland, legs hurt.

Bernard Sawyer, Chesterfield, Essex County, N. Y., head hurt and internally.

Henry A. White, Wethersfield, Conn., back and head.

George A. White, Portland, Me., slightly.

Alexander Hitchcock, Port Clinton, Ohio, severely on head and legs.

Mr. and Mrs. Swift, North Adams, Mass., slightly.

Mrs. Frank Eastman, Rochester, N. Y., probably fatally.

Frank L. Collor, Elmira, N. Y., dangerously injured in spine and hip.

Thomas C. Wright, Nashville, Tenn., hip slightly.

Charles Patterson, residence unknown, probably fatally.

J. M. Mowry, Hartford, Conn., ribs broken, badly cut on head, and other injuries.

THE UNINJURED.

B. B. Lyons, of New-York.

R. S. McGee, residence unknown.

Mrs. F. A. Davis, of Indianapolis.

Miss Marion Sheppard, of Wisconsin.

B. Henn, the train conductor.

THE NEW-YORK PASSENGERS.

Among the passengers on the train were two who resided in this City, Mrs. Anna J. Graham and Mr. Barrow B. Lyons. Mr. Victor Nusbaum was reported as residing in this City, one report being to the effect that he was a brother of Mrs. Augusta Nusbaum, of No. 329 East Forty-ninth street, and another that he was the son of Mr. Abraham Nussbaum, of No. 407 East Fifteth street, but inquiry yesterday showed that he was not connected with either family, and no information could be obtained showing that he was a resident of this City. He was reported fatally injured. Mrs. Graham, who resides at No. 233 West Thirty-fourth street, was expected home last evening, but her family yesterday morning received a telegram from her that the train would be so delayed on account of the snow that she would not arrive in New-York before this evening. She sends word that she was only slightly injured. Mr. Lyons is the son of Dr. F. A. Lyons, and resides with him at No. 263 West Forty-ninth street. Mr. Lyons received a telegram from his son on Friday night saying that he had escaped unhurted, and yesterday morning he received a second telegram, saying that the trains were snow-bound, and that he would probably not arrive home before to-night or to-morrow morning.

Among those injured is Mr. Charles S. Carter, of No. 168 Sixth avenue, Brooklyn. Mr. Carter is a member of the law firm of Kneeland & Carter, of No. 320 Broadway, in this City. He was on his way to Toledo to attend to a bankruptcy case which was to have came up in court in that city on Saturday morning. Mr. Carter represented the interests of the Eastern creditors of the bankrupt firm, and had in his possession the necessary power of attorney to enable him to vote in their interest on any motion which might come up in court. His wife stated last night that she had heard nothing from her husband since Saturday morning, and that she knew nothing of his accident beyond the nature of his injuries, except what had already been published in the papers. She heard, however, that he had not been able to proceed to Toledo.

A reporter of THE TIMES last evening visited the residence of Mr. Henry W. Shepard, one of the injured, who resides at 24 Lewis street, Greenpoint, and learned from his wife that his injuries were of so serious a nature that his right foot had to be amputated. The operation was performed on Saturday afternoon, and since that time he has been stopping at the residence of Mr. Kepler, in Ashtabula, where he will probably remain until he has recovered sufficiently to return home. Mr. Shepard was connected with the Iron-clad Manufacturing Company of Greenpoint, and is about 37 years old. He left home on Thursday evening for Chicago, where he had some business to attend to, expecting to be gone about a week. The dispatches that have been received regarding his injuries are contradictory, some saying that his leg was broken, and others that he had merely received a fracture of the ankle. The last of these received by his wife last night, stated that he had passed a very good night and was in a fair way to recover rapidly.

BUFFALO VICTIMS.

The Buffalo Commercial Advertiser says: "The messenger in charge of the American Express matter, George A. Parington, is said to be among the killed, not having been seen at the last accounts. Mr. Parington had been almost a lifelong resident of Buffalo. He was formerly engaged in the business of cabinet-making, but had for some years been in the employ of the express company as messenger. He lived at No. 540 Seventh street. He had three children, a son and two daughters, one of them being the wife of Mr. James W. Watson, the other unmarried. William H. Vosburgh, brakeman, is also put down among the killed. He lived in this city, at No. 269 East Seneca street."

Among the passengers was Miss Minnie Mixer, daughter of Dr. S. F. Mixer, of Buffalo, and concerning her the Commercial Advertiser says: "A young lady, well known and universally admired in society here, one of the brightest and most beautiful and accomplished among the belles of Buffalo, was a passenger upon the Lake Shore train which left this city yesterday noon, to meet destruction last evening. With the brightest anticipations of pleasure, she was on the way to Chicago, expecting to spend the Winter with cherished friends in that gay city. Her estimable parents are almost distracted. Before she started, they had only feared that her visit might prove too full of social enjoyment. At an hour before this noon they had not heard one word from or in regard to her, and had hardly a vestige of hope as to her safety, when we sent them a dispatch, at that moment received at the Commercial office, stating that most of the passengers in the sleeping-coaches had been saved. A thousand earnest prayers will be made, when this is read, that Minnie Mixer may be found among those who have been providentially rescued from the very jaws of death."

THE INJURED FROM ROCHESTER.

The Rochester Express of Saturday evening, says: "Several people from this city were aboard the unfortunate train, and one woman, sad to relate, was so injured that she cannot recover. The name of the woman who is fatally wounded is Mrs. Mary Frame, who resided on Saxton street, in this city, and was on her way west to visit relatives. Telegrams were sent to her family saying that she could not to any probability recover. Mrs. Frame is the wife of Joseph Frame, a machinist, and the daughter of Alexander Smith, an old citizen of Rochester. She is badly burned, and is also suffering from a severe scalp-wound. Among the wounded is Mrs. Low, wife of Mr. William Low, traveling agent for Brooks & Reynolds, shoe manufacturers, of this city. She had been visiting at the house of Mrs. B. Frank Enos for several days, and started yesterday morning for Bloomington, Ill., to visit her mother. Mr. Enos received a telegram from her at midnight, last night stating that she was not seriously hurt. Another of the wounded from this city was Harry L. Brewster, a broker, of Milwaukee, and a son-in-law of Junius Judson, Esq., of this city. He left his home yesterday morning, and has telegraphed to Mr. Judson that he is somewhat injured about the legs, though not seriously. In the list of wounded we also find the names of J. W. Martin, wife, and mother, of East Avon, Livingston County, who are all reported to be fatally injured.

WHAT MR. WILLIAM H. VANDERBILT KNOWS ABOUT THE DISASTER.

At a late hour yesterday afternoon, Mr. William H. Vanderbilt, Vice President of the Lake Shore Road, told a TIMES reporter that he had not received any later information from the scene of the accident than that contained in the morning papers. He said that Mr. Charles Collins, the Chief Engineer, Mr. John Newell, General Manager, and Mr. Charles Paine, Superintendent of the road, had all hurried to the spot so soon as they were informed of what had occurred, and had taken every measure to provide for the wounded passengers. When he was notified of the accident he had at once telegraphed to those gentlemen not to spare any means to promote the comfort of the wounded, and to secure the best of care and medical aid. In point of fact, however, all that could be done in that respect had been done long before his telegram reached them, because of the standing instructions, in regard to such matters, which had long been in force on the road. As yet, Mr. Vanderbilt said, the Chief Engineer had made no report in regard to the cause of the disaster, and he himself, of course, had no idea as to what had occasioned the breaking of the bridge. It was generally supposed, however, that the the railroads of this country that the structures on the Lake Shore Railroad were second to none in any respect, all the masonry and iron-work being of the very best description. Mr. Charles Collins, the Engineer in Chief, was a gentleman who had much experience in all matters connected with his profession, and had a reputation throughout the country as being most competent and capable in everything pertaining to his business. Passengers going West, Mr. Vanderbilt said, would not be detained, as all trains would leave the Grand Central Depot on time, arrangements having been made to forward them via the Canada Southern and Great Western Roads. The local business would also be fully taken care of, and there was no need to fear any detention on any part of the line. Repairs would be immediately commenced on the bridge, and he thought that it would be ready for the passage of trains within a week from to-day.

COME TO A STOP AT DRAWBRIDGES.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The recent calamity in Brooklyn having aroused people to a sense of the danger to which they are exposed from fire in places of resort, it seems appropriate to call attention to an unsuspected chance of disaster in another direction, which may possibly result in loss of life frightful to contemplate.

The undersigned were passengers on the 1st of December on the Harlem Railroad accommodation train, leaving the Grand Central Depot at 7:45 A. M. As we approached the drawbridge at Harlem River at a slow pace—the train having stopped at Harlem—the whistle sounded "down brakes." We came to a sudden stop, and the following conditions were disclosed: The train was on the trestlework save half of the rear car, and the locomotive within as it seemed, 25 to 50 feet of the draw, which was being swung open to admit the passage of a steamtug. Our escape was most narrow. An express train under like conditions must inevitably have plunged into the river, repeating the Norwalk catastrophe.

The Superintendent of the New-York and Harlem Railroad it appears was promptly notified of the occurrence by his subordinates, and set to work at once to ascertain why the signal failed to do its duty on the occasion. He has most politely explained to us the reason, and also the new signal appliances since adopted, with a view to prevent a possible chance of disaster at this point. Nevertheless, admirable as these precautions seem, there yet remains one which can cover all possibilities, and reassure the great traveling public: a return to the usage observed, we think, for years in the State of Connecticut, whereby all trains are brought to a stop before crossing drawbridges.

THE VERMONT RAILWAY ACCIDENT.

WONDERFUL ESCAPE FROM A FEARFUL LOSS OF LIFE AT PITTSFORD—INCIDENTS OF THE DISASTER.

The Rutland (Vt.) Herald, of Saturday, gives the following account of the railroad accident near that place on Friday night: "The night express train from Montreal, under charge of Conductor Bowtell, due at Rutland at 10 o'clock last evening, met with an accident which might have been, in its results, one of the most terrible on record in this vicinity. The train, consisting of the locomotive General Strong (Moses Pratt, engineer, and Charles Dewey, fireman,) a passenger car, the sleeping car 'Plattsburgh' and a baggage car, left Pittsford about an hour late, and when on the bridge across Otter Creek, one mile south of Pittsford, the locomotive left the rails some way, soon breaking through the bridge, (which is about 150 feet long,) and tearing down the entire structure. The locomotive, cars, and bridge all went down together in one horrible pile. Strange to say no one was killed; to view the wreck it is perfectly unaccountable why all the passengers were not killed. Many were bruised and cut, but only two persons were hurt much, Capt. Ford, of Montreal, being injured in the back, and Mrs. Chambers, of Binghamton, in the head. This lady was traveling with a babe only three months old, who did not get a scratch even. Will Darley, of Ludlow, was cut some. Several of the parties who went to Pittsford yesterday for a sleigh-ride took the train at that place to return. Mr. and Mrs. Stevens were injured slightly. Mr. Stevens spraining his arm. Mr. E. D. Keyes had one of his legs badly bruised, and it was badly lame, but we think they had reason to be. There were 30 or 40 passengers on the train. Conductor Bowtell says he never saw better behaved people. In the awful suspense following the crash, mothers were calling for their children, and children for their mothers, husbands for their wives, and wives for their husbands, as they were generally mixed up in the rolling and tumbling of the cars, but after a few moments, when it was found that no one was seriously hurt, a feeling of thanksgiving pervaded all at their wonderful escape. The demolished bridge and train is the worst-looking wreck that has ever occurred on this railroad when we say that they never saw anything equal to it. Engineer Pratt, Fireman Dewey, Conductor Bowtell, Baggagemaster Leonard, and Brakeman Snow received some cuts, but are all right. The passengers were sent to the depot at Pittsford and to the Otter Creek House, and telegrams were sent to Rutland for another train. Superintendent Burdett made up a train, and accompanied by Roadmaster Horner, Master Car-builder McIntyre, Train Dispatcher Crandall, and Conductor Wilder, with a gang of men, left for the wreck at about 12:30 A. M. The passengers, mails, and baggage were taken on board and brought to Rutland, where they arrived at about 2:30 this morning. Capt. Ford, of Montreal, and Mrs. Chambers, of Binghamton, are now at the Bardwell House, and the rest of the passengers bound south proceeded on their journey. Passengers, baggage, and mails will have to be carried around the break for some days."

OTHER RAILROAD ACCIDENTS.

SOME OF THE MELANCHOLY DISASTERS IN FORMER YEARS—HOW THEY OCCURRED —NUMBERS OF THE KILLED AND THE WOUNDED.

The chapter of railroad disasters in this and other countries is a long and melancholy one. The Philadelphia Telegraph thus groups some of the most remarkable and disastrous:

THE ANGOLA ACCIDENT.

On the 17th of December, 1867, an awful accident occurred on the Lake Shore Road, the same which is the scene of the latest addition to the history of railway horrors. On the day named, about 12:45 of the afternoon, the New-York express from Cleveland, when about a quarter of a mile east of Angola Station, and at a locality known as Big Sisters Bridge, left the track, and two passenger cars plunged over an embankment 50 feet in height. Subsequent investigation showed that a rail had been snapped by the frost. The cars which went over the embankment, after being crushed at the bottom of the chasm, were set on fire, and out of the 50 only two passengers escaped from them. It was many days before the exact number of the casualties at Angola could be determined, for numbers of the victims were burned out of all semblance to humanity, and others were buried in the waters of the Big Sisters Creek. It was finally ascertained that 70 people had been crushed, burned, and drowned, and 40 persons more or less injured.

THE NORWALK ACCIDENT.

An awful accident occurred on the New-York and New-Haven Railroad, at Norwalk, on the 6th of May, 1853. The road crosses a small inlet of Long Island Sound, at Norwalk, by means of a drawbridge, which is approached from the New-York direction around a sharp curve. A ball at a masthead was the signal at this time that the draw was open. The express train for Boston approached the bridge about 8 o'clock in the morning of the day named, being run not by its regular engineer, but by a substitute, who apparently wholly neglected to look for the draw signal. The draw was open, and the ball up as it should have been, but the express steadily made for the fatal opening unconscious of danger. The draw was 60 feet in width, and although the peril had been discovered and the speed slackened before reaching it, the impetus of the train was still so great that the engine was driven clean across the abyss, striking on the opposite abutment and falling into the water. The passenger cars were piled into the chasm, which was, including the depth of water, about 24 feet deep. The horrors of this accident at Norwalk have probably never been surpassed by any railway casualty. Forty-six persons were killed, and 30 others were severely injured. The disaster was due not only to a careless or ignorant engineer, but to the use of a crude and inadequate system of signals. All trains in Connecticut have now to come to a dead standstill before entering upon any bridge in which there is a draw.

THE DES JARDINES CANAL ACCIDENT.

On the 17th of March, 1857, as the local accommodation train from Hamilton, Canada, on the Great Western Railway, was nearing the bridge over the Des Jardines Canal, the locomotive was thrown from the track upon the timbers of the bridge. It broke through that structure, and carried with it the whole train, embracing tender, baggage-car, and two passenger cars. There was nothing whatever to break the fall of 60 feet, and when the surface of the canal was reached, there was on y two feet of ice intervening between the wreck of the train and the bottom of the canal, 18 feet below. The locomotive and tender crushed through the ice and sank out of sight, but the remainder of the train was thrown to one side on the ice, and only partially broke through it. Notwithstanding the great distance that the train fell, the three persons that went down with the baggage car only one was seriously injured. But the engineer and firemen were found crushed under the locomotive at the bottom of the canal, and of the 90 persons on the train 60 perished, and included in the victims were every woman and child among the passengers, with a single exception.

THE NEW-HAMBURG DISASTER.

On the night of the 6th of February, 1871, a freight train was going south on the Hudson River Railroad, all hands in charge except the enginemen sheltering themselves from a storm in the "caboose." When near a bridge over Wappinger's Creek, not far from New-Hamburg, it was discovered that a car in the centre of the train was off the track. The train was finally stopped on the bridge, but not until a portion of it had been thrown upon the up track. The disabled train had been hardly brought to a standstill before the Pacific express from New-York came thundering along. The collision an instant after was terrific. The contents of an oil car were ignited and flung in every direction, and the strain being too severe for the trestle-work, it gave way, precipitating the locomotive, tender, baggage car, and passenger car on to the ice, through which they crushed and sank out of sight beneath the water. Twenty-one persons lost their lives in this disaster, and a large number of others were injured. The heroism of the engineer of the passenger train made a deep impression upon the public. This man, whose name was Simmons—familiarly known as "Dee" Simmons by his associates—refused to jump from the cab and save his life, as he was hurriedly urged by the fireman to do. He met the crash firmly, with his hand on the lever, determining till the last to stop the engine or go down with it. The fireman, who escaped by leaping off, deposed at the inquest that when the engineer was urged to secure his safety: "Dee, looked at me, but made no reply, and then looked ahead again, minding his business." "Dee" Simmons has given many a heart a thrill, and his fortitude will not soon be forgotten.

OTHER RAILWAY DISASTERS.

In November, 1833, a train on the old Camden and Amboy Railroad, near Hightstown, N. J., met with an accident caused by one of the old-fashioned English coaches then in use slipping from the track. Of 16 persons in two of the cars that were overturned, only one escaped unhurt, but only two deaths resulted. John Quincy Adams was a passenger on this train, but escaped unhurt.

On May 8, 1842, at Versailles, France, the axle of the foremost of two locomotives drawing a densely-crowded train broke. Several of the coaches were piled up in a mass, when they took fire, and 53 persons perished in the shock and flames together, while more than 40 others were injured.

In October, 1854, a train on the Great Western Railway of Canada, when approaching Detroit, ran into a gravel train, thrown down an embankment, and two of the cars telescoped. These two cars were filled with emigrants, and all their occupants were either killed or injured. In all, 47 persons were killed and 60 others injured.

On July 17, 1856, an accident occurred near Station, well known as Carroll, on the North Pennsylvania Railroad, about 12 miles from Philadelphia, which made a great local impression. The train was carrying some 1,100 children who had gone out on a Sunday-school picnic in charge of their teachers and friends. The road had but a single track, and the train, being heavy, was delayed. The conductor taught that the next station could be reached in time to meet and pass a regular train coming toward him. This was a fatally mistaken calculation, and the excursion train collided with terrific force with an express train bound for Philadelphia. The excursion train was "telescoped," and the children in three cars were crushed, the succeeding cars were driven on to this mass and the whole was set on fire by ruins of the locomotives. Nothing could be said in excuse or extenuation of this accident, and it has gone into history as one of the most causeless as it was one of the most horrible of railway disasters. Sixty-five innocent children perished, and scores were injured. The engineer and conductor of the excursion-train committed suicide when the results of his recklessness had been made apparent.

On June 17, 1858, on the Erie Railway, near Port Jervis, N. Y., a train was thrown from the track by a broken rail, and rolled down an embankment, six persons being killed and 50 others severely injured.

On Sept. 4, 1860, at Helmshere, near Manchester, England, a portion of a train broke away and slipped down an incline, when it was run into by another train, 10 persons being killed and 22 others injured.

In June, 1868, on the Erie Railway, at Car's Rock, near Port Jervis, N. Y., a broken rail threw a train from the track, and it rolled down a steep declivity, jagged with rocks and boulders, a distance of 80 feet, 24 persons being killed and 50 injured.

On August 20, 1868, at Abergele, on the London and North-Western Railway, England, a number of cars were started down an incline and came into collision with the Irish Mail. Several of the carriages caught fire and every person in them perished, 33 persons being burned beyond recognition.

On June 21, 1870, a collision occurred on the Great Northern Railway of England, at Claybridge Lane, between a passenger and a goods train, through the breaking of an axle, by which 18 persons were killed and more than 50 others injured.

On Aug. 26, 1871, a collision occurred in front of the railroad station at Revere, Mass., resulting in the death of 29 persons and injuries to 50 others.

On Dec. 24, 1871, a train on the Great Western Railway of England ran into a landslide while moving through a fog at a high rate of speed, eight passengers being killed and 17 others injured.

On Sept. 10, 1874, a collision took place at Thorpe, on the Great Western Railway of England, caused by carelessness on the part of the telegraph operators. Altogether 25 deaths resulted, and 50 persons were injured.

On Dec. 24, 1874, at Shipton-on-Cherwell, on the line of the Great Western Railway of England, 34 passengers were killed, and 65 others, besides 4 employés of the company, were injured. There were nearly 300 passengers on board. The accident was caused by the breaking of the tire of one of the wheels of the passenger coach next to the two locomotives which drew the train.

In January, 1876, a train near Odessa, Russia, conveying 419 conscripts, ran off the track and rolled down an embankment. Piled one upon another, the carriages took fire, and, though only three persons had been killed on the spot, 63 were burned to death. In addition, 54 of the recruits were badly burned or wounded; so that the total number of victims was 120.

On Jan. 31, 1870, a triple collision occured during a heavy snow-storm at Abbot's Kipton, England, by which 18 persons were killed and about 20 others injured.

On March 17, 1876, an arch of a railway bridge over the River Iii, near Lutterbach, France, gave way under the pressure of a train. A passenger train from Mulhouse for Strasburg, which was crossing at the time, was precipitated into the river. The carriages fell on top of one another and were dashed to pieces. Owing to the violence of the stream none of the passengers could be saved; all being either crushed to death or drowned. The number of deaths by this accident was very large, 30 dead bodies being recovered on the day it occurred.

THE BURNED RICHMOND THEATRE.

The subjoined account of the burning of the Richmond Theatre on the night of the 26th of December, 1811, was published in the Richmond Standard the following day:

"Last night the play-houses in this city was crowded with a usual audience. There could not have been less than 630 persons in the house. Just before the conclusion of the play, the scenery caught fire, and in a few minutes the whole building was wrapped in flames. It is already ascertained that sixty-two persons were devoured by that most terrific element. The editor of this paper was in the house when the ever-to-be-remembered deplorable accident occurred. He is informed that the scenery took fire in the back part of the house by the raising of a chandelier; that the boy, who was ordered by one of the players to raise it, stated that if he did so the scenery would take fire, when he was commanded in a peremptory manner to hoist it. The boy obeyed, and the fire instantly communicated to the scenery. He gave the alarm in the rear of the stage, and requested some of the attendants to cut the cords by which the combustible materials were suspended. The person whose duty it was to perform this became panic-struck, and sought his own safety. This unfortunately happened at a time when one of the performers was playing near the orchestra, and the greatest part of the stage, with its horrid danger, was obscured from the audience by a curtain.

The names spread with almost the rapidity of lightning, and the fire falling from the ceiling upon the performers was the first notice the audience had of their danger. Even then many supposed it a part of the play, and were a little time restrained from flight by a cry from the stage that there was no danger. The performers and their attendants in vain endeavored to tear down the scenery; the fire flashed in every part of the house with a rapidity horrible and astonishing; and, alas, gushing tears and unspeakable anguish deprive me of utterance. No person who was not present can form any idea of this unexampled scene of distress. The editor, having none of his family with him, and not being far from the door, was among the first who escaped.

No words can express his horror when, turning round, he discovered the whole building to be in flames. There was but one door for the greatest part of the audience to pass; men, women, and children were pressing upon each other, while the flames were seizing upon those behind. The editor went to the different windows, which were very high, and implored his fellow-creatures to save their lives by jumping out of them. Those nearest the windows, ignorant of their danger, were afraid to leap down, while those behind, them were seen catching on fire, and writhing in agonies of pain and distress. At length those behind, urged by the pressing flames, pushed those who were nearest to the windows, and people of every description began to fall one upon another some with their clothes on fire, some half roasted. One woman, an officer's people I would to God I could have died a thousand deaths in any shape, could individual suffering have purchased the safety of my friends, my benefactors, of those whom I loved! The editor, with the assistance of others, caught several of those whom he had begged to leap from the windows. One lady jumped out when all of her clothes were on fire. He tore them burning from her, stripped her of her last rag, and, protecting her nakedness with his coat, carried her from the fire. Fathers and mothers were deploring the loss of their children, children the loss of parents; husbands were heard to lament the loss of companions, wives were bemoa

LOCAL MISCELLANY.

THE HEALTH DEPARTMENT.

MORTUARY RECORD OF THE YEAR—DECREASE OF SMALL-POX AND DIPHTHERIA—PRECAUTIONS AGAINST THE SPREAD OF CONTAGIOUS DISEASES—OPERATIONS OF THE SANITARY BUREAU.

The work of the Health Department of this City has been prosecuted during the year 1876 with a great deal of vigor, and with eminently satisfactory results. The number of officials in the Bureau of Vital Statistics has been somewhat reduced, and the collection and analysis of information in that division of the Health Department has lacked the services of Dr. Elisha Harris, the intelligent physician who for so long a time acted as Register. Under Dr. Nagle, the work of arranging the facts and figures for comparative reports has been very carefully and promptly performed, enabling the information contained in this statement to be brought down to the day of publication. The number of deaths from all causes in 1876 was 28,987, as compared with 30,769 in 1875, showing a reduction of 1,722, or about 5.6 per cent. The number of deaths from small-pox in 1876 was but 318, as compared with 1,280 deaths from the same cause in 1875. This gratifying decrease is to be attributed principally to the activity of the vaccinating corps, numbering ordinarily 10 men, but increased when occasion requires to 15 or 25 men. These vaccinators still meet with some opposition from the more ignorant classes of the population, but the resistance to vaccination is rapidly falling off, and in a few years it promises substantially to cease.

The decrease of small-pox has been steady since January last, (in which month there were nearly 100 deaths,) up to November, in which month there were no deaths at all. During the month of December just ended there was but one death, and there are now two cases only in the Riverside Hospital on Blackwell's Island. There was during the year an increase in the number of deaths by scarlatina over 1875 of nearly 70 per cent, the number in 1875 being 514, while that in 1876 was 870. The reasons for this increase are not quite comprehended. In other diseases, whose causes are ascertainable, the efforts of the Health Department have been rewarded with a remarkable degree of success by isolation and the disinfecting of apartments and clothing, but the ravages of scarlatina seem to defy the usual precautions of the health officers. In diphtheria the mortality has been reduced from 2,312 to 1,732 compared with the year 1875. This improvement is ascribable mainly to the efforts of the authorities to secure the better ventilation of tenements, more correct and thorough attention to the exclusion of foul sewer gases from houses, and to the isolation and more reasonable care and nursing of patients afflicted with the dread disease.

While the number of deaths from diarrheal diseases of children under 5 years of age was larger than in 1875, the death rate among children was smaller than it was in 1875, the number in 1875 being 14,839, while in 1876 it was 14,062.

Total deaths from all causes	30,709	28,987
Total zymotic diseases	10,938	9,907
Total constitutional diseases	6,089	6,002
Total local diseases	10,754	10,543
Total developmental diseases	1,762	1,708
Deaths by violence	1,186	1,117

On the basis of a population of 1,068,766, the death rate for the past year was 28.15,in 1,000. Last year, on the basis of 1,060,000 population, it was 28.26 per 1,000. The causes of death in 1875 and 1876 were as follows:

	1875.	1876.
Small-pox	1,280	316
Measles	167	359
Scarlatina	514	870
Diphtheria	2,311	1,732
Membranous croup	758	516
Whooping-cough	407	409
Typhus fever	28	21
Typhoid fever	347	289
Puerperal diseases	370	346
Diarrheal diseases, under 5 years	3,352	3,398
Diarrheal diseases, all ages	3,729	3,761
Alcoholism	165	126
Cancer	462	452
Phthisis pulmonalis	4,172	4,174
Bronchitis	1,111	1,191
Pneumonia	2,802	2,536
Heart diseases	988	901
Marasmus—Tabes mesenterica and scrofula	573	521
Hydrocephalus and tubercular meningitis	598	633
Meningitis and encephalitis	710	708
Convulsions	662	680
Direct effect of solar heat	19	206
Apoplexy	968	859
All diseases of the brain and nervous system	2,432	2,660
Bright's disease and nephritis	1,108	1,124
Deaths in childbirth	157	161
Deaths by drowning	181	200
Deaths in institutions	5,189	5,045
All deaths of persons 70 years old or more	1,729	1,745
Total deaths children under 1 year	8,541	7,112
Total deaths children under 2 years	11,675	10,879
Total deaths children under 5 years	14,839	14,062

The following are the names of those reported as having at death reached the age of 100 or over:

Died.	Name.	Age.	Birth-place.
Jan. 3	Mary Coffee	100	Ireland.
March 6	Catherine Campbell	112	Ireland.
March 11	Martha McGuire	106	Ireland.
Feb. 2	Mary Murphy	100	Ireland.
April 12	Clara Beebe	100	New-York.
May 6	Painaly Jones	106	New-York.
June 17	Dennis Lyons	110	Ireland.
June 25	Mary Ann Banks	100	Ireland.
July 15	Christine Leonard	100	Ireland.
Aug. 28	Margaret Trainor	100	Ireland.
Sept. 10	Barbara Mundorf	100	Germany.
Sept. 30	Dana Price, (colored)	109	New-Jersey.
Oct. 8	Mary Ash	100	Ireland.
Oct. 22	Ann McGraw	101	Ireland.
Oct. 25	Yetta Frankel	103	Germany.

BIRTHS AND MARRIAGES.

There is still some complaint of the lack of attention by parents and nurses to the requirement of the law concerning the registration of births, and it is believed that the returns are still incomplete. Where ignorant midwives are employed the importance of making the written report is frequently overlooked or disregarded, but regular physicians are now exceedingly careful and prompt in making their reports to the Bureau of Vital Statistics. The number of marriages and births during the last three years are as follows.

	Marriages.	Births.
1875	7,565	23,813
1876	6,147	23,962

THE SANITARY BUREAU.

In pursuance of its work of abating nuisances, the Sanitary Bureau has been actively engaged throughout the year in directing the cleaning of alleys, apartments, cellars, cesspools, and other places in which the conditions were prejudicial to life and health. Through this bureau a large number of cases of contagious diseases were reported, and in the exercise of one of its functions it has ordered the destruction of 150,000 pounds of meat and fish at the offal dock, besides condemning 1,600 carcasses of cattle, sheep, and lambs. The condemned food included 9,000 pounds of canned meat, ordered to be destroyed on account of taint. Examinations were made by the bureau to the number of 76,938, and more than 10,000 complaints of nuisances were received at the office of the department. The vaccinating corps in 1875 performed 93,662 vaccinations; in 1876, 55,574, of which number 25,483 were made in asylums, schools, and public institutions. The bureau has been instrumental during the year in securing the arrest, prosecution, and conviction of adulterators of milk. An attempt last Winter to obtain a general law against offensive oil refiners from the Legislature, which was known to be aimed at the Hunter's Point factories, failed for lack of time and through the opposition of the refiners. Attention has been given to the subject of City slaughter-houses. The effort to concentrate the slaughtering business in abattoirs has resulted in the construction of a large building at Fortieth street on the west side, which will probably accommodate all the butchers in that section of the City who are now already provided for by the abattoir at Thirty-fourth street. The Thirty-fourth street building has proved a success in a sanitary if not in a financial point of view. The Sixtieth street abattoir, connected with the drove yards at that point, dispense with the necessity for driving droves of cattle through the streets, but no rendering process is carried on in the building.

SHOOTING AFFRAY IN A BAR-ROOM.

A fight occurred in the lager beer saloon known as the "House of Biazes," No. 418 East Forty-seventh street, last Saturday evening, between Conrad Krebs and Michael Fagan, which subsequently became general. Charles Rose, the landlord, produced a revolver with the intention of quelling the disturbance. During the melée the pistol was discharged, and Thomas Dunn was shot in the right knee. Rose, together with Michael Fagan and Thomas Reilly, were arrested as witnesses and taken to the Fifty-seventh Street Police Court, where Rose was remanded to await the result of the wounded man's injuries. Rose next preferred a charge against Reilly and Fagan for assault and battery, and they were committed to answer. Dunn was taken to Bellevue Hospital, where it was found that he had sustained a compound comminuted fracture of the leg, which will probably render amputation necessary.

ROBBING CONTRIBUTION BOXES.

The American Temperance Union held the last of a series of temperance meetings in the large hall of the Cooper Union yesterday. After the singing of a hymn and the reading of the Scriptures, Mr. T. S. Lambert read a letter from a gentleman who had been asked to join the American Temperance Union, and declined doing so from the fact that he had heard that some of the "brethren" had been "manipulating" the funds contributed to defray the expenses of holding the meetings in Cooper Institute. Dr. Lambert continued: "Some charges have been passed this session for a disclosure made last Sunday by a gentleman to the effect that a 'one dollar bill' deposited in the contribution basket by him failed to reach its destination on the platform, and his was only one of several cases of a similar nature." He thought it was only fair to himself and the officers of the society to state that the society did not receive the money referred to or have the pleasure of counting it. He believed that in passing the basket from person to person "it would not be astonishing if some money should accidentally be lost," and such seemed to be the case in this instance; therefore no blame could be attached to the ushers or the officers of the society.

THE "BLACK CROOK" SEASON.

A LIGHTNING CHANGE OF MANAGERS—AN UNAVAILING SEARCH FOR MONEY IN A BOX-OFFICE.

The "run" of the "Black Crook" at the Grand Opera-house closed on Saturday night, amid the execrations of unpaid actors and dancers, and the chagrin of disappointed Sheriff's officers. The "run" lasted just two weeks. At the expiration of the first the company were paid one-half their salaries, and informed by Messrs. Poole & Donnelly, the managers, that they were not responsible, as they had at the start sub-lessed the theatre to a party by the name of Blaisdell for the production of the "Crook," who would certainly pay them. Last Thursday the company were summoned to the theatre in the afternoon, for the presumed purpose of receiving the balance of their salaries. But the ubiquitous Blaisdell did not make his appearance, nor has he done so since, and Poole & Donnelly continued the piece through the week, assuring the company that it would be "all right." Many of the performers quit at the end of the first week, and the "Black Crook" was left but the ghost of its famous prototype. Some, however, remained, trusting to the word of the managers, and hoping to get a part, if not all, of the money due. On Saturday night two of the principal dancers, who had quit at the end of the first week, attempted to levy on the treasurer's receipts through the aid of the Sheriff, but he arrived too late, as the money had previously been secured and removed. At the close of the performance the "Crook" season was announced as terminated, and the performers, to their intense disgust, received the sum of $2 each in satisfaction of their unpaid salaries.

THE WORK OF MR. BERGH'S SOCIETY.

The annual report of Mr. Henry Bergh, President of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, includes a statement of the number and class of convictions secured by the society during the past year, as follows: Beating horses with clubs, hammers, and other instruments, 64; carrying animals in a cruel manner, 60; working horses with sores on their bodies, chafed by harness, 251; overloading, 30; lame, 181; sick, 15; disabled, 6; worn out, 8; reckless driving, 11; abandoning horses, 10; cruelty to cattle and other animals, 29; dog and cock fighting, 62; using "bit-burr," 1; starving and abandoning animals to die, 7; maliciously killing, with knives and other instruments, 4; dragging diseased horses through the streets, 5; causing and procuring disabled horses to be worked, 33; total, 872. The society's officers also ordered out of harness, and sent to stables or to veterinary surgeons, 1,802 horses and mules for the following causes: Lame, 1,189; sores on body under harness, 355; sick, or without shoes, 138; unfit for further work, 70; overloaded, 50. In these cases the drivers were not arrested, but were cautioned, and medical advice and medicine given. Over 1,000 complaints made by citizens were investigated, and the evils complained of without arrest. The society's ambulances were called into requisition 238 times to remove disabled horses from the streets. The agents were also called upon to destroy animals as follows: Condemned by veterinary surgeon, 230; suffering from glanders and farcy, 203; diseased feet, resulting from picking up nails or travelling through the salted snow in the streets last Winter, 160; broken legs and dislocated limbs, 212; worn out and unfit for further use, 290; lock-jaw, 50; cats, dogs, goats, cows, sheep, and other animals, 1,119; total, 2,264. Seventeen horses were rescued from starvation, having been abandoned in their stables or sheds by their owners. The patent derrick belonging to the society was the means of saving the lives of many valuable horses which had fallen into sewers, excavations, &c.

A MYSTERIOUS DEATH EXPLAINED.

A rumor has been afloat at Great Neck, town of North Hempstead, Long Island, that John Burke, for many years a resident of that place, had caused the death of his wife by administering poison to her. The circumstances, as disclosed by an inquest held by Coroner McKee, indicate that Burke and his wife had been living together since last Summer in a new house built by him on a road leading to the steam-boat landing. On Tuesday last he arose early and prepared to take the boat for this City, leaving his wife in bed. Previous to starting he went to the door and locked the door after him, when she answered that she did not feel well, and he could lock the door from the outside and put the key in at one of the windows, which he did. On his return from New-York in the evening he found the door locked and the key in the place where he had put it. Entering, he saw that the morning was just as he had left it. He called to his wife several times, and receiving no answer, he went up stairs and found her lying dead on the bed. An examination of the brain by Dr. Hoag revealed the presence of a considerable quantity of water, and the jury returned a verdict that the deceased came to her death by congestion of the brain.

CLEVER CAPTURE OF BURGLARS.

Roundsman Mallon and Officer Budd, of the Fifth Precinct Police, while patrolling Broadway yesterday, were notified by a burglar-alarm company that one of their instruments connected with a door in the store of John Kruse, dealer in fancy goods at No. 62 Water street, had sounded an alarm, thus notifying their office that intruders were in the store. A platoon of Police, under command of Capt. Caffry, surrounded the building. The door of the store was burst open, and two notorious burglars, named Thomas Walsh and George Carroll, were discovered in the act of packing up goods preparatory to carrying them away. About $2,000 worth of pearl buttons had already been packed up. The prisoners were arraigned at the Tombs Police Court and remanded back to the station-house for examination. Superintendent Walling is of the opinion that these are the same men who have latterly been committing depredations on various fancy goods dealers in Broadway.

AN UNGRATEFUL FRIEND.

James Kellner, of No. 1,486 Second avenue, made the acquaintance of Simon Lanigan on Saturday night in an up-town liquor saloon, and was invited by the latter to his home, where he slept all night. On waking yesterday morning he discovered that his bedfellow had decamped with his coat, shoes, vest, overcoat, and gold watch, the aggregate value of which was $175. Kellner attired himself in Lanigan's discarded clothes, and related his loss at the Nineteenth Precinct Station-house. Detective Tooker succeeded in arresting the thief, and the latter was arraigned at the Fifty-seventh Street Police Court yesterday, where he admitted his guilt, and was committed to answer in default of $1,500 bail.

A CONCERT SALOON RAIDED.

On Saturday night Officer Handy, of the Sixth Precinct, with a section of Police, raided on the concert saloon at No. 42 Bowery and arrested the proprietor, Andrew Wallen, together with twelve men and eight women who were found in the place. The prisoners were arraigned at the Tombs yesterday, when Judge Duffy held the proprietor in $500 bail to answer, and fined each of the inmates of the place in sums ranging from $5 to $10.

JUDGE E. DARWIN SMITH RETIRES.

The Roohester Express of Dec. 30 says:

"Judge E. Darwin Smith closes 21 years of service on the bench of the Supreme Court to-day, having reached the legally-disqualifying age of 70 years. He has for two years past served in the General Term of the Fourth Department, in the review of cases coming from the circuits, and he submits decisions upon all cases committed to his special charge for the writing of opinions before his official term expires. Judge Smith has been very faithful and assiduous in the performance of his high duties, and no Judge ever held more generally or firmly the respect and confidence of his brethren of the bench and the bar. In his public service, extended through so many years, it has been his lot to hear and decide many cases of great importance to the people, as well as to suitors immediately concerned; his decisions have been sustained by the reviewing courts with singular uniformity. He was the first Supreme Court Judge to decide a case involving the validity of the legal-tender currency issued by the Government during the war, and his decision had an important influence in sustaining the Government and giving confidence to continue the struggle upon the assurance that the sinews of war would be amply supplied by means of that popular and necessary war measure. Though well advanced in years, Judge Smith is in full health and strength and only qualified by judicial experience for continued usefulness. He will resume to some extent the practice of the law, and will no doubt be employed as constantly as he may desire in the hearing of causes referred by the courts.

THE RUSSIAN NORTH PACIFIC FLEET.

The San Francisco Bulletin of Dec. 22 says:

"The North Pacific Squadron of the Russian fleet is concentrating at this port. About a week ago the first of the fleet arrived, and is now at Hunter's Point Dry Dock repairing. Yesterday a second de vessel, the Admiral, entered and anchored quietly in Mission Bay. It is also stated that four other Russian war vessels are here. The object of this concentration of the Russian squadron is unknown. It is surmised that it has some remote relation to possible hostilities between Turkey and Russia. The prisoners were arraigned at the Tombs Police Court and remanded back to the station-house for examination. The presence of the fleet should England side with Turkey in the event of a conflict will be unfavorably met by Englishmen, as the British North Pacific Naval Station, which is comparatively unprotected, and contains an immense quantity of naval stores and ammunition. In view of these facts the Russian fleet could easily beat down upon it, and with very little opposition seize it and its valuable stores."

INFANT MORTALITY IN CALCUTTA.

A correspondent of the Pall-Mall Gazette writes: "A chamber a few feet square, so situated that at the best of times its atmosphere must be close, has every aperture carefully shut. It is crowded with relatives and attendants so that there is often barely room to sit, and a fire of wood-embers, or even charcoal, is burning in an open vessel. The atmosphere is principally smoke, which is increased by herbs scattered on the fire for the purpose. The woman is lying, generally, on the ground, in the midst of this. The feeling on entering the room is that of impending suffocation, and the first step which the visitor takes is to endeavor to breathe. He opens the window, clears the room of as many persons as can be got to leave it, who betake themselves to a balcony outside or block the doorway until his departure. He knows full well that as soon as his back is turned, all will be as it was when he arrived; for it is among the first principles of native midwifery that air should be kept away from a newly-born child. The process of asphyxiation seems to be carried on for a variable period; but in no case, as far as I can ascertain, is the period less than seven days—it often extends to ten, and with Mohammedans much longer; nor does it alter under any extremes of natural heat. The poorer and better-to-do alike are treated by a real artist. It is drawn, however, by a practical, conscientious, painstaking medical practitioner, charged with the responsible duties of Health Officer of the City of Calcutta, whose object was simply to draw the attention of the Indian Government to the appalling mortality among newborn children. Mr. Payne, in the course of his report, says: 'Of every 1,000 Hindoo children born about 1875, there died,' says Dr. Payne, '595 within a year, and of the Mohammedans no fewer than 735, while the annual average of the latter (for eight years) was 598.' In other words, of every 100 Mohammedan children only 27 survived 12 months. 'A native child,' adds Dr. Payne, 'born healthy in the town has a chance of life considerably less than that of a person attacked with cholera.' And yet Indian infants are singularly fortunate in their comparative exemption from the specific fevers which often make such havoc among children in Europe. The true cause of this frightful mortality is to be traced to the circumstances of birth."

THE CALIFORNIA EARTHQUAKES.

The San Francisco Alta of Dec. 21 says: "Seven distinct earthquake shocks—one of them so severe that, according to the local paper, the 'buildings labored like a ship at sea'—visited the town of Silver Mountain, Alpine County, within half an hour in the early evening of the 11th inst., but did no damage. We have no report yet that these shocks were felt elsewhere. Silver Mountain, which has now, so far as we remember, had its first experience of this kind, is about 6,000 feet above the level of the sea, beyond the summit of the Sierra, 150 miles in a direct line eastward from San Francisco, and 200 miles northward from Owen Lake, which last place, on account of the volcanic character of its geological formation and its severe earthquake of March 26, 1872, has the reputation of being rather shaky. From 1851 to 1868 earthquakes were common in this city—so frequent, indeed, that one observer, who made a lengthy report on them to the San Francisco Academy of Sciences, declared that for a considerable period there was more than one a day on an average—and rare in the mountains; but in the last few years the coast from Monterey northward has been comparatively exempt, while the region east of the Sierra, from Owen Lake to Virginia City, has had the most notable visitations, though no one place has had many. Italy, Greece, Asia Minor, and California are all classed as earthquake countries, but the latter is, we doubt not, as secure for its inhabitants generally as the others have been for thousands of years."

NOTICE.

We cannot notice anonymous communications. In all cases we require the writer's name and address, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

We cannot, under any circumstances, return rejected communications, nor can we undertake to preserve manuscripts.

We are able this morning to add considerably to the details of the awful accident on the Lake Shore Road. Our dispatches show what bodies had been identified down to the last moment, and may, therefore, do the sad service of relieving suspense in the minds of friends. But we are compelled to announce that the number of the lost who are definitely known is still very small in comparison with the entire number. One of the most distressing features of the disaster is the fact that very many persons have been wholly consumed, so that it seems only too certain that the extent of the loss of life must rest wholly on circumstantial evidence. Of this the conductor's accounts are the most to be relied on. These fix the number who left Buffalo at 160, and the calculations of the conductor reduce the number who were on the train at the time of the accident to 131. Against this we must set the estimates of passengers, which place the number at much higher figures; but these, we are bound to say, seem to us likely to be greatly exaggerated, because, in the first place, none but the train officials would have any data on which to make a trustworthy estimate, and, in the second place, the notions of the passengers were necessarily formed under great excitement. We may safely conclude that the number of lives lost does not exceed seventy, and may not be over fifty.

Our dispatches, though very full, throw no light, as yet, upon the causes of the bridge giving way. It was a comparatively new bridge, of a well-known and approved kind, which had already stood very severe tests, and which, in all probability, would have been trusted by the most careful experts on any road in this country, or in any country. Yet it gave out under a weight less than it had often borne, and so completely was it wrecked by the breaking, and by the fire afterward, that the opportunity for tracing successfully the causes of its weakness, seem now to be very small. These facts lend an altogether peculiar horror to the disaster, because, apart from the shock which the public mind received from the sudden and great loss of life, there is the sense of previously unknown sources of danger in ordinary travel. For this Winter, at least, and until the public has become forgetful, every storm such as has swept over the country nearly every week during the past month, will carry distress and anxiety to many thousand households. And the impression of such a calamity will not wear off, as did that of the burning of the Brooklyn Theatre, because the surroundings of railway travel always suggest more or less danger to the timid, and to those who are "born to fears." It is to be hoped that some means will be taken, not by the Lake Shore officials only, but by other railway companies in concert with these, to find out, as clearly and fully as possible, why the Ashtabula bridge broke, and how like results can be avoided in the future. Such action, taken promptly and thoroughly, is due to the public, and will be found absolutely necessary to allay general uneasiness as to railroad travel.

It is daily becoming more evident that the blatherskites in the Democratic Party—among whom most people will promptly recognize Mr. HEWITT—are alarming and disgusting the sorberer portion of the party. Mr. HEWITT has been away from Washington a week now, and it is to be hoped that when he returns he will be able to see the drift of public sentiment more clearly than he has done heretofore, and that he will not offend the better judgment of his own party as flagrantly in the future as he has done in the past. It will be remembered that a week ago, no language was too strong for Mr. HEWITT's immediate followers and employes to use in denouncing the action of the Returning Officers in South Carolina. The House Committee are constrained to admit that that action was, so far as the main question is concerned, just and correct. This fact has been a damper on some of the more belligerent Democrats. It has made them feel that it is not exactly safe to take Mr. HEWITT's word, or that of his agents, as gospel truth, and that as they blundered in South Carolina, they may blunder in Louisiana. On the whole, there is ample chance for moderate and sensible men to make themselves felt in Washington the coming week, and we trust that they will not lose the opportunity.

Impolitic as the strike of locomotive engineers on the Grand Trunk Railroad of Canada evidently is, considering the depression and embarrassment under which that concern struggles for existence, there seem to be some justifying circumstances which are not generally understood. The prevailing idea is that the strike is a revolt against the reduction recently announced by the managers, in consequence of the falling off in the company's business. But its real origin is deeper, and dates further back. It seems that nearly two years ago a contract was entered into between the representatives of the company and a committee of engineers, in relation to the grading of pay for the latter class. This contract the company has not adhered to. The engineers, therefore, appointed another committee, consisting of the oldest and best men on the road, to wait upon the manager, who promised compliance with their request for carrying out the agreement. The members of the committee, however, were summarily dismissed for no other reason than that they had served in this capacity, and this arbitrary step the organized engineers resolved to resist. Hence, in good part, the strike which has meanwhile brought the business of the road to a stand-still.

The Economist, of London, points out the reasons why the silver market is likely to be unsteady and is sure to be calculated with difficulty. "First," it remarks, "the uncertain quantity which the German Government may at any time sell hangs over the market; the effect of the increase of 'councils bills' on the Indian demand for silver has still to be fully tested in practice—indeed, it will require years so to test it; the American production is still an unknown quantity, though everything seems to show that it will be much less than it was thought to be; the 'Latin Union' is still in an 'expectant attitude,' and may possibly resume its old policy. Till these causes have ceased to operate as powerfully as they do now, no important stock of silver will be kept. Since the future is too uncertain to justify it, and until it is kept, the price will probably fluctuate a good deal, though not as much as during the past year, when most of the influences that cause variation have been at a maximum, and most of those which cause stability at a minimum." Under these circumstances, the Economist remarks, "it will be desirable that no Government shall involve itself in a currency change, depending on the relative relations of silver and gold, which has not begun one already." This is the view which all persons familiar with the facts must take. We commend it to Senators who are in doubt what to do with the Bland Silver Bill when it reaches the Senate.

For the very moderate price demanded for a single issue of THE TIMES, our readers may have a striking variety in European news this morning. They may learn that the British Ambassador has communicated to the Sultan the terms which Europe is ready to make with him, and that the Sultan has refused them; that Great Britain has thereupon declared that the Sultan must take care of himself, and has ordered its fleet out of Turkish waters to guard against any other impression, and the Sultan has proudly replied that his people and his Army will defend him. On the other hand, they may learn that the Sultan has, through his representatives in the conference, accepted some of the most radical proposals, and the European powers have modified others, whence, says Reuter, "hopes are entertained," &c. Whether the wounds of the "sick man" are to be treated heroically, or whether they are to be salved over, remains, therefore, as uncertain as ever.

Our readers will find in our Albany dispatches this morning some details of the canvass for the Speakership of the Assembly which ought to interest them. The forces which are at work there, in opposition to each other, are those which have been at work in the Republican Party for several years past. On the one hand, the calculating, scheming, ambitious politician; on the other, the straightforward, sincere, and upright Republican; with Mr. HUSTED, the men who live on their party, with Mr. SLOAN, those who serve their party honestly and for right ends. There ought not to be any doubt as to the choice which will be made.

THE NEW YEAR.

Most people have parted from 1876 without regret, and look forward to 1877 with more or less foreboding. The past year has been one of those uncomfortable periods when the nations of the earth—civilized and semi-civilized—have been called on to pay old debts, and when defaults have been disagreeably numerous. What has been true of communities as a whole is applicable to their individual members. Some have just begun to discover how improvidently they had been living on their expectations—consuming what may have appeared to be the proceeds of capital, but which was really the income of a somewhat inflated credit. Others have merely found the year another interval in the long and dreary "bad quarter of an hour," which comes to men and nations with a regularity which neither have yet learned to heed. To the American people as a whole, the year has been, in an economical sense, one of gradual recuperation; it has been marked by the silent accumulation of new energy and added wealth. But we have lived too long the life of spendthrift heirs to make the process a pleasant one, however healthy and necessary it may have been. The festive spirit of the season cannot exclude the somewhat anxious question of whether the days of our penance have nearly ended.

Politically, too, the nations have been settling arrears with the past during 1876, and it is not quite clear that the process has ended. In Europe, the task of diplomacy is even now to contrive some method of extending bills that are overdue, with some arrangement for taking practical reforms in part payment. In the United States, we have been compelled to accept the penalty for constitutional imperfections which we could not be induced to repair in time, and to face the inconvenience growing out of the violation of constitutional provisions which we were too supine to enforce. The political complication of 1877 would have had no existence for us had we recognized the necessity of making laws on principle rather than on impulse, of treating government as a science rather than as a thing of crude expedients. We are paying for the neglect to educate and elevate our voters as well as for the neglect to choose our rulers wisely. We have mistaken demagogism for the spirit of freedom; carelessness for liberality, and the arts of the place-hunter for the politics of the statesman. The moment these facts are recognized, half the evils of our system of government will have been already cured. Under the sobering influence of adversity they are becoming every day more generally perceived, and that is in itself one of the best auguries for the future.

Neither commercially nor politically have we as yet paid the full measure of our debt to laws which we have overridden and prudent restraints which we have despised. We have been governed too much, plundered too much, and have traded too recklessly, to render it possible that the evil times should be brief or our recovery from them any thing but gradual. But we are on the upward path for all that. Blatant talk about war and revolution has fallen as dead as the mad expedients for getting out of debt by first sacrificing our credit and then beginning to draw on the future again. We have not done yet with the repudiationists, either in politics or in finance, but we can tell, with some approach to precision, what is their capacity for mischief. We may display a natural anxiety to have certain "burning questions" settled and out of the way, but we can at least feel confident that they will be disposed of according to the law-abiding instincts of a people whose devotion to liberty has always been reinforced by a robust common sense. Neither the doctrinaire nor the demagogue can take our present political difficulties out of the category of many that have been peacefully surmounted before. And the problems of our trade and finance are as little likely to be muddled by the nostrums of the one as by the turgid nonsense of the other. We enter on a new year with a considerably strengthened belief in the curative powers of natural laws.

While it would be only sowing the seeds of disappointment to look for very great things from 1877, it is exceedingly probable that its fulfillment will be far more cheerful than its promise. Politics will be purer, trade sounder, the public conscience more sensitive, and the public understanding better informed than they have been of late. A change for the better will not come flashing upon us like a bright sunrise, but will at least be as perceptible as the slow breaking of a gray dawn. It will not come, either, by waiting and looking for it; these are times for people to "do noble things, not dream them all day long." Our expenditures must be made more productive; the dignity of labor must have more recognition, and the gentility of various counterfeits of work rather less. The country yields enough for all, and we must learn to make all earn their share of its abundant wealth. The able-bodied tramp who lives on the earnings of honest toil is no more of a social pest than some more pretentious members of society, who live by various ingenious devices for levying toll on capital and labor. A good many such have found their natural level of late; in our progress toward sound business methods, many more gamblers, speculators, and superfluous middlemen must fall by the way. But the future is brighter for those who contribute to the productive energies of the country than it has been for some time past, and no man who wisely considers the lessons of the past will be likely to doubt that with the new year there opens an era of stable and healthy growth for the American people.

THE "CARPET-BAG" BUGABOO.

It is not a little singular that while other portions of the Republic are endeavoring to allure settlers and new citizens, the South should persist in a policy of exclusion. Exactly how far this is true of a majority of the Southern people it is difficult to say. But those who are most conspicuous in public affairs in that section of the Union do lend themselves to schemes of proscription. We should prefer to believe that, as is usual in politics, those who make the most noise are the least influential. Rightly or wrongly, however, there is a general impression that the South has practically put up a sign warning all persons off the premises. It seems to be considered in the South that there is some peculiarly sacred quality in the soil which resents the presence of a stranger as an intrusion. And a stranger is one who was not born on the soil. He who first drew breath north of the Potomac is an alien. How much this unnatural feeling may be the result of an ancient antagonism between the two sections of country none may undertake to decide. Certainly, there is no such feeling rising like a wall of separation to forbid an exchange of citizenship between other parts of the Union. From a New-York point of view, any such proscription seems specially unaccountable. Perhaps New-York is cosmopolitan, and some other sections are provincial, that we wonder greatly at a spirit which claps an odious epithet on a man not "to the manner born," and never allows him to outlive it. In this City, where foreigners are in office as soon as they can vote, (which is early,) and where American citizens have been candidates for nomination before their residence in the State had made them eligible, we have some right to complain of the Southern policy of exclusion.

Of course, the natural reply to all this is that Southern people do not object to immigrants from the North, per se, but they do object to their "mixing in politics." This means that men from other States may go South and invest their money for the improvement of the country, but they must take no part in public affairs. What there is peculiar about Southern politics that renders the influence of a newcomer pernicious we have never been able to make out. Is it true of any other portion of the Union? But what ever may be the cause of this dread of the influence of a stranger, it seems unfair to the general public of a State that it should be deprived of valuable citizens. For example, a Connecticut man went to Florida eight years ago, to make his residence. He bought land, built houses, and improved property until his own contribution to the income of the State, on account of local taxes, was as much as the whole county had paid before he began his work. He planted 100 orange groves where none grew before, and secured the immigration of 500 industrious Swedish settlers. One might well understand that such a man would be considered a valuable member of society. Incidentally his name was mentioned in connection with a candidacy for office. Instantly he is denounced as a "carpet-bagger." To be sure, a New-York Democratic paper led off in this tirade of abuse, and Southern journals followed suit. But if there were not in the South some such low prejudice as that to which the World panders, we should never have heard of a useful, honest, and valuable citizen's being abused without cause.

Perhaps it is not because these "strangers" are Northern, but because they are Republicans, that they excite the ire of the so-called leaders. It is said that all Southern men are politicians. We should be sorry to believe that they are such in the bad sense in which that word is usually applied. But if Southern politics are proscriptive of any class of citizens, so much the worse for the State thus afflicted. And if Northern men, Republicans or otherwise, are to be warned off the premises when they seek opportunity for the investment of capital, so much the worse for the whole country. The people of the South cannot afford to give their section of the country over to the domination of men who make politics a trade—men whose policy it is to drive out all whose presence may seem to menace their own supremacy. It will be an unfortunate day for the South when it is acknowledged that new settlers must decline a free-born citizen's interest in the affairs of the State. The day of political adventurers from the North or West is over in the South. If that region of country is to recover all that it has lost in industry and wealth, it must at least tolerate the presence of men who come with the honest intention of performing all the duties of good citizens.

EVILS OF THE "DEEP LOT."

An ingenious authority on building matters has recently put forth the theory that the evils of our tenement-house system in New-York do not so much result from the form of the island, or from the overcrowding in certain wards, as from "the inflexible depth of 100 feet for each lot" in the up-town districts. There is much to be said for this. Whatever capitalist undertakes to build a tenement-house must ordinarily place it on one or two lots, and thus occupy twenty-five or fifty feet front with a depth of 100 feet. It is almost impossible on such a plot of ground to build a large and healthful house. Even the private houses, and the new "apartment-houses" on such lots, are compelled to have dark central bed-rooms or sitting-rooms, sometimes ventilated alone by the odious "well," which is also carrying off the gases of the water-closets. One room at least on each floor must be of this character. In a tenement-house of this plan, the back bedroom, and often two back rooms for each set of family rooms, must be dark and ventilated alone by the front room, where the family sit and cook, or by a window in the hall, which is nearly always kept closed and locked. Thus in a tenement of five stories, there will be from ten to twenty dark bedrooms, which naturally become nidi of typhoid and sources or fomentors of all sorts of diseases. In a house with fifty feet front, it is true, a "well" may be put in the centre, but few tenement-houses ever possess even this doubtful luxury. But such a house will in all probability not fill up the lot, and behind it will come another building, not constructed in the same way, but more cut off from air and light than the front one.

But this is not all the evil effect of the deep lot, or, perhaps, the worst. It is a well-recognized truth in political science that the more the citizens of a community possess of its land, the more economical and responsible will be its government. One cause of the remarkably favorable financial condition of the State of New-York now, as compared with the City, is, no doubt, that the rural voters are so largely land-holders, while the City voters are landless. Our working classes are singularly cut off here from that permanent interest in the soil which makes men economical and conservative in their management of public trusts. The rulers of the masses and the politicians reflect the habits of mind of their constituencies. Both are wasteful and careless of that in which they hold so small a stake. Who supposes that men like TWEED and CONNOLLY and GENET and NORTON would have had such free sweep with the public funds if seventy-five per cent. of the voters had been property-holders, and at once felt the peculation or waste in their taxes? It is this possession of the land by so many French peasants which has made their country the model of Europe for its economy and conservative power, despite the revolutions which centuries of ignorance and centralized rule have brought about.

Among our cities, Philadelphia is a model for the prosperous and intelligent condition of its working classes. It may be said that this is due to its remarkable "Building Associations," which we have so frequently (and so uselessly) presented for the consideration of our mechanics. But these associations are especially the fruit of the mode of dividing and selling land in that city. The deep lot is abjured; rectangular blocks, at least in the newer parts, are neglected, or, if laid out, lanes run through the middle of them. There are all kinds of odds and ends of lots, gores, and small bits, and by the cutting of blocks with lanes, small, shallow lots are formed for the working classes. The New-York arrangement for buying and selling land, is, (as the writer spoken of above trenchantly says,) as if we had a custom that no one could buy flour or sugar in parcels less than a hundred pounds. The working man or mechanic can not purchase a lot in New-York within ten miles of the City Hall. It is beyond his reach. In consequence, he is forced to hire rooms in a large tenement-house, to live in half-darkened and badly-ventilated rooms, and see his children gradually contaminated and degraded by the associations of a crowded tenement. He and his family live and grow up without permanent interest in the prosperity and management of the City.

Now, this great evil may begin to be cured by that benevolent citizen—who shall leave a name to be gratefully remembered for generations to come—who will first construct a truly "model tenement." According to Mr. EDWARD PORTER's plan, which we have already briefly described, the new model house is to occupy ground from street to street; lanes are to cut it north and south, and shallow lots are to front on these narrow lanes. The houses on these lots being shallow, will have both front and rear exposed to air and light. There will be in front and rear a set of those small rooms for each family; no rooms will be dark or ill-ventilated. The south wind sweeps through the lanes, and the east and west air blows through the houses. Each lane, like a Paris cité, could be lighted and policed by our City authorities. The sun would strike full on the east and west sides, and for a few hours in Winter, directly on the fronts upon the lanes. The same space of ground would be covered on this plan as on the present, with a vast advantage to the tenants. Such a house succeeding, as it would be sure to do, other landlords—perhaps large corporations, like Columbia College or Sailors' Snug Harbor—would cut up their land thus and lease small lots to mechanics or working men. Others would build similar houses, and we should have a new style of light and healthy tenement-houses, paying a fair profit. But, best of all, the working classes would begin to invest in land and be their own landlords.

WHAT IS A BOARDING-HOUSE?

What constitutes a boarding-house? Being one of the simplest of questions, it might be supposed that the answer would be equally simple; but nothing is more difficult, more delicate, or more abstruse than to determine the exact nature, the component parts, the elementary principles, of a boarding-house. Lexicons are of no more avail than logic. Webster defines boarding-house to be a house in which boarders are kept. Worcester defines it to be a house where board is furnished. These are essentially synonymous; there are no derivative meanings, no subtle distinctions, no elastic interpretations of one and the same thing. A boarding-house is merely a boarding-house, nothing more nothing less. The term is too simple, its import is too obvious, to require definition.

As it appears on the face, this is a common-sense view, an entirely natural inference. That a boarding-house is a boarding-house is true both abstractly and philosophically, but concretely and socially it is not true; it is something else, something very different, though how or why different passes understanding, is wholly beyond divining. The anomaly may be demonstrated by experiment. Go into any quarter—Fourteenth street, lower Fifth avenue, or Madison square, for example—where boarding-houses abound; ring the bell; ask for the lady of the house, (be sure you say "lady," if you expect to see her,) and inquire, on her appearance, if she keeps a boarding-house. Should you demand a categorical answer, it is doubtful whether you will be able to find a single boarding-house in a wilderness of boarding-houses. Not thumb-screws nor rack would wring out of the lady the monosyllable "Yes." She will reply to you in a round-about manner, euphemistically or euphuistically; but she will invariably begin by declaring, with a touch of injury in her tone, and of indignation in her air, that she does not keep a boarding-house.

Presuming you to be a plain, blunt man, you will beg her pardon and undertake to withdraw. She will not allow you to do so, in all likelihood; she will advance and, with a mien somewhat softened, will repeat that she does not keep a boarding-house, but—what a world of possibilities this disjunctive includes!—she sometimes takes boarders. You remember Webster, Worcester, and common sense, and marvel at the distinction without a difference. She explains that she has a few friends under her roof, and that, though she has adopted a rule never to receive strangers, she thinks she might make an exception in your favor, admitting you as a member of her exclusive and sympathetic household. You may be overpowered by this condescension; you may assert your unwillingness to break in upon a private circle, and you desire to secure a mere business arrangement by paying so much a week for a good table and a comfortable room, expecting no favors and extending no courtesies out of the common. Even this matter-of-fact presentation does not chill the lady. She assures you that your coming will be no intrusion; that she is confident her friends will be delighted to make your acquaintance, and that you will be equally delighted with them. You will find Mr. Titmouse a very pleasant gentleman; he is a prominent lawyer; his wife is a charming lady, quite musical. Mr. Rumble is an importer of wines, exceedingly pleasant company; Miss Goldpen is a brilliant authoress; Judge Opal is a distinguished politician; Col. Myrtle was prominent in the war; Mr. Bondwell is a leading banker and—here observing that you are a little weary of her list of celebrities—she graciously concludes with "and a few others."

If you are mortal and unsophisticated, you cannot resist introduction into such fine company. Terms are made, and you are duly installed. Your room is not exactly what you would have; the atmosphere, material and spiritual, of the house is not seductive; the furniture is meagre and redolent of ancient second-handedness. You observe, too, that the landlady is not entirely fascinating; that immaculateness is not one of her most conspicuous virtues, and that by a mysterious process of evolution, she is developing into a combination of soiled raiment and deranged hair-pins. You consent to put up with these things for the sake of that rare band of refined friends. At dinner you are to meet them. You are prompt. The table is well enough, except that there is very little to eat, and that that little is very badly cooked and worse served. The friends to whom you are presented are evidently the kind of persons who do not wear their attractions on the outside, nor on the inside either, as you discover in a brief time. Mr. Titmouse proves to be a shyster; his wife a vulgar dowdy; not a note in her voice less than ninety-five cents discount, with a talent for torturing the ear on the consumptive piano in the tenebrous parlor. Mr. Rumble, the importer of wines, is the proprietor of a sample room; Miss Goldpen is so gifted a writer that prosaic publishers will not publish the manuscripts; Judge Opal appears to confine his judgment to frequently-tasted liquors, and so on. Your last disappointment is too much; you go away; you seek a new place, and get one you are reconciled to, but it is not a boarding-house. Your first experience was unfortunate. There are many nice, comfortable houses here where boarders are taken, though none of them, remember, are boarding-houses. In the language of the City, a boarding-house is a house that does not board.

There are hundreds, thousands of estimable, excellent people here who keep boarding-houses. It is an honest, honorable calling. Nobody objects to it as a business; the objection, the mortal offense, is to give it its right name. No doubt there are houses which are not enticing—we have heard of such—where false promises are made; where a few friends are employed as lures to much indigestion and more discomfort. But there are many other houses where there is neither vulgarity nor sham, except in the transparent assumption that they are not what they are. It may be unfortunate to be compelled to keep a boarding-house; it certainly must be hard, anxious, and wearing; but it is not disgraceful. If persons can afford to board at a boarding-house, why can not its keepers afford to acknowledge that they keep it? We are not sure that any large number of folks are infatuated with boarding or taking boarders. Perhaps they would live otherwise, if they could; but if they can not, why seek to conceal a fact that is unconcealable? Telling falsehood is rarely commendable, and least of all, when everyone knows it to be a falsehood.

TUPPER'S RETURN.

The uneasiness and alarm produced by the long and mysterious disappearance of Mr. TUPPER have at last been allayed by the sudden and happy discovery that the estimable Proverbial Philosopher is alive and uninjured. He has been seen during the last week in the streets of Brooklyn, and his present place of abode is known to the Police. Mr. TUPPER is understood to explain his absence by alleging that he has been lecturing in Canada since the early part of November, and he expressly asserts that he has never experienced any direct violence at the hands, legs, or arms of Rev. Mr. TALMAGE. Doubtless he has been in Canada, and doubtless Mr. TALMAGE has never been guilty of actual assault and battery upon him. Nevertheless, the fact that Mr. TUPPER no longer trusts himself under TALMAGE's roof, and the significant and suspicious flight of TALMAGE during the period of TUPPER's mysterious absence from the City, are matters which call for full and careful investigation.

The first emotion which will stir the public breast on learning that TUPPER is alive and well, will be that of unalloyed delight. We may not admire Mr. TUPPER's poetry, but he is not only a quiet and amiable gentleman, but he is a foreigner who has honored us with a visit. There has been, in certain circles, an ardent disposition to "chaff" Mr. TUPPER, which we have witnessed with much pain and with sincere regret. That our guest should be thus treated with irreverence was sufficiently bad, but had he been foully and violently dealt with, whether by TALMAGE or any other desperate acrobat, our country would have been irretrievably disgraced. Frivolous persons may think it a matter of little consequence whether TALMAGE kills TUPPER, or whether both are suppressed with force of arms. Thinking people, however, are perfectly aware that to kill a guest, no matter what sort of poetry he may have written, is an inhospitable and discourteous act. If we wish to kill a poet, there are scores of American poets whom we could kill without incurring the reproach of ill manners. Mr. TUPPER deserved better things of us, and so long as he trusted himself in our hands it was our duty to treat him with kindness and courtesy.

It is painfully evident that considerations of prudence have led Mr. TUPPER to escape from TALMAGE's custody, and to break off his strange intimacy with that able acrobat. That he discovered TALMAGE's true character, and therefore fled to Canada for safety, there can be little doubt. He probably felt his mind giving way under the roar and confusion of TALMAGE's conversation, and he probably found himself in constant danger of having a sermon preached at him by TALMAGE when under the influence of the mince-pie, which, according to the latter's confession, produces in him a state of temporary madness. Alarmed and indignant at the conduct of his host, Mr. TUPPER first fled to a place of safety, and then determined to expose his wrongs in proverbial verse, as a warning to other unsuspecting foreigners not to accept proferred hospitality of the quondam Church and Robespierre Strait we found entirely barren and low, with the exception of a glacier that we saw, covering about latitude 80° 30' east side of the strait, and extending east-north-east as far as can be seen from the mountain by Polaris Bay. We have found that the country abounds with life, and seals, game, ducks, musk-ox cattle, rabbits, wolves, foxes, bears, partridges, &c. Our sealers have shot two seals in the open water while at this encampment."

Capt. Howgate says volunteers of the right stamp offer themselves in abundance. The principle difficulty will be to limit the number to be taken. It is proposed to obtain authority from Congress to use one of the small naval vessels now employed, and also a small appropriation for the outfit and maintenance of the expedition. He says kindly words of encouragement for the enterprise pour in from all sides, and it is believed that if proper direction is given the popular feeling an expedition will be organized and sent off, and the Polar Colony founded during the year 1877.

of TALMAGE, who would be represented as cowering behind tables and sofas to escape the eloquent conversation of TALMAGE, and as jumping from his window at midnight to avoid a fiendish attempt of TALMAGE to preach an unusually violent sermon at him, would bring tears from every sympathetic spectator. Such a drama would create a public sentiment against TALMAGE which would render it impossible for him to continue his gymnastic ministrations; and unless Mr. TUPPER changes his mind, and decides not to write the contemplated tragedy, the trapeze of the Brooklyn Tabernacle will remain permanently vacant, and TALMAGE will pass his days in exile and concealment.

HOW TO REACH THE NORTH POLE.

Capt. H. W. Howgate seems to have struck the right view in his plan of organizing another Polar expedition from the United States, as evinced by the numerous letters coming to him from interested parties from all over the country indorsing and admitting his plan of approaching the Pole as the most practical yet offered, and urging him to have an expedition started in the Spring. Capt. Howgate's suggested plan is simple, practicable, economical, and, under proper supervision, certain of success. He believes that the open Polar Sea, so stoutly insisted upon by Capt. Hayes, and so effectually barred against the entrance of Capt. Nares, is open or closed alternately, according to the vicissitudes of intensity in the Winter season, which as undoubtedly occur in the Arctic regions as they do in the temperate zones. It is to found a temporary colony at Discovery Harbor, in Lady Franklin Bay, and to make this the base of operations from which exploring parties should be sent out toward the Pole whenever the weather and other conditions were most favorable. The experience of Capts. Hall and Nares shows that this harbor can be reached rapidly, and with but little more danger to a vessel as well equipped as the Polaris, the Alert, or Discovery, than is constantly incurred by vessels forming part of the whaling fleets that annually make Smith's Sound and neighboring waters their scene of operations.

Capt. Howgate suggests that the colony should consist of energetic, capable men, experienced in Arctic navigation and physically sound, in order that they might the better withstand the rigors of the climate. To these should be added a number of Esquimaux, to serve as hunters, guides, &c., and who can be taken over, with their families, from Greenland. This native force would relieve the regular number of much of the drudgery, and be in many ways useful to them. He says a suitable building or buildings to shelter the men and proper supplies for their maintenance could be carried on the vessel selected for the expedition, and an annual visit could and should be made to them to provide fresh supplies, and afford such encouragement and relief as the circumstances might render necessary. The expedition should be composed of selected volunteers mustered into the naval service for the purpose, and the whole commanded by a competent naval officer to insure proper discipline and guard against the internal dissensions that brought disaster upon the Polaris party after Capt. Hall's death. It was this super-or discipline that enabled Capt. Nares to reach a higher latitude than any previous explorer.

The severity of the climate has been exaggerated. To parties under cover it is no more trying than that at the summits of Mount Washington, in New-Hampshire, or of Pike's Peak, in Colorado, as stated by a former member of one of Dr. Hayes' expeditions, and who has since served a year on the summit of the last-named mountain. In this connection attention is invited to the following extracts from official reports:

From the report of the Secretary of the Navy and his associates in the results of the Polaris Expedition. * * * "During the Summer the entire extent of both low lands and elevations (at Thank God Harbor, latitude 81° 39' north) are bare of both snow and ice, excepting patches here and there in the shade of the rocks. The soil during this period was covered with a more or less dense vegetation of moss, with which several Arctic plants were interspersed, some of them of considerable beauty, but entirely without trees, and many small willows, scarcely reaching above digitate of shrubs. * * * Animal life was found to abound, musk-oxen being shot at intervals throughout the Winter, their food consisting of the moss and other vegetables obtained during this season by scraping off the snow with their hoofs. Wolves, also bears, foxes, and other mammals were repeatedly observed. Geese, ducks, and other water fowls, including plover and other wading birds, abounded during the Summer, although the species of land-birds were comparatively few, including, however, as might have been expected, large numbers of snow-partridge. * * * No fish were seen. The waters were, however, found filled to an extraordinary degree with marine invertebrata, including jelly-fish and shrimps. It was believed by the party that the seals depend upon the latter for their principal subsistence, the seals themselves being very abundant. Numerous insects were observed, also especially several species of butterflies, also flies, bees and insects of like character."

In the last dispatch written by Capt. Hall, at his snow encampment on the north side of Newman's Bay, latitude 82° 3' north, Oct. 20, 1871, he says: "We find this a much warmer country than we expected. From Cape Alexander the mountains on either side of the Kennedy Channel and Robeson Strait we found entirely barren and low, with the exception of a glacier that we saw, covering about latitude 80° 30' east side of the strait, and extending east-north-east as far as can be seen from the mountain by Polaris Bay. We have found that the country abounds with life, and seals, game, ducks, musk-cattle, rabbits, wolves, foxes, bears, partridges, &c. Our sealers have shot two seals in the open water while at this encampment."

Capt. Howgate says volunteers of the right stamp offer themselves in abundance. The principle difficulty will be to limit the number to be taken. It is proposed to obtain authority from Congress to use one of the small naval vessels now employed, and also a small appropriation for the outfit and maintenance of the expedition. He says kindly words of encouragement for the enterprise pour in from all sides, and it is believed that if proper direction is given the popular feeling an expedition will be organized and sent off, and the Polar Colony founded during the year 1877.

POLITICAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE MISSISSIPPI PLAN AT HOME.

ITS EFFECT ON THE REPUBLICAN VOTE—WHAT HAS BECOME OF OVER 38,000 VOTERS IN TWO YEARS—21,000 REPUBLICAN LOSS IN TWELVE COUNTIES WITH ONLY 1,700 DEMOCRATIC GAIN IN THE SAME—UNDENIABLE EVIDENCE OF INTIMIDATION IN PREVENTING THE POLLING OF THE REPUBLICAN VOTE—THE PRETENSE OF COLORED MEN VOTING THE DEMOCRATIC TICKET EXPLODED.

From Our Own Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, Dec. 30, 1876.

What has become of the Republican vote of Mississippi? This is an inquiry likely to arise in any mind after looking at a comparative statement of the Democratic and Republican vote of the State for 1872, 1874, and 1876. The figures have not been often printed together, and the strange result is best seen by a comparison, placing them all under the eye at once. The totals and the details are alike interesting. The aggregate vote of the State in the years mentioned was as follows:

Democrat	81,371	107,118	98,693

The comparison of the line of figures giving the Republican vote shows a wonderful falling off in two years. In round numbers the percentage of loss from 1874 to 1876 was 41, and from 1872 to 1876, 37. Almost half the Republican vote is gone, and the question arises with almost startling emphasis—what has become of it?

If any Democratic newspapers—if indeed the Democratic leaders who were lately clamorous for reform are sought for information—the answer is that the negroes voted the Democratic ticket. But the second line of figures printed above tells a different story. If the Democrats had secured the votes of the Republican negroes which disappeared between 1874 and 1876, the Democratic vote in the last election would have been 136,323. Instead of this it was only 98,693, or actually 8,425 less than two years ago. While the Republican vote declined 41 per cent., the Democratic vote was reduced 7 per cent. In all the range of the exact sciences there never was a problem more absolutely demonstrated, no fact more definitely ascertained, than this which is proved by the election returns of the State of Mississippi. The Republicans of 1874 did not vote the Democratic ticket in 1876. To controvert this truth, further than to show a few exceptional cases, such as might have occurred in Vermont, the oath of every Democrat in Mississippi would have no more weight than if they should swear that the sun revolves around the earth. What then, did become of more than 37,000 Republican votes lost in two years?

Some little light may be thrown upon this question by an examination of the election returns of the State by counties, comparing the vote, for convenience, in the same manner as the aggregate vote is stated and compared above. The following is a table of 12 counties, selected from the entire State. The proportionate loss of Republican votes is larger than for the whole State, but the fact exhibited is the same. It is instructive to look across the line of Republican votes and note the losses, and then to mark whether the Democratic gains make room for the difference:

Russell County.
Democratic	1,717	1,964	1,952

To still further exhibit in its true appearance the result of the last election, the following statement is given, showing the Republican losses in the same counties from 1872 to 1876. The statement is remarkable, but scarcely more so than if the counties had been selected at random.

REPUBLICAN LOSSES FROM 1872 TO 1876 IN TWELVE COUNTIES.

Barbour	2,591	Hale	2,172
Bullock	2,501	Jefferson	656

Chocktaw	644	Mobile	2,867
Clark	879	Perry	2,176
Greene	2,416	Russell	2,007
Total			20,955

That the Democratic vote has not been swollen by the accession of this 20,955 Republican loss is seen by the following statement of Democratic gains and losses in the same counties:

DEMOCRATIC GAINS AND LOSSES FROM 1872 TO 1876 IN TWELVE COUNTIES.

Total losses	3,174
Net gain	1,767

It seems to me that, so far as the State of Mississippi is concerned, these figures, with common reports, make out a clear case of intimidation. The State is well known to have had, and to have now, the elements of population which make up a Republican majority. The majority should be, according to experience and reason, from 20,000 to 30,000. Instead of this, it is more than 40,000 Democratic, with a reduced Democratic vote. An examination of the vote by counties shows that some means of producing a constant and systematic reduction of the Republican vote all over the State was employed, or some constant reducing force was at work. Only one explanation has ever been offered. The negroes were everywhere prevented from voting by force and fear of their lives. They were intimidated. The evidence sustaining this charge is abundant, but its truth is denied, and the claim is set up that the negroes voted the Democratic ticket. Now, the figures absolutely disprove the latter theory, or pretense, or whatever it may be called. The election statistics confirm the theory of intimidation, and go far to prove it without other evidence. The burden of proof certainly lies on the other side, and, in the absence of any further investigation, the allegation of intimidation, supported by the statistics and the undisputed character of the population of the State, while the allegation remains without disproof by positive affirmative evidence, ought to be sufficient to warrant as radical treatment in the Senate of the vote of that State when the Electoral count comes to be made as may be undertaken by the Democratic House in respect to the vote of any other State whatever.

THE FLORIDA DECISION.

CONFLICTING RUMORS AND OPINIONS AS TO THE PURPOSE AND EFFECT OF THE ORDER OF THE SUPREME COURT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

TALLAHASSEE, Dec. 31.—All the Justices of the Supreme Court are here. It is rumored that the court considers its order misinterpreted, and that the Canvassing Board will be reassembled with instructions to recanvass and count, going beyond the face of the return, and weighing such evidence as may be on file and hearing more. Another rumor is that the court will order that Clay County be canvassed, which was thrown out on account of falsity on its face. Still another is that the court will signify its satisfaction with the board's return, and order the Secretary of State, Mr. McLin, to issue a certificate of election to Drew.

THE SITUATION IN LOUISIANA.

MEETING OF THE LEGISLATURE—PROPOSED PROGRAMME OF THE DEMOCRATS—FORESHADOWINGS OF THE TILDEN ORGAN—NO TROUBLE ANTICIPATED AND NO TROOPS TO BE PRESENT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEW-ORLEANS, Dec. 31.—The all-absorbing topic of conversation here to-day is the meeting of the Legislature to-morrow. The line of action to be pursued by the Democrats cannot be foretold. They prefer to say they will be governed by circumstances, which means by the result of the effort Mr. Wiltz will make to organize the Senate. The Democrat of this morning (official organ) makes a stirring appeal to the elected of its party to stay away from the State-house, saying: "We do not see how, in honor, the Democrats can in any manner, shape, or form, recognize Packard as Governor, or any portion of his Government as legal. The board has returned a decided radical majority in both the Senate and the House, and the Democrats returned will be utterly powerless there. They can do only two things by going into the Packard Legislature. They can disgrace the cause of Louisiana, and bring the whole people into unutterable contempt, and they can prejudice the cause of Gov. Tilden and the country." In this fear to injure the cause of Tilden is seen the hand of outside advisers. Democrats here are assured that Tilden would overthrow the State Government here were he President. As it is, they will march up to the House of Representatives and demand admission for all contestants. To prevent disturbance, men not returned as elected will be denied admission, and then it is expected all the Democratic members of the House will leave and set up a second Legislature in another place. Mr. Wiltz will draw off as many Senators as he can and start another Senate. This is the old story.

Gov. Kellogg's message will be a long valedictory. He will remind the people of how little support has been given him; of how the Democrats have sought to build up a party, instead of benefiting a State. The most prominent Republican candidates for Speaker of the House are ex-Govs. Warmoth and Michael Hahn. Caucussing for the United States Senatorships is active. J. R. West is working for his own re-election. The colored men will demand representation in the persons of Col. James Lewis, Pinchback, or Antonine, and, of course, Gov. Kellogg himself will be found not unwilling to serve the State again as Senator. No trouble is anticipated on the assembling of the Legislature. The troops will not be employed or seen.

UNEASINESS AS TO THE RESULT OF THE MEETING TO-DAY—THE DEMOCRATIC SCHEME FOR A LINE OF DE JURE GOVERNORS—ADVICES IN WASHINGTON ON THE SUBJECT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 31.—There is considerable anxiety here to-night as to the result of the meeting of the Legislature in New-Orleans to-morrow. The action contemplated by the Democrats is not known. The Republicans have a majority, of course, of the members returned, but there are many Democrats here who seem to suspect that their Louisiana brethren will secure in some way the organization of the Legislature and inaugurate Nichols. Such word as has come from there would indicate that to resort to force is not intended, but a Democratic State Government will be set up, and Nichols will take the place of McEnery in order, as has been suggested by Horace White concerning the Presidency, that a de jure line of Governors may be maintained. The general Democratic expectation is of something more substantial in the way of organization, but the information received is not positive enough to warrant the belief that any violence will be attempted.

CONUTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

THE ATTEMPTS TO GUESS THE PROBABLE ACTION OF THE SENATE COMMITTEE—ABSOLUTE SECRECY KEPT BY THE MEMBERS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 31.—The statements that continue to appear in print about the action of the Senate Committee now examining the subject of counting the Electoral vote are to be entirely discredited, except as mere guesses and speculations. The committee has taken unusual pains to keep its deliberations secret, and the views of the members can't be obtained. A member of the committee says he has seen no publication that would indicate any knowledge whatever of the committee's proceedings. The matter becomes of some importance from various attempts to influence public opinion by misrepresentations of the position of the committee.

INCIDENTS IN THE CONTROVERSY.

MR. BARNES, OF THE WESTERN UNION, IN WASHINGTON—HIS ANSWER TO THE HOUSE NOT YET PREPARED—THE DEMOCRATS AND GROVER, OF OREGON—JUDGE MATTHEWS GIVES NOTICE OF HIS CONTEST FOR BANNING'S SEAT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 31.—E. W. Barnes, manager of the Western Union Telegraph Company at New-Orleans, who is under arrest by order of the House for refusing to produce certain telegrams before the Louisiana Investigating Committee, arrived here to-day in charge of a Deputy Sergeant at Arms. Mr. Barnes says he does not know what answer he will make when brought before the bar of the House, and has had no communication whatever with the officers of the company with reference to the matter which led to his arrest or with reference to the recent action of the Executive Committee in directing that all telegrams shall be removed from the custody of subordinates. Mr. Barnes is about 50 years of age, quiet and undemonstrative in manner, and has the bearing of a gentleman of intelligence and firmness. He seems to fully realise the position in which he is placed and manifests uneasiness at the notoriety he has been dragged into, and the inconvenience to which he is put, in being brought from his home at this season of the year. Mr. Barnes will have the assistance of able counsel in preparing an explanation of his refusal to produce the telegrams demanded by the committee. The action of the company in placing all telegrams in sole charge of the Executive Committee will doubtless have an influence in determining the action of the House in Barnes' case. Charles Casanac, a prominent Democratic politician of Louisiana, accompanied Mr. Barnes from New-Orleans.

The Democrats of this district are making arrangements to hold a meeting on Jan. 8 to give expression to their feelings on the Presidential complications. A movement is also on foot among the Democrats here to meet Gov. Grover, of Oregon, with music and banners upon his arrival, on Tuesday next, and to tender him a serenade on Tuesday night.

Stanley Matthews has filed with the Clerk of the House formal notice of his intention to contest the election of Mr. Banning in the Second Ohio District. Banning, who entered Congress originally as a very Liberal Republican, was declared elected over Matthews by 65 majority. It is charged in Cincinnati that upon the day prior to the election $7,000 were received in that city from New-York, and Banning's district liberally supplied from the fund, and by the corrupt expenditure of it Banning was enabled to secure the apparent majority. Mr. Matthews will, no doubt, be able to prove that he is entitled to the seat, but whether that will lead to his admission by a Democratic house may well be doubted. And yet the Democratic majority is so very small that only a very few honest men on that side can prevent partisanship from prevailing over the right.

THE REPUBLICANS OF INDIANA.

The Indianapolis Journal of Dec. 30, says: "Within a few days three elections have taken place to fill vacancies in the State Legislature—one in Jefferson County, one in Madison and Delaware, and one in Parke and Montgomery. In the October election Jefferson County gave a Republican majority of 310, Madison gave a Democratic majority of 856, Delaware a Republican majority of 1,360, Parke a Republican majority of 616, and Montgomery a Democratic majority of 133. In the recent Senatorial election the Republicans carried Jefferson County by 310 majority, precisely the majority given for Harrison in October; the Democratic Party has lost the respect of peaceable, law-abiding men by the filibustering course it has pursued, while the Republican Party has gained strength and votes by pursuing an opposite course, and by standing firmly on the Constitution and laws. The vote in Madison County in October for a legislator, which has been considered a Democratic stronghold, and the leaders there have been noisy and persistent in their howl for 'Tilden or blood.' The recent election, showing a net Republican gain since October of 1,032, shows that the masses are not with them. It shows, moreover, that they have not scared nor disgusted the Republicans by their fuss and fury. The same is true of the party throughout the State. So far from being demoralized or intimidated by the buccaneering policy of the Democracy, they are solid as a stone wall in the conviction that Gov. Hayes is fairly and constitutionally elected; that the principles of the Republican Party are right, and that they must and shall be maintained."

THE LADIES OF SYRIA.

STATE RECEPTIONS—A VISIT TO ONE OF THE HAREMS—THE FAVORITE.

Miss Isabel Burton, in her Inner Life of Syria, says: "As for the society, there appears to be more variety in it than might be expected. There is a strong Consular corps, there are a good many missionaries, school teachers, and priests, and some merchants. But, as is always the case in similar circumstances, the motley company tends to split into cliques, although the Burtons exerted themselves with some success to make friends with everybody and to bring the different people together. Mrs. Burton gives an amusing account of her State receptions. It was hard work to inform herself of the endless grades of ceremonial, and to avoid being guilty of offensive solecisms in etiquette by acting on her English impulses. The demonstrations of civility must be regulated according to the rank of the guest. A dragoman in attendance, acting as confidential adviser, would whisper, and then the lady of the house would come forward 'one step,' 'two steps,' 'half across the room,' or 'to the door,' according to circumstances. A man of high breeding, however, will insist on anticipating the lady's rising, and must be urgently invited two or three times over before he will consent to be seated in her presence. To hand pipes and coffee as they would be handed in England above a lamentable ignorance. They must be offered respectfully with the left hand, while you touch heart, lips, and forehead with the right. At first Mrs. Burton made the tea and coffee herself, and carried them round afterward, while the dragomans sat and looked on. Gradually, they consented to let her do the duty, so far at least as Europeans were concerned, 'but not to their own ladies, who blushed, begged their pardon, and were quite confused. And when one who was really in love with his wife, a beautiful creature, gave her the tea-cup, he did it as if it were rather a good joke, and with a slight sneer. She then said to him, as a workman, some where in the 1830's, he endeavored to obtain accommodation for himself and mother at a large wooden hotel, which then stood at what is known as 'Take Burton' old corner,' but on account of their plain dress, was refused. The mother was affected to tears, but the son remarked to her 'never mind, she would live to see him own the entire block. We believe he now owns every foot of it."

Miss Burton's description of the harem is in close confinement there to-night. "The strike," says Manager Hickson, "will not materially affect the Grand Trunk traffic."

On Monday the 10 per cent. reduction of the engineers upon the Central Vermont Road goes into effect. Rumor says the men will not accept of the terms and will leave their engines, but the Central officials anticipate no trouble whatever. One thing is a settled fact: the railroad officials propose to run their roads with competent help, and the men will be given all the protection necessary. The indications to-night are that in less than four days the strike will be a thing of the past.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

ST. ALBANS, Dec. 31.—The Grand Trunk Railroad has applied to the Central Vermont Railroad to run their trains from St. Johnsbury to Montreal, which was done to-day.

TORONTO, Dec. 31.—The termination of the strike seems as distant as ever. The company are confident of their ability to provide drivers for passenger and most of their freight trains, and will resume business as early as toe civil and military authorities can guarantee the safety of the substitutes and the company's property. The strikers, on the other hand, have made the desperate resolve that train traffic shall not be resumed until their demands are satisfied. The heavy snow-drifts of Friday night still cover the track over the whole line west of Toronto. The strikers being so numerous, and intimidation so great, no attempt has been made to move an engine. Matters are almost as bad between Toronto and Montreal. The train which left Toronto this morning with Friday's through passengers, is now lying at Cobourg, fearing to proceed, while at Belleville matters are assuming a more serious aspect. The strikers are for the time being in the ascendant. Last night 28 men of the Forty-ninth Battalion were ordered to Deseronto to preserve the peace, while the line was being cleared, and to pilot in the Montreal pass nger train which awaited orders seven miles east. While the trackmen cleared the line at one end of the yard, strikers would block it at the other by running the snow-plows and cars off the track. Much time was lost in this way, and the company decided to wait daylight for further work. This morning a locomotive carrying a foreman went out and piloted the express train to Belleville. On its arrival the strikers assembled, and several hours elapsed before a driver could be got to mount the engine to take the train west. The station platform a crowd of military were unable to prevent the strikers from severely beating the engineers, the volunteers not being ordered to load muskets or use bayonets. One of the strikers, in attempting to wrest a bayonet from a volunteer, received a severe wound in the neck. Several other men were roughly handled, and several pistols fired, but nobody was dangerously wounded. The engine was then ordered to return to the shop. Four companies of the Fifteenth Battalion have since been ordered out, but the men seem unwilling to turn out, and at 2 P. M. only forty were under arms. Reinforcements from the country arrived at 4 o'clock, but the company abandoned all hope of starting the train before to-morrow, when it is expected more efficient measures will be taken to secure the operation of the line.

Later.—It is understood negotiations are now pending between the Grand Trunk Company and the Government for the complete protection of the company's property by the military authorities, and that no attempt will be made to resume business on the road until such security is guaranteed.

TRAINS FULL OF PASSENGERS ABANDONED BETWEEN STATIONS—ACTS OF VIOLENCE AND WANTON DESTRUCTION—MISHAPS OF A BALL PARTY—CALLS UPON THE POLICE.

From the Montreal Witness, Dec. 30.

For some weeks past the trouble between the Grand Trunk Railway and its engine-drivers has been increasing in magnitude, until last night it culminated in a general strike all along the line from Island Pond and Richmond on the east to Sarnia on the west, the engine-drivers leaving their locomotives about 9 o'clock P. M. and between stations, thus causing the utmost inconvenience, privation, and delay to passengers, and grossly abusing the confidence of the managers of the road, for when the trains started last evening, it was tacitly understood that the men would take them through.

Mr. Hickson and his assistants had some time ago received warning that this great strike was impending, unless they granted the claims of the engine-drivers, who were members of the Locomotive Brotherhood; however, the directorate, confident in its power to carry out its intentions, made no concession to the men in taking back any of the 130 employes it had discharged, and proceeded to insure itself against the danger of a strike and the consequent great loss and delay, by placing relays of men at the great locomotive centres, and paying their board, so as to have them ready at a moment's notice to step on board deserted engines. The drivers, however, who perpetrated the strike, kept their own counsel pretty well until the hour which had been agreed upon by the Brotherhood (which is an exceedingly powerful trade union, its wealth being sufficient to place $15,000 per annum in the hands of Mr. Arthurs, the President, for his use and the purposes of the society) had arrived, and then, without warning, deliberately abandoned their locomotives and trains between stations, and amid the discomforts of a driving snow-storm. The managers had received written assurances from some of the men that they would take no part in a strike, but so great was the influence exercised upon these persons that they joined the strike, and in consequence, before midnight, all freight trains not conveying were stopped, and every passenger train but one was abandoned between stations.

Much excitement reigned at head-quarters here in Montreal when the news began coming in, and Messrs. Hickson, Spicer, Stevenson, Wallis, Welsh and others were in constant attendance at Bonaventure Depot Telegraph Office. It having been rumored that attempts might be made at different points to tear up the rails, a message was sent to all station-masters and trackmen to keep a sharp lookout and prevent interference with railway property. Details received by telegraph last night show that the striking drivers, in many instances, behaved with great brutality and violence in order to prevent engine-drivers from taking their trains through. When the Western Express got into Stratford from Berlin, the driver, Mr. McKibbin, was assaulted on board of his engine, and thrown out of the cab, causing him severe injury. Mayor Daly, on learning of this, placed a force of constabulary at the disposal of the Station-master. Toronto, after 2 o'clock, about 50 strikers, some in disguise, gathered about the round-house, and made such demonstrations that the Mayor of Toronto also went a guard of Police to be stationed there.

About 8 o'clock an excursion train left Toronto for Weston with members of Loyal Orange Lodge No. 583 and their lady friends, who were going out to a ball. When about half way the engine-driver stopped the train, jumped off, and left the party to their fate. The unfortunate ladies and gentlemen were obliged to walk back to town in their ball costume, their discomfort being greatly heightened by having to plod through the drifting snow. Two drivers who were to have started with the Eastern express from Toronto uncoupled the locomotive and ran it past the danger signals out of the city, abandoning it a mile and a half from the Don Station. The arrest of these engine-drivers was ordered. The strikers at Toronto were still congregated at 1:30 this morning, and had damaged two engines and assaulted several non-strikers. The Mayor then ordered out the Police force, and placed it at the service of the Grand Trunk.

From about 9 P. M. to midnight the Bonaventure Station was thronged with intending travelers and their friends who assembled to see them off. Some bound West, and many of these going East were destined for England via the Sarmatian, little expecting that there was a barrier between them and the sailing of that noble vessel. Several of the passengers urged their carters to "drive on" through the deep snow and driving storm in order to be in good time; while others arrived, as they supposed, too late, but not so, as they had four or five hours to wait, and to make matters worse, it was questionable whether they could get off even then, as both the snow-storm and engine-drivers' strike were likely to interfere. The bell was tolled as usual within a few minutes of the time of departure, and the passengers went on board, but at 10 o'clock there was no engine attached; however, soon after one was procured, and placed in readiness to start on the arrival of the Western train, which had not got in up to noon to-day. The train going east left a-side now snowed up, thus delaying the Sarmatian for passengers and mails; but it is a question if the English-bound passengers and mails from the east will be waited for. As several trains were stopped abruptly by the engine-drivers striking at 9 P. M., telegraphs were forwarded to stop trains from leaving certain stations. This was a precautionary step to prevent accidents from collision or interference on the part of the strikers. The Grand Trunk Railway officials have procured the assistance of several engine-drivers, employed in the shops and elsewhere, and they are now in readiness; but, unfortunately, the line both east and west is snowed up. Several of the friends and admirers of the strikers were watching the movements of the officials at the depot last evening, and some of them openly expressed their feeling in the matter. When the western train was leaving one man said: "She's off, but she'll not go far." Another said: "If the eastern train gets away, she won't pass Richmond, as there are lots of the 'Brotherhood boys' down there." This is a bad state of affairs, and although no acts of violence occurred here, it is not at all creditable to the parties concerned.

The express from Toronto, due here at 9:30 this morning, was abandoned between Cobourg and Grafton. On this being learned, the passengers were ordered to be conveyed back to Cobourg in sleighs. The driver of a mixed train left it between Gananoque and Kingston; two trains were abandoned between Scarboro and the Don, also the Western Division express. On the eastern section of the road the drivers between Island Pond and Portland have not yet struck, but from Island Pond to Montreal several trains were deserted.

The Western trains were this morning canceled, more on account of the heavy snow than lack of engine-drivers, as the foreman at Point St. Charles has 10 or 12 men ready, and they have been placed under the protection of the Police, an extra force of which has been stationed at the Point. The evening trains will be run after the snow-plows have been over the line. The 10 P. M. train, which left last night for Toronto, stuck at St. Annes, but is now on the way west. The driver on this train did not strike. The train due here from the West at 9:30 P. M., with the English mail and passengers for the Allan steamer, is snowed up at Pointe Claire, and will be relieved soon as the snow-plow special, which left Cornwall at daylight, has passed over the road. The authorities at Stratford, Toronto, Belleville, Brockville, and Montreal have placed Police at the disposal of the company, and the officers believe the worst has passed.

This morning our reporter had an interview at Point St. Charles with several of the engine-drivers who have struck. The spokesmen were men of intelligence and respectability, and said: "We found that the management of the road was dealing unjustly by us and deceiving us, in spite of all we had done to have an amicable settlement of our grievances. Last Tuesday a deputation waited upon Mr. Hickson, asking that the three grades of drivers be retained as per Mr. Wallis' agreement of 1875, but that there should not be a fourth grade, and that members of the brotherhood should not be discharged for belonging to it. Mr. Hickson asked for twenty-four hours to deliberate, but on Wednesday was as far from a conclusion as ever, and in the meantime new drivers were being hired in the United States, and hands who had been discharged from the company's service years before for drunkenness, incompetency, &c., were taken on again. Seeing this, we held a meeting, and resolved, in a body, determined to strike on Friday night, and decided to give the company notice. So last evening a deputation of us waited upon Mr. Hickson about 7 o'clock, and told him that at 9 all the drivers on the road would strike, owing to his refusal to do them justice. We thus acted fairly in giving the company warning, and it was to blame for not notifying the public as well. We do not intend to commit any acts of violence, either on the men who are trying to drive our engines or on the company's property, and do not hold ourselves as a body responsible for individual acts of violence, for sometimes a worm turns when it is trod upon. We only ask to have our just rights guaranteed, and then will return to our work.

One or two engines were running at the Point, with small knots of people gathered at the crossing, looking on; no intimidation had been attempted. The drivers of two engines in the yard had allowed them to freeze up, and they were useless. The result of all this is that great damage has been done to the Grand Trunk property, while the traveling public has been put to great inconvenience and delay. The strikers undoubtedly have grievances, and we believe they are justly entitled to consideration, but the conduct of the ringleaders last night is inexcusable and will be universally condemned by the public.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

The wheelwright and blacksmith shop, No. 148 Hamilton avenue, Brooklyn, owned by George McMahon, and occupied by Daniel Crotty and Thomas Flynn, was totally destroyed by fire at 2 o'clock yesterday morning, together with a large amount of property, involving a loss of about $2,000; insured for $1,000 in the Adriatic Company. Robert McKay, a wheelwright, lost $400 worth of tools, upon which there was an insurance of $700 in the same company. A brick dwelling-house adjoining, also belonging to Mr. McMahon, was damaged $300. James Cassidy, who resided on the second floor, lost $100; not insured. Robert Dillon occupied the first floor as a barber shop. His loss is about $100; not insured.

At a late hour on Saturday night fire broke out in the three-story frame dwelling No. 230 North Seventh street, Brooklyn, E. D. The building was owned and partially occupied by Mrs. Quinn, whose loss is estimated at $500; no insurance. Owen McCarron, who occupied the first floor as a shoe shop and dwelling, lost $600; insured for $500 in the Williamsburg City Insurance Company. The second floor was occupied by Peter Tovey, as a residence, and his loss is put down at $500; not insured.

The ship Harvey Mills, which took fire at Port Royal, S. C., was flooded yesterday morning. The water is coming up through the deck on the lee side. She has a slight list to the starboard side, but is well secured to the dock and the fire is extinguished.

BY MAIL AND TELEGRAPH.

Gov. Grover, of Oregon, passed through Omaha, Neb., yesterday afternoon, en route to Washington via St. Louis.

Sister Mary Basilia, formerly Margaret Duffy, of New-York, died suddenly in the convent at Newport, R. I., yesterday afternoon, of hemorrhage of the lungs.

Welcome Harrington, aged 50 years, was found dead on the railroad, in Smithfield, R. I., on Saturday, having fallen while in an intoxicated condition and perished.

The Board of Directors of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company has adopted a resolution thanking the officers and employes of the company for the faithful manner in which their respective duties have been performed during the past year.

The Reading (Penn.) Times of Saturday says: "Mr. Samuel Rachel and wife, of Rooseon township, have been deeply afflicted during the past week. Three children and one grandchild, all living in the same house, were seized with diphtheria and died one after the other, within three days. The funerals were held at St. John's Church, near Exeter station, Rev. Z. H. Gabel, of this city officiating."

A DISORDERLY HOUSE ON THE BOULEVARD.

Since the opening of the present sleighing season the Boulevard has been daily, and even nightly, thronged with many gay turnouts, and the public houses along the road have done a thriving business. The St. Julien Hotel, situated at Eighty-sixth street and the Boulevard, has been the favorite stopping place of many disreputable men and women, large numbers of whom, it is alleged, remain at the establishment over night and indulge in the most disgusting orgies. It was reported at the Central Office last night that throughout Saturday night and the early hours of the Sabbath the hotel was crowded with men and women, who indulged in the wildest phases of debauchery. At 10 o'clock last night, Superintendent Walling was informed, at his residence, of the disreputable proceedings. He immediately repaired to the Central Office and sent the following dispatch to Capt. Siebert:

To Capt. Siebert, Thirty-first Precinct:

Complaint has been made of a flagrant violation of the excise law which is a disgrace to your precinct. A crowd of disreputable characters are behaving in such a disorderly manner at the St. Julien Hotel, at Eighty-sixth street and the Boulevard, as to excite public comment. You will immediately take a sufficient number of men from your command, make a descent on the place, and arrest all persons found violating the law. G. W. WALLING.

When Capt. Siebert, in obedience to the order of the Superintendent, went to the hotel with a platoon of officers, he found that the revelers, having evidently been apprised of his approach, had fled from the place.

AFFAIRS IN FRANCE.

A CHOCOLATE MAKER'S SUCCESS.

THE FRENCH MINISTER OF FINANCE—HOW HE ACQUIRED HIS WEALTH—A SCENE IN THE CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES—A DOUBLE MURDER IN NICE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Monday, Dec. 11, 1876.

Saturday was a day of agitation and of surprises. In the first place we had the overthrow of the Ministerial combination formed two hours before. M. Duclerc was named Vice President of the Council; M. Bardoux, Garde des Sceaux; Gen. Borel, Minister for War, and the other Ministers remained. This combination was rejected at the beginning of the sitting. The Chamber went on with its discussions of the annual Budget, and M. Ménier entered the tribune. This name is familiar to the eyes of every American who has traveled in Europe. He sees it upon every wall in Paris, in every station throughout France, upon the rocks and trees along the lines of railway, and upon the top of the pyramids, even, he will read in large painted letters, le meilleur chocolat est le chocolat Ménier, "The best chocolate is Ménier's chocolate," and "Buy Ménier's chocolate!" stares one in the face everywhere. It is equal to "Helmbold's Buchu," or "S. T. 1860—X." The famous chocolate manufacturer early caught the American trick of advertising, and the result was a fortune rapidly amassed. He is now very rich. When the Republic came, the millionaire chocolate maker began to grow ambitious. His success in business gave him the idea that he was one of the ablest financiers of the day, and this led to an attack of cocoethis scribendi. All the papers in the city received articles from his pen, which were all refused. But presently these articles began to appear; M. Ménier had found a golden key to the columns of the papers, and although his mania for writing cost him dearly, he had money enough to indulge himself in any luxury. Naturally, M. Ménier then began to be courted by all the needy journalists in the city, who were ever ready to praise his ideas and encourage his ambition. He bought a piece of land at the corner of the Parc Monceaux, and built a house upon it that cost him several millions. He then began to give dinners and sumptuous entertainments, and, last year, his ball was very popular, quite as much so as those of Arsène Houssaye. And then M. Ménier's writings began to appear in pamphlet form. He has published a number of them since.

This is a rapid sketch of a self-made man, uneducated and vain of himself like most of the class, who has now entered political life, and dreams of the day when he shall have the portfolio of the Minister of Finances. His hobby is direct taxation, or the taxation of acquired property, and his last pamphlet is entitled L'Impot sur le Capital. M. Ménier first got elected to the Municipal Council of Paris, and from an Alderman rose to the rank of a Deputy in the last general elections. On Saturday he ascended the tribune to defend his financial ideas, and read a long speech which he had prepared. Throughout there were smiles and ironic interruptions, and when M. Ménier spoke of taxes imposed upon "articles that deteriorate," Paul de Cassagnac cried, "Like your cocoa for example." M. Ménier responded promptly: "The gentleman wishes to reproach me with my trade. His uncle used my chocolate, and owes me a great deal of money; if the nephew will only pay the debt—" "You are a grossier personage!" shouted De Cassagnac in rage. M. Grévy interposed and said that he could not tolerate such language. M. Ménier had been several times reproached for his trade, and while that did not justify his remark to M. De Cassagnac, it certainly offered a certain excuse. In the meantime several members took the matter up, hurling insults and sarcasms at the orator, and half the members rose from their seats, the Left taking the part of M. Ménier, and replying sharply to their colleagues of the Right. There was great excitement for a few moments, but it was soon quelled by a new and unexpected incident. A man rose in one of the galleries, and waving his hand in air, cried, "Vive la France! vive Napoleon IV.!" The Deputiés were silent in a moment, and the huissiers rushed to the gallery to arrest the individual. His reply when questioned was, that for the past two weeks he had had an irresistible desire to cry something in the Chambers, and profited by this occasion to relieve his mind. He was placed at the disposition of the Police, who very soon saw that they had to do with a lunatic, or at least with a man having a whole swarm of "bees in his bonnet."

The rue Beaulieu, at Nice, has just been the scene of a drama not uncommon in southern latitudes. The Countess Laura Erdendy de Kereck was assassinated by a former lover, an Italian named Mastelloni. The Countess Laura was the descendant of an old Hungarian family, and one of the best in the country. Upon the death of her husband, Count de Kereck, she came to Nice, and has since lived there modestly upon an income of about $4,000 a year. The Countess Laura, aged about 33 or 34, was a woman of fine personal appearance, and bore an excellent character. She was charitable to the poor, and beloved by her circle of friends. Some two years ago she made the acquaintance of Mastelloni, who began paying his attentions to her, and promised her marriage. During their engagement she gave him money, and had furnished him considerable sums at various times, all of which he had lost at Monaco or in speculations. Seeing that Mastelloni put off the fulfillment of his marriage promise upon various pretexts, the Countess ceased to give him money, and for some time he remained away from her. A few evenings ago he came back, and dined in company with a few friends, and during the evening renewed his demands for more money. The Countess refused to give it to him and told her femme de chambre to refuse him admittance to the house if he came again. Masteloni was not long in presenting himself, late at night, and when the servant refused, he pushed by her brusquely, and rushed into the chamber of the Countess, turning the key in the lock. The servant girl tried to open the door, fearing the worst from the manner of Mastelloni, and heard him renew his demand for money. The Countess ordered him to leave her room at once and tried to get to the door, but from the noise the girl knew that he pushed her back so rudely that she fell upon a chair. At the same moment there was a pistol report. The girl broke the glass in the door, wounding her hand severely, and reaching through turned the key in the door. As she did so there was another report, and Mastelloni fell upon the floor. The Countess Laura was shot through the head, and a glance sufficed to show that the wound was mortal, although she was still breathing. Mastelloni had placed the barrel of the pistol in his mouth, and the ball lodged in his brain. He was a strong, robust man, of magnificent personal appearance, and lived for some hours after this tragic event, though unconscious. It seems that Mastelloni was a mauvais sujet, though he had managed with the money of the Countess to get into good society, and had lost money at play which he was unable to pay.

PANIC IN A CHURCH.

The Milwaukee (Wis.) Sentinel of Dec. 29 says: "Last Sunday night a fearful disaster came near taking place in the St. Mary's Catholic Church at Oshkosh. The light drapery with which the altar was trimmed by some accident caught fire, which filled the church with flame and smoke in an instant. The large audience immediately became panic-stricken, and made a rush for the door, which at the time was closed, and the excited people crowding and jamming against the door it was utterly impossible to get it open. The flames were quickly extinguished by Mr. Schmidt before much damage was done, and the congregation quieted."

MONDAY, Jan. 1—A. M.

The statement of the Associated Banks, issued from the Clearing-house on Saturday last, shows a gain of $5,389,900 in the specie average, which reflects the Treasury disbursements for interest and the continued arrivals of specie from abroad. There is an increase of $6,290,400 in deposits, which indicates that country bank-notes are flowing to this centre. The other changes are an increase of $644,600 in loans, and $130,900 in circulation, and a decrease of $571,800 in legal tenders. The various changes result in an increase of $3,245,500 in surplus reserve, and the banks now hold $14,909,525 in excess of legal requirements.

The following shows the condition of the banks on Saturday last, as compared with the previous statement, and with the statement for the corresponding week last year:

	Dec. 23.	Dec. 30.	Dec. 31, 1875.
Loans	$262,634,000	$263,328,600	$264,062,500
Specie	27,659,300	33,049,700	20,233,300

Specie	$27,659,800	$33,049,700	Inc. $5,389,900
Legal tenders	34,546,900	34,975,100	Dec. 571,800
Total reserve	$63,206,700	$68,024,800	Inc. $4,818,100
Excess of res've above legal requirements	11,664,025	14,909,525	Inc. $3,245,500

In the money market the bulk of the business was transacted at 5@7 ₱ cent. It is but reasonable to expect that when the demand from banking, insurance, and other corporations which at present exists shall have ceased lower rates will prevail, more particularly as there is little likelihood for some time of any speculative movement which would tend to create any artificial stringency. In the discount market the offerings were very limited, and the rates for prime commercial paper ruled at 5@6½ ₱ cent.

The foreign advices reported a firm market for British Consols and United States bonds. The strong tone of the London market for securities at the close of the week may be fairly regarded as indicating that in the opinion of the financial community of that centre, the negotiations now in progress for the settlement of the Eastern question are likely to have a peaceful issue. The Bank of England lost £411,000 on balance for the week ending Wednesday last, but no change was made in the rate of discount, which continues at 2 ₱ cent. The Bank of France lost 682,000 francs during the week.

Sterling exchange ruled stronger at an advance in rates, but there was little or no business doing. At the close transactions were effected at $4 83½ for long, and $4 85@$4 85½ for demand bills.

The gold market, under the influence of the Treasury disbursements, was weak and lower, and the price touched 107, with final transactions at a recovery of only ⅛ ₱ cent. The more conservative element of Wall street look for a still further decline in the gold premium, in view of the very satisfactory condition of our foreign trade and our excellent credit abroad, the only element of doubt in their calculations being the possibility of civil disturbance that might follow any attempt to prevent the peaceable inauguration of President Hayes. This, however, is a contingency which, judging from present appearances, is not likely to occur.

The disbursements of January interest by the Treasury stimulated the demand for Government bonds, and considerable amounts were taken for the account of corporations and individual capitalists. Early in the week prices declined slightly, in sympathy with gold, but a recovery afterward ensued, and the market closed strong, with an upward tendency. Railroad mortgages were in better demand for investment, and the market late in the week displayed great firmness, the Western issues being taken freely. Purchases are being made partly on the expectation that the January disbursements will cause a further improvement in prices. State bonds were quiet, with Tennessees as the feature. These recorded an advance of 1@3 ₱ cent. District of Columbia 3.65s advanced 1 ₱ cent. The highest quotations were current at the close.

The stock market was dull and depressed, the influences affecting speculation having been the reported disagreement between the freight agents at the conference held to make arrangements for carrying out the settlement agreed upon by the representatives of the trunk lines, and the general disappointment created among speculators by the small dividend declared by the Lake Shore Railroad Company. The weakest stocks on the list were New-York Central, Lake Shore, Michigan Central, and Illinois Central. The Granger shares were depressed, with the exception of Rock Island, which exhibited a firm tone. Western Union was adversely affected by the announcement of the reductions made by the Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph Company to important points South and West, and declined to 70¾, closing at 70⅞. The coal stocks were firm, and prices were maintained.

The aspect of affairs in speculative circles at the close of the year does not, it must be admitted, present much ground for felicitation, and it requires rather a sanguine temperament to expect any radical change for the better in the immediate future. It is, however, to be earnestly hoped that when the political troubles shall have ceased, business will once more revive and a new era of prosperity dawn upon the country.

OF THE

CITY OF CINCINNATI.

SEALED PROPOSALS WILL BE RECEIVED AT THE AMERICAN EXCHANGE NATIONAL BANK, BY THE UNDERSIGNED, AS AGENTS FOR THE PROPER AUTHORITIES OF SAME UNTIL

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 10, 1877,

AT 2 O'CLOCK P. M., for the whole or any part of the sum of $2,800,000, MUNICIPAL BONDS OF THE CITY OF CINCINNATI, as authorized by an act of the Legislature of the State of Ohio, entitled "an act relating to cities of the first class having a population exceeding one hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants," passed May 4, 1869, and "an act supplementary thereto," passed Feb. 24, 1876, a vote of the people of the CITY OF CINCINNATI, and a resolution of the City Council as prescribed by the said act.

SAID BONDS WILL BEAR INTEREST AT THE RATE OF 7 3-10 PER CENT. PER ANNUM, PAYABLE ON THE 1ST DAY OF MAY AND NOVEMBER IN EACH YEAR, AND THE PRINCIPAL WILL BECOME DUE IN 1906, BOTH PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST BEING PAYABLE AT THE AMERICAN EXCHANGE NATIONAL BANK IN NEW-YORK.

Each proposal should be sealed and indorsed:

"PROPOSALS FOR 7 3-10 PER CENT. BONDS OF THE CITY OF CINCINNATI," AND INCLOSED IN A SECOND ENVELOPE ADDRESSED TO THE AMERICAN EXCHANGE NATIONAL BANK OF NEW-YORK.

The right is reserved on the part of the undersigned to reject any or all of the bids, if, in their judgment, the interests of the city require it.

AWARDS WILL BE MADE ON JAN. 11.

THE CIRCASSIAN WRECK.

NONE OF THE BODIES RECOVERED.

THE FRUITLESS SEARCH FOR THE BODIES OF THE DROWNED MEN ON BRIDGEHAMPTON BEACH—ADDITIONAL PARTICULARS OF THE BREAKING UP OF THE SHIP—THE GREAT LOSS OF SHINNECOCK VILLAGE—NEARLY ALL THE ABLE-BODIED MEN OF THE TRIBE AMONG THE VICTIMS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BRIDGEHAMPTON, Long Island, Dec. 31.—The sun rose brightly to-day over the wreck of the ship Circassian, but it brought no cheer to the homes of the bereaved families at Southampton and Shinnecock Neck. The search for the bodies of the drowned men was kept up all night long, from Station No. 10, about two miles away from this village, as far down the coast as Montauk, 30 miles distant, but no bodies were found on the beach. A visit was made to the scene of the wreck early in the morning. The wind blew icily from the west, whirling the sand and gravel furiously about, and making travel on the exposed country roads or along the beach exceedingly uncomfortable. The Life-saving Station is a little shed, propped up on the sand, under the shelter of one of the low hills that extend along the beach. It has been filled all day with the men of the Life-saving Service, and Capt. Henry Hunting was among them most of the time, directing preparations for a search of the wreck, which is to be made as soon as the condition of the water will permit. A low tide and smooth sea will be necessary to a successful prosecution of the search for the dead, and under the most favorable circumstances, it is not probable, Capt. Hunting says, that any of the bodies will be found on board. All hands had been driven into the rigging when the ship broke up. None of them had lashed themselves to the wreck, fearing that they would be carried down if she sank, and be surely drowned, while as long as they kept free there was hope of rescue from the shore, or the chance of swimming if they were washed overboard. Capt. Hunting has been Superintendent of the Life-saving Service on this shore for seven years, and for 19 years before that a seaman, yet he says that neither he nor any of the surfmen here about ever saw a more tempestuous night on the coast than that of Friday, the 29th.

THE STORY OF THE WRECK.

The Circassian was not in the position on Saturday morning that she had occupied when she first stranded. During Friday night, when the cables were slipped, the vessel pounded along the bar, instead of coming on the beach, as was evidently expected, and the height of the gale found her about a quarter of a mile west of her first position, with her bow well over the bar, pointing south, and her stern floating in 20 feet of water. When the sea rose, the men retreated to what they considered the safest part of the vessel—the stern—which was nearest the shore. The men of the Life-saving Station took position a little west of the ship, and nearly opposite to her, and by the use of night glasses, as she was but 1,400 feet distant, they could see the men in the rigging, and with the naked eye saw lights passing backward and forward until 2 o'clock. The water rose so high that the same surf broke three-quarters of a mile out from the shore, and the spaces between the sand-hills were flooded so that the men on shore were obliged to wade knee-deep through the pools of water to cross them. Charles Campbell, the rescued wrecker, who sat in the little crowded room of the Life-saving Station this morning, quite recovered from his perilous trip from the ship to the shore, said that even at 7 o'clock no fear was felt for the safety of the ship. At 8:30 all hands had gone aft, when there came an overwhelming sea that raised the ship bodily. She settled with an ominous plunge, and the mainmast went by the board, snapping off like a pipe-stem. The mortar was now fired from the shore, its shot falling short. All hands were still hopeful, but some were becoming numb with wet and cold. The Shinnecock men prayed and cheered each other with hymns that could be heard on shore. At first the foretop was considered the safest place of retreat, and some of the men hid beneath the lee quarter of the vessel to escape the drenching waves and pouring rain. Another shot was fired from the mortar, but again the line fell short. It was fired a third time without success, when all attempts to use it were given up. The ship was two lengths farther away than when she struck on the 11th, and the tide was so high that the mortar had to be planted 80 feet higher up on the beach than it was when used before to aid the vessel. When the wind veered at midnight the sea rose still higher and each wave that rolled in pounded heavily upon the exposed deck and hull. Then the men crowded up into the mizzen rigging, feeling sure that it was the safest part of the ship. The Shinnecock men again raised their voices in hymns and prayers for relief. The apprentice boys cried piteously for help, so that above the whistling of the wind, the sounds were carried to the beach. At 4:30 a great wave lifted the ship; then she settled again. A crack and crash followed; the mizzen mast and the hull abaft the main hatch sank with its freight of human beings beneath the water, and the forward part dropped over, with the bow entirely submerged. Campbell, Morrell, and Rowlands had from the first determined to get ashore. They carried a life-boat buoy into the mizzen-top, where they fastened themselves to it, so that each would have an arm free if they were cast overboard. When the crash came they sprang off. Campbell found himself with his companions in the midst of the struggling and drowning crew. John McWalker, one of the Shinnecock men, was seen to leap over the taffrail just as the crash occurred, but he sank in the swirling eddy and was seen no more. With their arms and legs wound together to steady the buoy the three men made strenuous efforts to swim toward shore. Campbell at this time was grasped by the neck in the desperate grip of Alexander Wilson, the carpenter, and fearing that both would sink he obeyed the instinct of self-preservation and endeavored to cast him off. He could not get rid of him, as Wilson was dragged up to the buoy and made fast by a hind becket. The tide and wind favored the four men, and they were thrown upon the shore, and all but Campbell spent the night in the house of Thomas Cooper, near the station.

THE STRICKEN SHINNECOCK VILLAGE.

The most melancholy development of this disaster is the affliction and suffering that are visited upon the families and relatives at Shinnecock Neck. To-day the men and women spent hours along the bleak shore, seeking for the bodies of the lost, coming occasionally to the station to ascertain if any of the dead had been found. The New Year will bring no joy to these families. Thirty-two persons were directly dependent upon the labors of the 10 men drowned. They were about the only able-bodied persons of the community of two or three hundred remaining at home. The three Cuffees were cousins, and two were married and had three and four children each. Oliver Killes leaves a widow, but no children. His brother, Andrew, left the wreck a week ago to go on a whaling voyage, and another brother has spent two days searching along the beach for the third member of the family. John Walker was 50 years of age, a tall, fine, strong fellow. He leaves a widow and eight children. He is well known to Summer visitors to the neighborhood of Southampton, and had won a wide reputation as a caterer at clam bakes for picnic parties. His brother David, also married, but having no children, perished with him. The three Bunns, Frank, David, and Russells, were cousins, all married, and the first leaving a widow and the last two widows, and respectively six and three children. Robert Lee was married, but had no children. The news of the disaster was broken first in Shinnecock village by a man named Herrick, who came with the announcement to James Bunn, the father of David Bunn, one of the lost, at 9 o'clock on Saturday morning. The grief of the stricken people was dreadful; not a home but was afflicted, so intimately are all those people related to each other, and not a family could bear the loss of one of its bread-winners. The men had gone away two weeks before, and none of them had visited their homes, although they were only 10 miles distant, since beginning work on the Circassian. Rev. Mr. Whittaker, in the Presbyterian Church, and Rev. Mr. McGuire, in the Methodist Church, referred during their services to the calamity, and it was announced that collections would be made next Sunday for the relief of the Shinnecock sufferers.

Alexander Wilson, the carpenter, who was saved, was out on the beach to-day, having recovered rapidly, and was collecting his kit, preparatory to starting for New-York, whence he will sail to his home in Birkenhead, England. Capt. Lewis, who had charge of the coast-wrecking party, took the Circassian off the New-Jersey coast several years ago when she was a steamer. Capt. Hunting advised him on Friday to keep a line out between the ship and shore until the Circassian was safely over the bar. He laughed and declined to take the precaution, feeling confident of his power to take her over the bar in a day or two. Capt. Williams, although urged to leave the ship and take his men to New-York, stuck to her from a feeling of pride that led him to stand by her until she was safe in port. The three apprentice boys of the Circassian were bright little fellows, all carefully prepared in English nautical schools, and the term of Frank Wright's apprenticeship had closed on the 23d of December. Messengers are built out along the beach toward Montauk, with instructions to report as soon as one body is found, when an inquest will be held. The broken hull of the vessel lies with the foremast leaning over to the east, so that the yards are washed by the surf and the masts, rigging, and hull are covered with sheets of ice. The wind is increasing, blowing almost a gale, and it is not improbable that during the night the waves will tear to pieces all that may now be seen of the ill-fated Circassian.

THE DROWNED WRECKERS.

Capt. John Lewis, the foreman of the wreckers in charge of the Circassian at the time of her going to pieces, was a young man of great promise in his profession. Born on the lower Jersey coast he early acquired a taste for braving the dangers of the sea, and while a mere lad he went on a voyage in an East Indian, and has ever since been a toiler of the deep in one capacity or another. About six years ago he went to Port Huron, Mich., where he followed the business of coast-wrecker for two years, after which he came to New-York and entered the service of the Coast Wrecking Company of this City, remaining steadily in their employ down to the hour of his death. He was unmarried.

Luke Stillman, one of the engineers, who was also a victim of the wreck, was a married man and had a large family, who are now left in very straightened circumstances. He was one of the oldest wrecking engineers in the employ of the company, was a man of large experience, and enjoyed the entire confidence of his employers.

Patrick Donohue, another engineer, lived at Stapleton, Staten Island, and it is understood had a wife and two or three children. He, too, was an old hand whose services were held in high esteem by the company.

Philip Kearns, the other engineer, was a young unmarried man, and had been in the employ of the company but a short time. The wreckers who were lost, a complete list of whom appeared in THE TIMES of yesterday, were all men hired on the beach in the vicinity of the wreck. None of them were residents of this City or Brooklyn.

A LONG ISLAND SCHOONER WRECKED.

The schooner Ann E. Carll, of Northport, Long Island, has been reported as having been wrecked on Largo Key, south coast of Cuba. Capt. Tyler, her commander, reached his home in that village last week, and reported that they were making a very quick passage when a hurricane struck the vessel. She was driven at its mercy for four days, and on the fifth, after beating over the coral reefs, she was forced hard aground on this key—a small desolate sand island about 60 miles from the mainland, and out of the usual track of vessels. Soon after the Carll had thus been wrecked her crew were the fortunate means of saving a Spanish and an English crew, whose vessels had gone to pieces; and Capt. Tyler, finding that he had to divide his scanty store of provisions with these brothers in misfortune—there being now 35 persons on the island—and that starvation would soon be staring them in the face, sent his mate and one seaman in a boat to Cienfuegos, about 100 miles distant, with instructions to ask assistance from the United States Consul at Havana. On hearing the facts, the Spanish Government as soon as possible sent a gun-boat with provisions for the relief of the shipwrecked crews, who were found in an almost famished condition. The mate chartered in Havana the bark Perces Hinkley, in which to ship such part of the crew as might be saved from the wreck to this City. They had a very rough voyage, which consumed 38 days, when they put in at Hatteras Inlet, with all sails blown away, and all on board being nearly starved, having for eight days been on short allowance of biscuit and water. The schooner had been wrecked on two previous occasions, once off Norfolk, Va., and once on Block Island. Jesse Carll, of Northport, who owned about one-half of the vessel, lost about $7,000 on which he had but little insurance.

ROUGH WEATHER AT SEA.

The ship Alice Minott, of Bath, Me., Capt. Whitmore, arrived in this port last Saturday, after a voyage of 133 days from Lobos de Tierra, via Hampton Roads, during which she sustained very severe weather. During the prevalence of a gale in the South Atlantic, her rudder-head was twisted and her topsails were blown away. After the ship had crossed the equator, she encountered a hurricane, which disabled her rudder and carried away her lower topsails. Shortly after leaving Hampton Roads, the ship became unmanageable and was obliged to put back. She started again on Dec. 27, in tow of the tug Richmond. A succession of gales made it necessary to put away from the starboard tack 29 times, and was made for Barnegat, and the ship came to anchor under the Highlands at 4 A. M. on the next day.

BUTTER FROM THAMES RIVER MUD.

A CURIOUS EXPERIMENT WHICH WAS UNSUCCESSFUL—THE BEST OR THE WORST THAT CAN BE DONE WITH WASTE FAT.

From the Sanitary Record.

A few weeks ago an article with the above heading appeared in one of the daily papers, leading the public to believe that the fabrication of "mild Dorset" or "best Brittany" from the fatty matter contained in Thames River mud was actually carried on, and constituted a systematic and profitable industry. It was stated that on the Essex and north shore of the river, from Dagenham downward, "mudlarks" are found low water, with basket on back and hook in hand, busily engaged in collecting Thames fat, and we were assured that these "mudlarks" are commissioned by London manufacturers to collect this "dainty treasure trove" in the interests of our metropolitan butter supply. The raw material which these "mudlarks" were said to collect was described to consist of balls, varying in size from a walnut to that of a cricket-ball. Each ball, which was stated to consist of fat, with a cork for its nucleus, was described as being of a slate color without, and almost white within. The cork was first enveloped in a mass of matted hair and woody fibre, and upon this the fat had collected, and the ball floated up and down the river until it was left by the receding tide upon the bank. The fatty matter which formed the outer crust of the balls, although largely purified by nature's refining process, was not considered sufficiently pure for the fastidious taste of the consumers of "best Brittany," and had to be subjected to successive boilings and various processes before it was fit to be made up into salt and fresh butter for distribution to the public. The manufacture of butter from Thames mud has often been a matter of common remark, but we need hardly say that the story has been generally regarded as devoid of any foundation. When, however, we read the recent article on the subject, and found the matter revived in an authenticated form, we naturally felt curious to visit the spot and investigate the alleged Thames mud-butter industry for ourselves. On visiting the place indicated we found four men, provided with long poles and nets affixed to the ends of them, engaged in collecting portions of the materials floating on the water at the outlet of the North Metropolitan Sewage Works. The men were in boats, moored so as to lie across a series of channels through which the sewage passes into the river, and we were informed that the time of collecting is limited to about an hour and a half during the flow of the tide. The materials as collected were stored in the boats, and they presented a most uninviting appearance, consisting of a great variety of articles, such as matted hair, bits of wood, pieces of matches and straw, tarry matter, and a fair sprinkling of particles of fat. After each skimming operation the boats with their contents are taken to small barges, where there are appliances for extracting and purifying the fat. We obtained samples of the materials from the men, and afterward operated upon them to extract the fat with a view to determine how far it was practicable to purify the fat so as to render it fit for use in the manufacture of butter as alleged. We subjected it to various purifying processes, but completely failed in rendering the fat bright and free from offensive and disgusting odor, and we can have no hesitation in assuring the public that there need not be the least apprehension of their breakfast-table being supplied with "best Brittany" manufactured from fat recovered from Thames mud. That the refuse fat from the millions of kitchens in London, and contained in the sewage discharged into the Thames near Barking Creek, may in part be recovered and utilized, is beyond a question of doubt, but it is equally certain that the fat so recovered can only be purified to such an extent as to fit it for use in the manufacture of the most common kinds of soap and dip candles. There are no arrangements on the south side of the Thames for collecting the fat at the outlet of the South Metropolitan sewage, but it appears that the fat discharged into the river on that side is so largely contaminated with tarry matters from paraffin and other works, that the difficulty of purifying it is so great as to render its collection commercially unremunerative. We obtained a sample of the balls referred to in the article of which we have spoken, and, as stated, they have a cork or bung for their nucleus, and are left on the banks at high-water mark by the receding tide, but they contain such a small proportion of fat that they are but little sought after. These balls, which are found in the neighborhood of the sewage outlets on both sides of the river, are not white in the interior, as represented, but dark throughout, and are chiefly composed of matters other than fat. We hope we shall hear no more sensational statements as to the fabrication of "mild Dorset" or "best Brittany" from the fat of Thames mud, and that the fact of the praiseworthy collection and utilization of the waste fat from our kitchens conveyed in the sewage to the Thames will no longer be unfairly employed to excite and alarm the public mind.

THE TWO-MILE RACE IN CALIFORNIA.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 31.—The two-mile and repeat race took place yesterday at the Bay District Park for $2,000. The weather was fine, but the track too soft for fast time. Amanda won easily in two straight heats; Mattie coming in second, Overland third, and Target fourth. Time, 3:39¾ and 3:41¾.

THE GLAD NEW YEAR.

HOW THE FIRST DAY OF 1877 WILL BE OBSERVED IN NEW-YORK.

THE COMING OF THE NEW YEAR HAILED WITH DELIGHT BY ALL CLASSES OF PEOPLE—A HARBINGER OF BETTER TIMES—NEW YEAR'S CALLS—CELEBRATIONS IN THE CHURCHES AND CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

To-day the "glad New Year" of 1877 will be ushered in with the usual commingling of ceremony and gayety, tempered a little perhaps by the recollection of the terrible disasters with which its predecessor has signalized its exit. Close upon the heels of the Brooklyn calamity of Dec. 5, comes the frightful railway massacre of last Friday, together with the heavy loss of life at the wreck of the ill-fated Circassian—a series of disasters such as are rarely crowded into the last 30 days of an ordinary twelvemonth. Now, however, that 1876 is gone, people are disposed to let the doubt, despondency, and disaster of its last hours go with it. To-day, New-York, clothed in its best, surrounded with good cheer, and bidding a long farewell to the past, turns its face to the future with renewed hope and confidence. To most of the business people it cannot be said to bring harbingers of immediate prosperity. The stagnation of the past five years has not been recently ruffled by the breeze of returning confidence and activity, but to most of our merchants and business men, even the change implied in entering upon a new year brings with it some anticipation of better times. A period of contraction is not a period of money-breeding in any age or clime, and the sooner this axiom is accepted, the more readily will the world of trade accommodate itself to the present and prospective order of things. New Year's, in mercantile circles, is a time for balancing accounts, reducing expenses, and effecting business changes. Tradesmen take account of their stock, and manufacturers of their raw material and goods. In this portion of the community the day assumes a rigidly business aspect. It is in the world of society and fashion that New Year's has its most ardent devotees, and that its observance assumes its more ceremonial and impressive character. From the days of the old Knickerbockers, with their latch-strings hanging out and their store of good cheer within, New-York has been peculiarly devoted to the commemoration of New Year's. There was a time, not so distant, when the day received but scant recognition amid the good Puritans and Quakers on either side of us, and when New Year's hospitality was only thought to be enjoyed to perfection on Manhattan Island. Of late years neighboring cities have studied the ways of the Metropolis in this respect to such purpose that in many particulars they have reproduced the Metropolitan festival with praise worthy fidelity, but still they all lack a local smack and flavor only to be found within the boundaries of modern Gotham.

It is almost needless to say that to-day will be observed with all the usual accompaniments, as far as New-York is concerned. From 10 o'clock in the morning until midnight the rattle of hundreds of cab-wheels will testify to the presence of the "gilded youth" of the Metropolis in such numbers as only the "red-letter" days and highest carnivals of fashion draw out. The whole of the space embraced between Fourteenth and Fifty-ninth streets and Third and Sixth avennes, and otherwise known as the "magic parallelogram," will be traversed and retraversed by rival "society men" engaged in the arduous struggle to eclipse each other in the number of calls made. Savory edibles of all kinds will tempt the wayfarer from hundreds of attractive sideboards, and happy he who confines his attention to the culinary department of the host's hospitality. He may not be as jolly toward the small hours as the rest of his brethren, but he will be pretty sure to walk straight and talk in a distinguishable tone of voice, which is much better. It will not do, however, to be too puritanical, and "a little here and a little there," if taken with judgment and moderation, need neither becloud the caller's faculties, nor unsteady his gait. A few years ago, a strong effort was made to banish all stimulants from the New Year's tables, but it was speedily found that the descendants of the Knickerbockers had not yet arrived at that pitch of teetotalism, and accordingly a certain degree of toleration has been conceded—enough to take the crust off the cold weather," as the Chimney-corner would say. Pastry cooks, wine-merchants, fruit dealers, and other branches of retail trade have been laid under extensive contribution to supply the wherewithal for making the day a happy one, as far as the inner man goes, and the tailor and the livery stable keeper may be relied upon to supply the rest.

In the Episcopal and Roman Catholic Churches New-Year's is known as the Feast of the Circumcision, and will be celebrated by the usual services for that occasion. At Trinity, Grace, St. Thomas', St. Patrick's Cathedral, St. Francis Xavier, and other leading churches in the City, morning service will be held at the usual hours. The day will also be observed at several of the up-town hospitals and other charitable institutions. The Department of Charities and Correction have made no preparations in behalf of the inmates of the various institutions under their charge in this City and on Blackwell's Island. There is no doubt that many of these people would gladly enjoy making New-Year's calls, but the uncertainty as to their ultimate return is so great as to preclude any such arrangement. In lieu of New-Year's calls the prisoners of Blackwell's Island will be given pies and cakes with their daily fare.

The Children's Aid Society, the Five Points Mission, Five Points House of Industry, the Newsboys' Lodging-house, and other charitable institutions, have made no provision for celebrating the day.

At the City Hall the Mayor-elect and other newly-chosen officials will take the oath of office. At the Court-house at an old-time "spread" will be furnished by County Clerk Gumbleton, at which the politains of all parties are expected to be present in goodly numbers.

The Court-house, City Hall, Custom-house, Sub-Treasury, and all public buildings will be closed during the day, and no business transacted beyond such as is of an absolutely necessary character. The Post Office will be closed after 10 A. M. All the wholesale branches of business down town, and most of the retail trade up town, will be suspended, and the stores and places of business closed.

RINGING THE OLD YEAR OUT AND THE NEW YEAR IN.

The custom of ringing the old year out and the new year in on the chimes of the church-bells was observed last night at Trinity and Grace Churches. At Trinity Church an immense throng of people was in attendance, completely choking up Broadway for squares away, and extending far down into Wall street. The night was beautiful, the moon beaming down from a cloudless sky, and the air just cold and clear enough to bring out the crisp notes of the bells. The ringing began at 11:40 o'clock, and continued for about an hour, with a short cessation while the solemn strokes of the belfry clock marked the division between 1876 and 1877. Throughout that hour the thousands of men, women, and children representing all classes of New-York society, from the poorest to the richest, stood quietly enjoying the glorious night and the ringing of the bells. Mr. James E. Ayliffe was the chief bell-ringer, and he was assisted by Mr. William Thirwald. The first notes that broke the solemn stillness of the night were those jangling peals which come of ringing the changes on all the bells in the tower. Then came that sweet, simple melody of "The Evening Bells." After that came the other selections, the ante-midnight music closing with the merry notes of the carol, "Christmas bells are pealing." When the last stroke of the old year had been told and the new year had begun its race, the bell-ringer sent out from the tower the solemn notes of "Old Hundred." Scores of people joined their voices, and to the accompaniment of the bells sang loudly and impressively the words of the hymn, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." The effect of this sombre old hymn upon the people was still at its height when came the salutation from the bells, "A Happy New Year to Thee." After that was the patriotic air "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean." It was nearly 1 o'clock when the programme ended with the singing of "Home, Sweet Home." Following is a complete programme of the music rung from the Trinity chimes:

BEFORE MIDNIGHT.

1. Ringing the changes on eight bells.
2. Evening bells.
3. Praise the Lord, ye heavens adore him.
4. Angels from the realms of glory.
5. Christmas bells are pealing.

AFTER MIDNIGHT.

6. Old Hundred.
7. Happy New-Year to Thee.
8. Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean.
9. Scotch melody from Guy Mannering.
10. Merrily Ring the Trinity Bells.
11. My Lodging is on the Cold Ground.
12. Silver Star.
13. Last Rose of Summer.
14. Let the Merry Church Bells Ring.
15. Spanish melody.
16. Melody from "Oberon," by Von Weber.
17. I tell it With Joy.
18. Welcome the New Year.
19. Yankee Doodle.
20. Home, Sweet Home.

The chimes at Grace Church that welcomed in the New Year were listened to by an assemblage that took up the greater part of Broadway from Ninth to Eleventh streets. The crowds were jolly, and though numerous practical jokes were played, there was really no indecorous behavior. The ringing of the chimes was begun at 10 minutes before midnight with the "Ein Festburgh." "Nearer my God to Thee," was then played, and upon the stroke of midnight some miscellaneous sacred tunes were begun. Changes on the bells were then rung, after which the following programme was performed:

1. "Song of Liberty."
2. "Bonny Doon." "Old Folks at Home."
3. Selection—"Child of the Regiment."
4. "Vive l'American."
5. "Home, Sweet Home."
6. "Yankee Doodle."

NEW YEAR'S DAY IN BROOKLYN.

New Year's Day will be observed in Brooklyn, as usual, in the most elaborate manner. There were the usual "watch-meeting" services at the various churches, with the customary hand-shaking, and congratulations at 12 o'clock midnight. At that hour, also, the bells pealed forth a silvery welcome to the new-born year. New Year's callers will be received during the day and evening by the various city officials and also by most of the clergymen and prominent citizens of the city.

PULPIT UTTERANCES.

SERMON BY REV. DR. BELLOWS AT ALL SOULS' CHURCH.

Rev. Dr. Bellows preached last evening in All Souls' Church, taking his text from the 6th verse of the seventeenth chapter of Judges. The preacher explained the theocratic form of government under which the Jewish people lived in the times of Moses, Joshua, and Samuel, elaborating upon the peculiar advantages and blessings to be derived from such a government when its existence was possible, and pointing out the cause or causes which led to its abolition among the Jews. There were the growth of crime and lawlessness and a general disregard for the lives and property of the people by the people themselves, rendering an arbitrary government absolutely necessary for the preservation of the nation. This state of general lawlessness among the Jews was the result of their unprecedented prosperity, and Dr. Bellows argued that the tendency of the American people at the present day was toward a state of affairs exactly similar to that in which the Jews found themselves a few years after Samuel, at their behest, had placed Saul as a ruler over them. Does any one suppose, he asked, that if the fraud, the peculation, the all-manner of vice and dishonesty that have crept into, and have been practiced by, our legislative bodies during the last 25 years continues 50 years longer, the American Republic will be in existence? Our people are becoming more dangerous than were the hundred tyrants of Athens—they are forty million tyrants. He did not despair of the Republic, but held that unless a better regard for the laws was ingrafted into the minds of the people, another Cromwell would surely rise up to save the nation from utter ruin and at the same time plant a monarchy upon our soil.

SERMON BY REV. DR. E. H. CHAPIN, AT THE CHURCH OF THE DIVINE PATERNITY.

Rev. Dr. E. H. Chapin did not preach a formal sermon yesterday morning, but made some general remarks upon the text: "So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts with wisdom."—Psalms xc.: 12. This ninetieth psalm some had regarded as a doleful poem. It had been frequently spoken of as the "great funeral hymn of the world." But to him it did not seem doleful. He should object to the name given it, and should call it the "great life hymn of the world." There were periods in every man's life when this psalm enchanted his heart and found expression on his lips. The New-Year's season was a time which especially seemed to suggest the numbering of one's days. To everybody the injunction of the text, "Number thy days," was applicable, but there were two classes to which it seemed to be particularly directed. The first class comprised those who viewed life lightly; men whose actions were reflected in their frequent speech. "Life is short; let us make the best of it." But these people did not make the best of their lives. Their theory was epicurian. The other class comprised those who made life quite as much a cipher in another way, namely, by taking an overdespondding view of it. Both classes acted upon a false materialistic level. This habit of looking at life despondingly was often mistakenly regarded as an exhibition of religious feeling. On the contrary it was an evidence of skepticism. It was bound to create a reckless spirit, just as the despair which came over men in the midst of unfulfilled reality was apt to make them meet their deaths with jeers and jibes and profanity. The year that was closing was what might be called a gloomy year. Business was prostrate and men were bewailing the dullness of the times and filling themselves with despair. And to put a fitting finish to the year the last month had chronicled unparalleled disaster of fire and shipwreck. But the year had certainly brought its blessings to every man, and no matter how gloomy had been its general character there was certainly something to thank God for.

REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE HEARD FROM—THE NEWSPAPER EDITORS AND THE ACTORS TO BE LECTURED.

At the Brooklyn Tabernacle yesterday morning, Rev. T. De Witt Talmage preached a sermon on the recent calamity at the Brooklyn Theatre, taking his text from the twelfth verse of the fourth chapter of Amos, "Prepare to meet thy God." Passing along one of the streets of a Western city about three weeks ago, he said, he heard the newsboys shouting the news of the terrible disaster. After hearing some of the particulars of the fearful calamity that had fallen on the community he found the sheet like the scroll of the prophet—written within and without with lamentation and sorrow. Some persons in their review of the disaster had blamed the architect, some the play-actors, and some others the Fire Marshal and the Police. There were still others who swaggered about telling what they would have done had they been there. To such he would say he did not believe they would do half as much as had been done. His sermon would have no blame for any one, but it was, indeed, poor comfort for a workman with a broken leg to rebuke him for his carelessness in falling from the ladder. The first alleviation to be found in this terrible calamity was that where one perished three escaped unhurged and, while they extended their sympathy toward the sorrowful friends of the 300 who perished, they must also praise God with the 600 who escaped. The second alleviation to be found in the disaster was in the fact that all the public buildings in this country are being brought under severe scrutiny, and that henceforth more attention will be given to the modes of egress from these places. The speaker referred to the fact that when the Tabernacle was built some people laughed because they had so many aisles and doorways. Nevertheless the necessity of this was now shown, and with their 25 aisles, 22 doors, and eight stairways, they were comparatively safe. He declared that the meaning of this calamity was unmistakably that we are called to awaken from our stupor, and prepare for death. Hear it Brooklyn; hear it New-York; hear it Chester; hear it London; hear it the world over, prepare to meet thy God

Mr. Talmage gave notice that on Sunday next he would commence a course of sermons addressed to persons engaged in the different professions, the first to be to the newspaper profession, and the second to the theatrical profession.

THE ADVANCE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH IN 100 YEARS.

Rev. Dr. Samuel Osgood preached yesterday in the Church of the Advent (Protestant Episcopal) 57th street and Lexington avenue. Dr. Osgood chose as his text the eleventh verse of the eleventh chapter of Ezekiel, "This city shall not be your caldron, neither shall ye be the flesh in the midst thereof."

In the course of his remarks he referred to the spiritual condition of New-York exactly 100 years ago. At that time there seemed to be only two leading religious bodies in the City. Trinity Parish, which was an English parish, had three churches, one of which, Trinity, was burned in the great fire of 1776; leaving two, St. George's Chapel and St. Paul's Church, the same building that stands now at the corner of Vesey street and Broadway. That was the very church which Washington attended after his inauguration here. The Dutch Reformed Church had three edifices—the South, the North, and the Middle Churches, respectively. The latter building still stands, and is known as the Old Post Office. There are also two Presbyterian Churches, two Baptist, one Moravian, one Methodist, one Lutheran, one Friends, and one Synagogue. There was in those days great diversity of opinion on popular topics. The Presbyterians were, as a rule, attached to the patriot cause, and the Episcopalians to the cause of royalty. But there were exceptions—Presbyterian loyalists and Episcopalian patriots. Since those days the Christian Church has been keeping abreast of events.

INDIAN HORSE RAID IN THE BLACK HILLS.

DEADWOOD, Dec. 31.—On Wednesday last the Indians made a dash on Spear-fish Run, and stampeded a herd of horses. William Smith, who witnessed the transaction, gave an alarm, and a number of mounted men started in pursuit of the Indians, and recaptured all but 20 of the horses. The Indians, about 15 in number, escaped.

A ROBBER OVERPOWERED.

BANGOR, Dec. 31.—James McAloon enticed John B. Hoyt to an unfrequented spot last night, with intent to rob, and assaulted him with an iron bar. Hoyt overpowered his assailant, left him senseless, and returned to his hotel. The wounds of both are severe, and those of McAloon dangerous. Hoyt was on his way to the West, and had a considerable sum of money in his possession.

THE STATE CAPITAL.

THE NEW GOVERNOR INSTALLED.

INAUGURATION OF GOV. ROBINSON—THE CEREMONIES OF A SIMPLE CHARACTER—SPEECHES OF MR. TILDEN AND GOV. ROBINSON—A REMARKABLY QUIET AFFAIR—THE RECEPTION IN THE EXECUTIVE CHAMBER.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 1.—The inauguration of Gov. Robinson to-day was conducted with Jacksonian simplicity. The whole ceremony was over in less than fifteen minutes. There was no military demonstration, and no procession of any kind. The Governor had declined the offer of a military escort, and the simplicity of the ceremonies was in accordance with his expressed wishes. The only preparation which had been made in the Assembly Chamber for the inauguration was the placing of rows of chairs in the space in front of the Clerk's desk. There was, however, a much larger attendance of spectators than has been usual at previous inaugurations. The chamber was filled with people some time before the hour fixed for the commencement of the ceremonies, and the number of ladies present was unusually large. Shortly before 12, the Mayor and Aldermen of Albany entered and took seats on the left of the Chamber; many of the State officials followed them, accompanied in most cases by their wives, and found seats near the desk. Chief Justice Church sat near the front, with Mrs. Church. Auditor Schuyler, Bank Superintendent Ellis, and Mr. Smythe of the Insurance Department were not far off; a large number of Assemblymen and some Senators were scattered through the audience, and on one of the front rows sat Mr. Martin Farquahar Tupper. The galleries of the chamber were crammed to overflowing with a miscellaneous and not very quiet crowd. Precisely at 12 o'clock, the principal doors of the Assembly Chamber were thrown open, and Gov. Tilden and Governor-elect Robinson marched in arm-in-arm. They were followed by the officers of the Governor's staff, in all the gorgeousness of staff uniforms and gold lace. The two leading personages marched down the aisle to the front of the Clerk's desk, and there separated, Mr. Robinson going to the right, Gov. Tilden to the left. As soon as each had faced the audience, and the buzz which their entry had made had subsided into quiet, Gov. Tilden began to speak. He commenced his speech in a nervous, spasmodic way, uttered two or three sentences, and then had to come fairly down to the manuscript. The rest of the speech was read.

Very little of it could have been heard by the audience, for the Governor would commence a sentence in a loud and almost excited tone, and after a few words his voice would die away so that its conclusion was almost inaudible even to those who were nearest to him. There was no applause, and the audience seemed to draw a breath of relief when he had finished, for the orator's embarrassment appeared to have its effect on those who listened and to make them feel uncomfortable. When Gov. Tilden finished Mr. Robinson responded. He, though very nervous also, managed to get half way through his speech before coming to the manuscript. There were two points in the response which drew forth applause. When he alluded to Gov. Tilden having driven away from the capital the men who made a merchandise of legislation, and promised that so long as he (the speaker) was Governor they should not come back again, the audience cheered a little; and when he made the reference to Gov. Tilden having been called to a higher office, by the popular vote, every Democrat in the hall, and there were many, cheered lustily. Gov. Tilden's speech was as follows. It will be noticed that he once more iterates the claim to have reduced taxation, which has been over and over again shown to be false:

REMARKS OF MR. TILDEN.

Mr. ROBINSON: The people of the State have given you a distinguished evidence of their confidence in choosing you for their Chief Magistrate upon a vote so unexampled. In that testimony I cordially concur, without assuming to add to its value. It is to me a great satisfaction to surrender the chief official trust of this Commonwealth, to one whose valuable co-operation I have experienced, and whose career furnishes such assurance of his purpose to prosecute the work to which I have consecrated two years of official service and three previous years of my private life. To recall the Government of this State to the pure condition in which a generation ago you and I knew it; to remove the fungus growths which in evil times had overspread its administration and legislation; to lighten the intolerable burdens upon the people; to improve institutions and laws; to systematically call into the civil service—whether by appointment or election—men of higher ideals of official life, of better training and more general culture, thus utilizing a class inferior in the arts of political competition, but superior in capacities for public usefulness; these are noble objects; they had to be pursued through stormy conflicts with selfish interests and fixed habits. Our support was an unfaltering trust in the people, if the prospect of real reform could be made visible. Our inspiration was a belief that nothing worth saving could be lost if only our work did not fail. The scrutiny of all candid men may safely be challenged as to what has been already accomplished. Wasteful and corrupt systems destroyed, State taxation reduced one-half, new remedies for official malversation enacted, the management of the public works and prisons reorganized, and commissions preliminary to other reforms instituted. These are valuable results; but there are others even more important. The standard of official conduct has been elevated, and with it the ideas, motives, and influences which surround official life as with an atmosphere. The public suspicion of legislative venality is disappearing, and the lobbies are disbanded. The chief executive and administrative trusts of the State have been committed to gentlemen who are eminent, not only for personal probity, but for capacity and high ideals of official duty. A genuine reform in the civil service has thus been realized which could not be the product of any mere system or any mere legislation without the effective co-operation of the men conducting the actual administration. I have traced these results, approved by the people at the last two elections in this State, because they encourage the aspirations of the community for a better government, and tend to inspire a noble ambition in all rising men to compete for honors and power by appealing to the best moral forces of human society. As an example these results are infinitely important. I congratulate you, Sir, that at such a time and with such favoring auspices, you enter upon an administration which I believe will be fruitful of public benefit and of honors to yourself.

MR. ROBINSON'S REPLY.

Mr. Robinson made the following response:

GOV. TILDEN: I thank you for the kind and encouraging words which you have addressed to me. In receiving from you the great trust which has rested upon you during the last two years, I fully appreciate the admonition of the King of Israel, "Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off." You have had your trial, and have received the grateful approval of the people, not only of the State, but of the whole Union, who have called you by an emphatic popular majority to the highest place in the nation. You have arrested gross abuses and wasteful expenditures; have enforced economy and reduced largely the burdens of taxation. More than this, you have restored a higher moral tone to the administration of Government, and have driven from this Capitol those who made it a house of merchandise, and enriched themselves by buying and selling legislation. I trust that by no act of mine will they be encouraged to return.

Fellow-citizens, I am here to take, in public before you, the oath required by the Constitution. We cannot forget that this is the first ceremony of the kind in the second century of our national existence, nor can we be unmindful of the progress which our State has made in population, wealth, and civilization during the hundred years that have passed. No one will deny that this amazing progress has been due, under Providence, to the free institutions, the constitutional governments, founded by the wisdom of the fathers of the Republic. Standing at the threshold of a new century, it seems to me a fitting time and appropriate to present circumstances, to recall some of the leading principles which underlie our institutions, and are vital to their continuance. As understood by the fathers themselves, they were thus announced by Mr. Jefferson in his first inaugural address: "The support of the State Governments in all their rights as the most competent administrators of our domestic concerns, and the surest bulwark against anti-republican tendencies; the preservation of the General Government in its whole constitutional vigor as the sheet-anchor of our peace at home and safety abroad, and the jealous care of the right of election by the people, as a mild and safe corrective of abuses, which are lopped by the sword of revolution when peaceable remedies are unprovided; absolute acquiescence in the decisions of the majority; the supremacy of the civil over the military authority; economy in the public expense, that labor may be lightly burdened; the honest payment of our debts, and the sacred preservation of the public faith." To the honor of our State be it said, it has adhered steadily to these principles, never seeking any undue advantage by reason of its superior wealth and power. While it has faithfully upheld the just rights of the States, it has promptly responded to every call to maintain the constitutional power of the Federal Government. It has kept ever onward in the true and safe road lying midway between the heresy of secession on the one hand, and the equally fatal heresy of centralization on the other. Let us, then, fellow-citizens, as we advance into the new century, renew our vows of loyalty to these great principles, and our hopes that the centuries to come may be even more prosperous, peaceful, and happy than that which has passed.

The speeches being made, Secretary of State Bigelow stepped forward, and administered the oath of office, first to Mr. Robinson, and then to Lieutenant-Governor Dorsheimer. This proceeding concluded the ceremonies. Mr. Tilden and Gov. Robinson descended from their places, linked arms, and followed by the staff officers, marched out of the hall and into the Executive Chamber. As they came out the crowd which had been unable to gain admittance to the hall, made way for them to cross the lobby. An enthusiastic Democrat perched up on the stairway leading to the Senate Chamber cried out loudly and excitedly, while he pointed a very grimy finger at that gentleman, "There he is! There's Sammy—that little man there! That's Sammy! Hi! hi! hi!" There was a laugh, and some of the crowd took up the "hi! hi! hi!" Those that did cheer cheered heartily enough, but there were not many, and the cheering almost instantly died away. The truth is Mr. Tilden never was popular in Albany with any class. Gov. Robinson seems to be well liked. In the Executive Chamber, which was turned over with the usual formalities to the new incumbent, Gov. Robinson and Mr. Tilden held a joint reception, which lasted for a couple of hours, and was well attended, as such affairs always are. The first official act of Gov. Robinson will be the appointment of Mr. Olcott to the office of State Controller. If the appointment were not made to-day it would have to go the Senate, as to-morrow the Legislature meets.

MR. SPEAKER SLOAN.

RESULT OF THE CAUCUS FOR PRESIDING OFFICER OF THE ASSEMBLY—MR. SLOAN'S VICTORY—MR. SLOAN 37, MR. HUSTED 30—THE MOST EXCITING AND CLEANEST CONTEST EVER KNOWN IN ALBANY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 1.—Seldom has the crowded Assembly Chamber of the Capitol been treated to a greater sensation than it was to-night when the result of the ballot for Speaker was announced. Husted, the invincible, who commanded a thousand influences once so potent in the Legislature, and who had no equal in the arts of manipulating men, had been defeated on his own ground by a man whose sole strength was his unblemished character, his stern integrity, his open and unsuspicious nature. It did not seem possible. The declaration of the vote was followed by a moment of profound silence, and then a loud outburst of applause seemed to afford relief to every one, for it is certain that until the ballots were actually counted not one man in a hundred whose opinion was entitled to any weight felt absolute confidence one way or the other Mr. Sloan's friends had learned, as the canvass drew to a close, that men did not always do as they had promised to do; that some were too weak to stand pressure; that others were naturally undecided; that others who may have originally leaned toward the man they though would be successful, began to waver when they heard that the contest was doubtful. This had made some of them less confident than they seemed to be at the opening of the canvass. It stimulated others to more earnest work, but it made nearly all doubtful of what the result would be. It is also certain that Mr. Husted was the most thoroughly deceived man in Albany, for he went into the caucus confident to a degree—in fact, actually jubilant, and it was known that he would not have gone into it as a candidate had he had any idea that he was to be beaten. His whole political future seemed staked upon this game, and had he seen it going against him there cannot be a doubt that he would have thrown up his hand, and with his usual adroitness in turning a corner, gracefully have risen in the meeting and nominated his opponent. How many men he calculated upon it is not easy to discover; but it is known how many were counted for Mr. Sloan. Mr. Webb, of Dutchess, one of Mr. Sloan's most earnest supporters, and one who has worked long and hard for him, stated to a friend as they walked up to the Capitol together, this evening, that after every doubtful man had been struck off, and with the utmost care in revising the list to exclude every element of uncertainty, 39 votes could be counted for Mr. Sloan. But this gentleman had seen enough in the past three days to make him tremble for the result, even with these figures before him. Mr. Fish, who has been working with his coat off and his sleeves rolled up, so to speak, was exultingly, confident, and so was the outspoken Mr. Lang, of St. Lawrence, who had declared for Mr. Sloan the morning he reached Albany. They were sure of these 39 votes. They had 37 Hard work had been done for both candidates up to the last moment, and the heaviest break in the Husted column was probably made by the division of the New-York and Brooklyn delegations.

There were some things about this contest which distinguished it from almost any other which has happened here. One of these was the hearty, outspoken, and almost hilarious enthusiasm of the men who were working for Mr. Sloan, and they were principally the young men—the "boys" of the political world. Another was the excellent temper in which the canvass was conducted and the entire absence of harsh feeling; and lastly, there has not been a suspicion of the use of any influence but the promise of places on committees, which, rightly or wrongly, has always been looked upon as a fair thing to give in these contests. Mr. Sloan, however, steadily refused to allow any promises to be made for him. So fair was the temper of Mr. Husted's opponents that some of them took exception to-day to the expression occurring in these dispatches, that "every man who wanted a consideration for his vote naturally drifted to Mr. Husted." This, they said, was unjust. It is rather unfortunate that the word "consideration," used in this sense, has come to be understood at Albany as another term for money. It is needless to say no such meaning was intended to be conveyed. It is proper to say that there is not the slightest indication that money has been used in this contest, though it was freely talked about yesterday that men were coming up from New-York to spend hundreds and thousands, if necessary, to elect Mr Husted. This afternoon THE TIMES correspondent asked a number of gentlemen who were the most active workers in Mr. Sloan's interest if they had seen any sign at all that money was being used against them. They one and all declared frankly and with emphasis that they had not. One of them remarked that if the result of the voting should be widely different from what had been calculated upon some suspicion might be excited that bribes had been given, but up to that time he had seen nothing which led him to suppose they had. As the voting in the caucus was almost to a vote what had been calculated upon, this matter is set at rest.

The really important proceedings of the caucus, which was open as usual, were brief. Mr. Fish called the meeting to order and nominated for Chairman Mr. Robert Strahan, of New-York, who was elected without dissent. The venerable Mr. Alvord and Judge Hogeboom conducted him to the chair. Mr. Strahan rapped for order, and when silence reigned in the crowded chamber, in a short and neatly turned speech, he impressed upon the Republican members of the Legislature the necessity of being guided in their choice of presiding officers by considerations of the welfare of the State and of the Republican Party, and asked the further pleasure of the meeting. On motion of Mr. Alvord, Mr. E. Johnson was elected Secretary, and on motion of Mr. Gallagher, of Erie, Mr. Marvin, of Kings, and Mr. Mr. Gere, of Tioga, were elected Tellers. Messrs. Orr and Skinner were appointed additional Secretaries. The roll was then called, and 69 members responded. Billings, a man classed as doubtful, was the absentee. The next business announced was the nomination of candidates for Speaker, and everybody settled down to look for the great fight to begin.

Mr. Peck, of Oswego, a new member, and Mr. Sloan's colleague, rose and nominated that gentleman in a speech so pointed, so well turned, and in such excellent taste, that it made the best possible impression on the House. It was brief; it was not too laudatory; it omitted nothing which ought to have been said, and it may be added that it marked Mr. Peck as one of the men who would be listened to in the coming session.

As soon as he sat down, Dr. Hayes, of New-York, rose and nominated Mr. Husted. His speech was good, but scarcely so effective as Mr. Peck's had been. He paid a high compliment to Mr. Sloan, as Mr. Peck had spoken cordially and justly of Mr. Husted. Mr. Graham, of Monroe, at the conclusion of Dr. Hayes' speech, rose, and with a few brief remarks withdrew the name of Mr. Alvord. Mr. Santee, of Steuben, speaking for the southern tier of counties, seconded the nomination of Mr Husted. Mr. Fish seconded the nomination of Mr. Sloan briefly and well, and Mr. Webb, of Dutchess, followed him in the same style. No other speeches were made, and the Chairman announced that balloting was in order.

There was no attempt made to have an open ballot, for it was found, on discussing the matter to-day, that many of Mr. Sloan's friends would vote against it, and, therefore, what would naturally appear as a test vote between the two candidates would be likely to go against Mr. Sloan. The ballot boxes were placed in front of the Clerk's desk, the two tellers on either side, and as each member's name was called he came forward and deposited his ballot. Mr. Alvord's was the first name called. The balloting occupied nearly 10 minutes, and the interest seemed to grow more intense each minute. The last ballot being in, the count was made. whispers were heard on all sides of "Husted," "Husted." In another minute there was a sudden movement in the little group closely wedged about the Clerk, and surprised whispers of "Sloan-it's Sloan," became audible. The tally list was handed up to the Chairman—the whole audience in strained suspense. The Chairman announced in slow and measured tones that 67 votes had been cast, of which Mr. Sloan had received 37 and Mr. Husted 30.

An instant of deep silence followed by applause, and Mr. Husted was on his feet moving that the nomination of Mr. Sloan be made unanimous. In the course of the brief speech with which he supported this motion, he referred to the singularly cordial relations he had had with Mr. Sloan during the contest; to the entire absence of bad feeling through it all, which, he said, distinguished it from any other contest which had ever taken place at Albany, and in a few well-chosen phrases bore testimony to the ability and high character of the gentleman who would be the Speaker of the next Legislature.

The motion to make the nomination unanimous was carried amid a round of hearty applause, and then Mr. Sloan rose and added his testimony to that of Mr. Husted that there never had been a contest for this position which had been conducted with such courtesy and in so kind a spirit as this had been. He returned his thanks to the gentlemen who had supported him, said he was well aware of the difficulty of the duties before him, but he would endeavor to discharge them with fidelity and to the best of his ability.

After this happy termination of the contest nothing more remained to be done than to elect the remaining officers of the Assembly. There was no opposition to the re-election of Mr. Johnson as Clerk. George A. Goss was re-elected Sergeant at Arms, and Eugene Demers was elected Doorkeeper.

The Democrats held their caucus in the Senate Chamber. Ruggles, of Steuben, and Luke Cozzens, of New-York, were candidates for the complimentary nomination for the Speakership, and the latter received it.

Mr. Sloan had a sort of reception in his rooms at the Delavan this evening, and received the assurances of about 60 members that they had voted for him. His election is a happy augury for the Republican Party in this State. A man has been elected to the Speakership without making a promise, without asking a single member to vote for him, and the contest has been the cleanest that ever took place at Albany.

Van Vorst, to hold Circuit Courts in the First District, in January, March, May, and June, 1877, also special terms in February, April, October, and November, 1877.

INAUGURATION OF GOV. VANCE.

WHAT NORTH CAROLINA WILL DO IN THE PRESENT "CRITICAL SITUATION"—NOT WILLING TO REVOLT, BUT WILL FOLLOW NORTHERN DEMOCRATIC LEAD.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

RALEIGH, Jan. 1.—The inauguration of Gov. Vance passed off quietly. A large crowd was in attendance. In his address he said, alluding to national affairs: "I conceive our situation to be critical in the extreme. Our only reliance now is upon the moderation and patriotism of Congress. If the representatives of the people and of the States shall not be able to make a peaceable and constitutional solution of the difficulty in which the country now finds itself, and there should be an attempt, as threatened, to inaugurate the candidates not fairly elected, one of two things will happen: Either the majority of the American people will quietly submit to a great wrong, involving the destruction of the Constitution, or there will be a resort to violence. Let us look things in the face. The circumstances of North Carolina, as well as of the Southern States generally, imperatively demand that she should not be forward in this matter. More than all things else, except good government, we need peace. In common with the constitutional party of the North, we think we have fairly elected our candidate for President. Upon that party, and not upon ourselves, devolves the propriety and the duty of taking the needed steps toward securing the rights of the majority. But let it not be supposed that we are indifferent to their action or decline to come to the front, because less entitled to do so than others. Blasted we have been by the desolation of war; purged of rashness by the fires of the revolution, and sobered both by public calamity and private sorrow as we have been, we yet cherish the love of liberty in our hearts. As the mouth-piece of more than a million of people, I believe I can with propriety say for them, that North Carolina may confidently be relied upon to sustain in that portion of the people of the United States which shall convince them that it is struggling for the Constitution, the laws, and public justice, which are the life and the soul of the American Union. On the one hand, we do not wish it to be understood that we are ready or willing to embark in revolution; nor, on the other, that we are willing to quietly submit to any outrage that physical force, directed by party zeal, may see fit to impose—the one course tending to provoke violence, and the other to invite oppression. We do wish it understood that we will follow the lead of the Constitutional men of the North. Show us the laws, and it suffiseth us." He reserves an expression of his views on State policy for his message to the General Assembly.

THE GRAND TRUNK STRIKE.

ALMOST ENTIRE SUSPENSION OF BUSINESS ON THE RAILROAD—THE STRIKERS IN ENTIRE CONTROL WEST OF MONTREAL—MAILS SENT BY SLEIGHS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ST. ALBANS, Jan. 1.—The Grand Trunk Engineers' strike still continues, and has caused almost an entire suspension of business on that road. The engineers on the Atlantic division have not struck, but no trains are running West except one which left Montreal, to-day, and the engineer on that was warned that he would be tomahawked before he had gone 100 miles. The train has not been heard from here, as yet, and violence is feared. At Belleville, Brockville, and Ontario, the strikers appear to be masters of the situation and have permitted no trains to run. The company has notified the Government that they will not attempt to run trains past Belleville until they are assured of protection for their men and property. On one of the men arrested for assault at Toronto papers have been found which prove the strike to have been premeditated and under authority of the Brotherhood. At Toronto the excitement is intense. A train heavily loaded with passengers left for the East yesterday, but was stopped at Cobourg. The Post Office Department and newspapers have forwarded mail matter by sleighs, whenever practicable. The strikers have abundance of money and buy up all new comers. They have the sympathy of all trades unions in Toronto, who will hold a mass meeting to sustain them at St. Lawrence this week. The Secretary of the Brotherhood here has been arrested for assault. Much indignation is expressed against the strikers by the public all along the line.

The paper found on one of the men arrested for assault contained the following:

"Tell all the men for me to be loyal to the end, and they will be all right. I have written to Portland and Detroit, and we have the best of them if the men will only strike. It is a life and death struggle with us. It is important for the men and firemen, as well as the engine men, to be loyal. I have received a call to come to Kansas, but till your case is settled I will stand by you to the last. Yours, to the end, ARTHUR.

Mr. Hickson has sent Mr. Arthur a communication, saying: "The committee which was appointed when you were here have declined to wait upon me, but sent three of their number to me last Friday night at 7:30, with a paper entirely at variance with all their formal proposals, and intimated that they would strike at 9. They have not only done so, but have proceeded to acts of wanton outrage, which demand the interference of the civil authorities. I advise you of this serious state of things in order that you may exercise any power you possess in the interest of the men and public order."

There is no interruption or travel on the Central Vermont on this side Montreal.

THE ASHTABULA CALAMITY

ADDITIONAL DETAILS OF FRIDAY'S DISASTER.

NO MORE BODIES FOUND—THE NUMBER ON THE TRAIN BELIEVED TO BE AT LEAST 200—HOW BODIES WERE IDENTIFIED—THE TERRIBLE FATE OF A NEWLY-MARRIED COUPLE—THE HEROISM OF AMERICAN WOMEN—THE BRIDGE INVESTIGATION—WHY THE FIRE DEPARTMENT WERE NOT PERMITTED TO PLAY UPON THE BURNING CARS.

By Telegraph from Our Special Correspondent.

ASHTABULA, Jan. 1.—No more bodies have been found at the scene of the terrible disaster of Friday last, though it is the dread of all, and the conviction of the majority, that many more persons were destroyed than are yet accounted for. But as yet only a portion of the wreck has been cleared away and the ice removed. The facts and circumstances certainly seem to indicate that there were nearly if not quite 200 persons on the train at the time the accident occurred. This was sworn to by unusually intelligent witnesses at the inquest to-day, and is corroborated by those of the survivors with whom I have conversed. I give more details of this below. Soon after daylight this morning work was resumed at the creek. Gangs of men, aggregating about 150, were set to work, searching for bodies, removing débris and putting up portions of the frame-work of a temporary bridge. The excitement was hardly less than yesterday, and again centred on the men who were wading in the open shallow water and searching for the dead. Beyond a few remnants of charred clothing, some calcined bones, and some blackened pieces of what I was assured was human flesh, nothing was discovered. Crowds of men and women, young lads, and girls pushed and elbowed their way about, and betrayed a most morbid curiosity. Whenever some small but terrible evidence of the agony of Friday was brought to the surface, some did not hesitate to express their disappointment that it was not a body. Others inveighed savagely against the railroad company, and others again were carelessly indifferent. In the meantime the work of identification goes slowly on. This is necessarily so, for I cannot see how identification is possible. In the case of the great majority of bodies lying in the freight-house, a list of clothing or jewelry is the only possible evidence of identity. Three bodies were identified in this way to-day, and one was only the fragment of a human form, while the two others were utterly unrecognizable as human beings. The other remains are like logs, and chips of charred wood. There is one strange exception. A body from which one leg and half the trunk have been burned, and which is otherwise a blackened mass, has one hand comparatively uninjured, with the false shirt-cuff still around it. This only remaining particle of clothing gives, curiously, a direct clue to identification, for it bears in ink the initials B. L. R.

Of the bodies identified to-day, that of L. G. Crain, of West Haven, Conn., was recognized by a ring and some clothing; that of Mrs. E. Clarke, of Wellington, Ohio, by some jewelry; and that of Minnie Kettlewell, of Beloit, Wis., a child of 13 years of age, by some pieces of clothing. The Coroner gave permits during the day for the removal of the bodies, and they were taken away by friends. Twenty-two coffins still hold remains awaiting recognition. They will be kept as long as possible, and will then be buried here by the railroad company. Among the sadly touching records are the inability to discover the bodies of a young couple, Mr. and Mrs. Hall, who were on their wedding tour, having only been married the day before they died, and of Mr. Marsden, who was on his way to Chicago to be married. Again, of Mr. Bliss, the companion of Mr. Whittle, the Chicago Evangelist, who is said to be the man who, on finding that his wife could not be rescued from the burning car in which she was, rushed into the flames, declaring his intention to perish with her. Neither body has been recovered, though a watch-charm, supposed to belong to Mrs. Bliss, has been found.

Of the only two critical cases among the injured, William Hewitt, of Bridgeport, still lingers. Mrs. Frame died this evening. One thing has particularly struck me since I have been here—the heroism of the women whose husbands, fathers, or brothers were injured, and who hastened here to nurse them. There is amid their manifest anxiety and distress, a calmness of demeanor which can only come from a determined and courageous effort to cheer up and encourage their suffering relatives, and a patience under such a trial which is sad and yet pleasing to witness. We brought one lady, Mrs. Jackson, of Waterbury, Conn., with us from New-York, and her behavior drew to her the warmest sympathy of every man and woman in the car, and was a theme of constant remark. Only once did her trembling limbs betray her agitation. It was on leaving the cars at the brink of the horrible chasm, from which her bruised and bleeding husband was dragged more dead than alive. Strange to say, in the little telegraph office of the depot here there is a colored engraving of Rembrandt, Peale's "Court of Death." Verily, this office is just now entitled to this designation. I made today a very long examination of the ruins of the broken bridge, but I do not see how any one is to form a definite opinion of the cause of the disaster.

The bridge is what is known as the old "Howe truss" pattern, and was constructed about 11 years ago, as I learn, by Mr. Amasa Stone, formerly the President of the road. Some of the rods and trusses look rather light for a bridge of 152 feet span, and some of the citizens here tell me that it had to be trussed soon after it was put up. Indeed there are not wanting those who assert that the bridge has had an ugly reputation for some time and that Mr. Collins, the Company's Engineer, has never put great faith in it. Mr. Collins, however, decidedly contradicts this impression, and asserts that he walked over the bridge about ten days ago, and found it all sound. The Inspector of Bridges happened to be on the train, and he has gone home, injured, to Cleveland. I cannot question him about it, but I must say that, from all I can learn from the company's officers, their inspection does not seem to be either particularly regular or systematic. A freight train had passed safely over the bridge about three-quarters of an hour before the accident, and two engines coupled had been working backward and forward over it pretty well all day. If I should hazard a theory it would be that the bridge was originally light; that it was carrying an enormous weight of snow, and that the heavy gale of wind blowing brought a heavy lateral strain on it; that these influences made it give way the moment the train, drawn by the heavy engines, struck it, and that by the time the engines approached the other side, and the full weight of the strain bore upon it, the bridge settled and then went with a crash. A reference to the evidence of Manning, the engineer, who heard the train strike the bridge, and that moment noticed the peculiarity of the sound, bears on the point, as also does the statement of Mr. E. A. Jones, given below. But, as I have said, I doubt if the cause of the accident will ever be definitely ascertained.

There is a rumor that the company deliberately ordered its agent to prevent water being thrown on the fire. The sinister object of this, it is said, was the diabolical hope that all the bodies would be so burned up as to destroy all chances of identification, and to render verdicts for damages proportionally problematical. I cannot remain silent about this matter, in spite of the demands of the company's officers, for the simple reason that nearly all Ashtabula believes the accusation to be well founded. I sought out Mr. Knapp, the Chief of the town fire brigade, today. He says he was on the spot soon after the accident, and proposed to Mr. Strong, the company's agent, to pour a stream of water on the burning cars; that Mr. Strong said it was no use, but they had far better help to get the injured up the bank. The town has an engine-house within 150 yards of the bridge, provided with 500 feet of hose, the coupling of which fits the fire-plug in the water-works. The engineer of the water-works swore to-day that, although not pumping, he had on 60 pounds of steam. The question then arises, Why were all these manifest aids for putting out the fire neglected? Mr. Payne, the General Superintendent of the line, has given me his assurance that he sent no telegram forbidding the use of water, whereas some of the citizens aver that they actually saw and read the telegram to that effect to Mr. Strong. I think Mr. Strong did discourage the use of water as being of no avail, first to Chief Knapp and afterward to Capt. Hitchcock, who had brought the town steamer to the scene. Again, when some of the firemen were running out the hose, Mr. Rodgers, the Superintendent of the bridge carpenters, is said to have told them it was no use, and to have dissuaded them from making any effort. At the best of it, the company's officers showed a great error in judgment, and the fire brigade are ignorant of their duty. Surely the town fire brigade has the power to extinguish any fire within their limits without asking the permission of any other corporation. This matter has brought about a good deal of angry discussion, and has created much bitterness of feeling against the railroad people among the citizens of Ashtabula. Mr. Payne has received many inquiries concerning missing persons, but declines to publish the names unless he sees some chance of their having been on the Friday night train.

To-night I had a chat with Mr. E. A. Jones, of Beloit, Wis., and he certainly furnishes some important testimony as to the number of passengers on the train, and as to when the bridge first gave way. He had been riding in the first passenger car, and in the seat nearest to the front door of the car. He says that this car was fairly full; that most of the seats were occupied by two persons, and that there were 40 or 50 persons in the car. A few minutes before the accident he had passed back into the first sleeping car to engage a berth. The conductor told him that he had only one berth—an upper one—left. This he engaged, and then returned to the front car. He had not long taken his seat again, when they struck the bridge. When half way across, Mr. Jones says everything suddenly seemed to sink from under them, and they went crashing to the bottom of the ravine. He declares that they were just half way between the two abutments when the bridge gave way; that he cannot possibly be mistaken as to this, for he was looking out of the window at the moment. Mr. Jones says that the smoking-car was full, there being few seats without two occupants. He knows this from having passed through the car only five minutes before the accident. The drawing-room car, he says, had about a dozen passengers. Thus in four cars there were, according to Mr. Jones' statement, as many passengers as the conductor says were on the whole train. I place more faith in Mr. Jones than in the conductor. Mr. Jones was badly knocked about. He was cut on the head, hands injured, ribs bruised, &c.

I also listened to the story of Henry A. White, of Weathersfield, Conn. Mr. White is the only passenger who came out of the City of Buffalo alive. He was riding at the rear end of the car, in the last seat, with his back to the engine. He says his sensations in going down were horrible, but that he was fortunately held up by having his back to the engine, while the other passengers were all hurled to the other end of the car. He thinks they were all instantly killed, as the car went down endways, and he heard neither scream nor groan after they reached the bottom. He remained quiet for some moments, till he ceased to hear the sound of the falling cars. He then got out by breaking the glass of the doors. He is badly cut on the head, has his arm broken, and is generally severely bruised and shaken. No wonder, after such a plunge, and yet he is cheerful about himself, though greatly distressed and shocked at the fate of his traveling companions.

I am informed from Erie that Miss Mary Birchard, of Fayetteville, Vt., and cousin to Gov. Hayes, was on the ill-fated train. The uncle from whom the Governor inherited most of his fortune also willed Miss Birchard $20,000. The three years allowed in which to settle up the estate and divide the property having expired, Miss Birchard was on her way to take formal possession of her property. Her name does not appear in the list of saved, and she was probably killed. Her destination was Elyria, Ohio, where her sister, Mrs. Ronald DeWitt lives."

THE CORONER'S INQUEST.

STATEMENT OF THE ENGINEER OF THE WATER-WORKS—THE STORIES TOLD BY PASSENGERS—THRILLING EXPERIENCES—ADJOURNMENT OF THE INVESTIGATION UNTIL THIS FORENOON.

By Telegraph from Our Special Correspondent.

ASHTABULA, Monday, Jan. 1, 1877.

The inquest on the bodies was resumed by Coroner Richards at 9 o'clock this morning. William Shearman stated that, though not appearing as formal counsel for the company, he was requested to state that the company desired the fullest investigation of the accident and its causes. The first witness called was James Manning, the engineer of the railroad company's water-works. He testified that he was a short distance from the bridge when the train approached, and thought, from the noise, the moment the train struck the bridge, that something was wrong; that he was familiar with the ordinary sounds made by trains; that the strange sound caused him to stop and listen, thinking the train had jumped the track, and was running on the sleepers. The next moment he heard the crash of the falling bridge. Mr. Manning was unable to give any reliable evidence as to what followed. He said that he was so bewildered at the time that he did not even know within three or four hours when the last of the wounded were got out. He, however, swore that the clock of the engine that went down stopped at 7:23, showing the exact moment of the accident, and that he had 60 pounds of steam in his engine-house at the water-works at that time.

Capt. Charles H. Tyler, a commission merchant of St. Louis, said: I was a passenger in the Palatine, the sleeping car nearest to the engine; there were 19 passengers in the car; the other sleeping cars and the ordinary passenger cars were pretty well filled; I have thought the matter well over, and think that there were 200 passengers; I cannot disabuse my mind of this conclusion; four of us had just started to play a game of casino; we had dealt, but had not played a card; the first premonition of danger we had was the breaking and putting out of the lamp in the front end of the car; then came a pause of about 10 seconds, when, I remarked, "That must be frost acting on the glass;" the second shock broke the bell-rope and the two other lamps, putting them out; the front end of the car then dropped to an angle of about 40 degrees. I thought we were off the track, on an embankment. Mr. Lyons, of New-York, exclaimed: "My God, we are going down." We sat in breathless suspense for what seemed to me to be 10 minutes it was so agonizing; before we struck the bottom of the ravines all lights were out, and we were in perfect darkness; I cannot describe the crash; it was too terrific; a sleeping car, the City of Buffalo, came down endways, and fell on the rear end of our car, and mashed off about 10 feet of the end. Two gentlemen were smoking in the rear section. It was cut entirely off. I think every body in the car City of Buffalo was killed by the crash. On getting out I climbed on the sides of the City of Buffalo and pulled Miss Shepherd up after me; the car was lying on its side, and made it very difficult to get along it. On reaching the south end of the car I hung by my hands to the wreck while Miss Shepherd slid down by my body. She went almost out of sight, and I thought she was in water; it was snow, however, very deep; she called out, "All right," and I dropped into the same place; after we got away from the car, fire began to show itself; after seeing the young lady safe, I returned to the Palatine; I found a man insane from fright, and had great difficulty in getting him out of the window; I threw some baggage out and then left; I heard that there was a girl still in the car, and returned a second time, but the car was empty, and left for good; the light from the fire was now bright. It was about 30 feet from the west abutment, near the engine, giving a good view of the entire wreck. The baggage and express cars lay by the locomotive, near the west abutment, each lapping one over. The Palatine lay almost across the river. The City of Buffalo was lying across the rear end of it, one north and south. The cars immediately following these all fell one on top of the other, in one mashed up pile, one leaning against the eastern abutment at an angle of 40 degrees; though many persons were in the City of Buffalo, not a moan came from there; not a seat or vestige of anything was left in that car; two other fires broke out—one in the middle, and one at the other end of the wreck; had the citizens been sufficiently numerous at first, they could have put the fire out with snow; the wreck was all in flames by 9 o'clock; the fire traveled from west to east straight along the road; from the time the fire broke out till the train was beyond redemption was about 30 minutes; at 8:55 three persons were alive under the ends of the engine, screaming for help. These could have been saved by the use of water at that time, but 30 minutes after the accident none could have been saved from other parts of the wreck, though they could have been saved up to that time by water. I think only those were saved who were able to save themselves; all those badly injured were burned; the citizens did all they could to help the injured, but made no efforts to put out the fire; I saw a man brought out alive at 8:55, just as I left; we must have sailed 120 feet in the air; the car landed nearly flat, though a little sideways; the Buffalo came down endways upon us, consequently all in that car must have been smashed to pieces and killed; I first saw fire toward the western abutment, on reaching the end of the City of Buffalo; all the circumstances corroborated my conclusion that there were 200 passengers; I have been handling people for 24 years, as an owner of steam-boats on the Mississippi, and as a constant traveler; I consider that I am practically expert in judging of numbers; before leaving St. Louis, on my way East, the agent there told me that there would be very few passengers on the trip; on leaving New-York I was so surprised to find so many more than the agent expected that my attention was directly drawn to the number of passengers. Capt. Tyler, who is badly cut on the head, and has his right hand seriously lacerated, said that he desired to exonerate the railroad company from all blame.

Foster E. Swift, a hotel keeper at North Adams, Mass., said: I had my wife and two children with me in the car Palatine; I think there were about 20 passengers in the car; I was playing whist at the time of the accident. The first intimation of anything wrong was the breaking of the lamps, when the car seemed to careen and leave the track. The next thing I realized was a d

Arnold, a prominent manufacturer. Mabel is 12 years old. F. G. Swift, also injured, has been for several years landlord of the Arnold House, at North Adams, and was on his way to Chicago, where he was to be clerk in a leading hotel. Mabel was traveling with Mr. Swift, and was going to Chicago for medical treatment, having long been an invalid.

Mrs. Bradley, of San Francisco, who was injured and whose child was killed, is the youngest daughter of Mrs. Charles Merriam, of Springfield, by a former marriage, and was returning to California after a visit to her relatives. Mrs. Bradley's father, Dr. Gray, formerly a prominent physician in Springfield, was killed in the Norwalk disaster.

D. White and sons of Portland, Me., mentioned as injured by the Ashtabula railroad disaster, were the leading brush manufacturers of that city. Mr. White was a man of large property, and very successful in business. His son, John H. White, was a member of the Cumberland bar, which he left to become a partner in his father's business.

Charles C. Ricker, of Biddeford, Me., whose name appears among the injured, is a cigar-maker, 23 years old, son of Capt Ricker, one of the oldest watchmen of the Pepperell Manufacturing Company. He was on his way from New-York to Chicago.

REVISED LIST OF THE DEAD.

The following is a revised and complete list of the dead as far as known:

Mr. Aldrich, Des Moines, Iowa.
Lewis J. Barrey, Buffalo.
Mrs. W. H. Bradley's child and nurse, Chicago.
Mr. and Mrs. P. P. Bliss, Chicago.
C. Brunner, Gratiot, Wisconsin.
Mrs. C. Brunner; two children of Mr. and Mrs. Brunner.
David Chittenden, Cleveland.
L. C. Crane, New-Haven, Conn.
M. P. Coggswell, Chicago.
Mrs. E. Cook, Wellington.
William Clemens, Bellevue, Ohio.
Mrs. Emma Coffin, Oakland, Cal.
James Doyle, New-York.
Clarence Gage, Charleston, Ill.
Alfred Gillette, Cranberry Island, Me.
Mrs. George, Cleveland.
Miss George, Cleveland.
L. W. Hart, Akron, Ohio.
H. T. Hall, Chicago.
Mrs. P. L. Hall, Chicago.
F. A. Hodgkins, Bangor, Me.
Charles Kane, Pittsburg, Penn.
Annie Kitterville, Beloit, Wis.
George Kepler, Ashtabula, Ohio.
Lawrence Lonergan, Cleveland, Ohio.
Maggie L. Lewis, St. Louis, Mo.
Philip McNell, Cleveland, Ohio.
Miss Minnie Mixer, Buffalo.
Mrs. J. D. Marsten, mother, and child, Chicago.
Sarah S. Mann, Cleveland.
Mrs. W. L. Moore, Hammondsport, N. Y.
Isaac Meyer, Cleveland.
Birdie Meyer, Cleveland.
Richard Osborne, Tecumseh, Mich.
Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Peck, Peoria, Ill. (Doubtful.)
Mrs. G. E. Palmer, Binghamton, N. Y.
George A. Purington, Buffalo.
John Pickering, Chicago.
Daniel A. Rogers, Chicago.
S. B. Slow, Cleveland.
J. Shattuck, Cleveland, Mt. Vernon and Delaware Railroad.
R. Steudel. (Doubtful.)
Mrs. Trueworthy and daughter, Oakland, Cal.
Mrs. Lucy C. Thomas, Chicago.
Charles Vogel, Albany.
S. D. Waite, Toledo.
Mr. Webb, Boston.
Rev. A. H. Washburn, Cleveland.

THE STORY OF A SURVIVOR.

THE EXPERIENCE OF MR. CHARLES S. CARTER, A NEW-YORK LAWYER—HIS INJURIES, AND HOW THEY WERE RECEIVED—HIS EFFORTS TO SAVE FELLOW-PASSENGERS.

Mr. Charles S. Carter, of the law firm of Kneeland & Carter, one of the survivors of the Ashtabula disaster, arrived in this City yesterday morning, and was called upon at his residence, No. 166 Sixth avenue, Brooklyn, by a TIMES reporter. Mr. Carter was injured on the spine and legs, and, though able to move about for a few moments after the breaking of the bridge and to render brave and effective service in rescuing fellow-passengers, was soon overcome with pain. He is still a sufferer, and is confined to his bed. Mr. Carter was a passenger in the sleeping-car Palatine, and at the time of the catastrophe was playing cards. He first became aware that something was wrong by seeing the bell-rope suddenly snap, the same jerk which broke it also wrenching the lamps from their fastenings on the roof. "I saw," said he, "that something was about to happen, and I braced myself back into my seat and held on. The next second the car was precipitated into the abyss. Being the fourth car from the rear of the train the cars that preceded it filled up the stream so that it was saved from falling directly into the water. It fell upon the other cars, striking first upon its right side, and then rolling over upon the left side, and finally settling itself with the rear end resting upon another car and the forward end on the ice, the rear end rising from the front end at an angle of nearly 45 degrees. As we struck the last time the upper berth over my seat became loosened from its fastenings and fell, striking me upon the back. One of the gentlemen who were playing cards with me was struck by the same berth and killed. I have no doubt that many others were killed in the same way. How I escaped from the car I cannot exactly tell. I don't even remember where I found myself when the car brought up at the bottom of the abyss. I know that I got out through the rear end of the car. It had been completely smashed in, and I came near being killed in the ruin. Two ladies who sat immediately behind me were killed outright. How I clambered out of the car at the end of it I cannot tell you. I knew that I had been hit and I felt a little queer about the back; but I was too excited to pay much attention to the pain. No sooner had I got out, than I began to think of my duty to the passengers inside. The first person I rescued was a Mr. Shepherd, of Boston. I leaned on the end of the car, and she put her arms about my neck. By dint of severe tugging I raised her out of the car. I then went into the car, and brought out a woman whose leg and hip were broken. She died immediately after getting out. Mr. Henry W. Shepherd, of New-York, was one of the gentlemen playing cards with me, and I went back into the car a second time to rescue him. His leg was broken, having been struck by the falling berth. He was too heavy a man for me to take out, so I stove a hole through the window and took him out that way. When we got outside it was storming so furiously that I could not see where to go. I was bewildered with the driving snow. It was light enough about the wreck for the cars were all on fire. It was a way from the wreck that I wanted to go. I heard some one shout, "right up to the tank-house," and I followed in the direction in which somebody led the way. I was not able to carry Mr. Shepherd, and it was not absolutely necessary that I should carry him. He was able to use one leg and hobbled along with his arms around my neck. Several times I stumbled and fell in the deep snow, and he fell with me. He must have suffered intense pain by reason of these falls. When I had taken Mr. Shepherd to the tank-house, some gentleman took charge of him, and I returned to the wreck. I was met by a man who said, "Here is your overcoat, Mr. Carter." I took it, and seeing a perfectly naked woman running towards us crying for help, I wrapped it about her, and sent her in charge of the men to the tank-house. Just then my strength gave way and I fell in the snow. I had just given up all hope of life when two young men came along and took me up. I was carried to Cleveland on the train that took the wounded there, and at my request I was sent on to Toledo to attend to the business which had called me from home. I could not walk nor even sit up, and suffered great pain all the time; but I was bound to go to Toledo, and did so. From Toledo I was sent to New-York, receiving every attention all the way." Mr. Carter was asked to give some description of the appearance of the wrecked train, but was unable to do so. He saw the flames and heard the shrieks of the sufferers, but was too busy with the work of assisting his fellow-passengers to make a study of the scene.

MR. CRAIN, OF CONNECTICUT.

The New-Haven Journal of the 1st inst. says: "The sad news arrived yesterday that Mr. Louis C. Crain, of West Haven, traveling agent for the shoe manufactory of Joseph L. Joyce & Co., of this city, was one of the victims of the disaster on the Lake Shore Railroad at Ashtabula, Ohio. The sad fate of Mr. Crain excites the deepest sympathy for himself, wife, and family, and how to break the sad intelligence, under the peculiarly distressing circumstances, to the afflicted wife and mother was a serious question indeed. Mr. Crain moved from Olive street to West Haven some time ago. He was about 30 years of age. He was on a business trip West, having left the city only last Wednesday, and had $125 worth of shoe samples with him."

THE THEORY THAT EVENTS ARE GOVERNED BY FATALITY—THE DISASTERS ON THE MONTREAL AND THE LAKE SHORE RAILROADS OCCUR ON THE SAME DAY TO SECTIONS OF THE SAME TRAIN.

The believers in "fatality" will see a new confirmation of their theory in the late terrible railway disaster on the Lake Shore Railroad, at Ashtabula, Ohio, and the less disastrous casualty to the Montreal express train, at Pittsford, Vt. Both of these trains left the Grand Central Depot in this City in one continuous train, at 8:30 o'clock last Thursday morning. The train comprised engine No. 36, two cars, two express cars, the drawing-room car Yokohama, and the sleeping-cars Palatine, Osseo, City of Buffalo, Linden, Schenectady, and Plattsburg. The train was on time all the way to the station at Albany, which was reached at 1:30 o'clock on Friday morning. Here the engine, a baggage-car, the drawing-room-car Yokohama, and the sleeping-car Plattsburg were detached, and started on the route to Montreal. A new engine was attached to the remainder of the train, which proceeded to the West, and was subsequently wrecked at Ashtabula, while the other portion of the same train was hurled to destruction at Pittsford, Vt. Considerable comment has been made upon the danger attaching to iron bridges in cold weather, owing to the tendency of iron to snap, when thoroughly permeated with frost. It was an iron bridge which caused the calamity at Ashtabula, while on the other hand, a part of the same train was wrecked upon a wooden bridge in Vermont. The coincidence lies in the fact that two component parts of a train were wrecked on the same day, and at nearly the same hour, in distant parts of the country.

RELIEF FOR MR. BLISS' CHILDREN.

CHICAGO, Jan. 1.—Mr. Moody to-day raised through a number of the friends of the late Mr. Bliss, who with his wife perished in the Ashtabula disaster, the sum of $10,000 which will be put at interest for the benefit of the two sons of these highly-esteemed and honored residents of Chicago.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

DESTRUCTION OF A POTTERY MANUFACTORY ON STATEN ISLAND—LOSS $100,000—NO INSURANCE.

At 8 o'clock on Sunday night fire broke out in the fire-brick and pottery works of Messrs. B. Kreischer & Son, at Kreischerville, near the western terminus of the Staten Island Railroad, and continued to burn until yesterday morning. The large structures on the premises were entirely destroyed, with most of the contents, including a large quantity of manufactured material ready for shipment. The main building was originally put up in the year 1854, and a number of additions have since been made to it. The buildings were one-story in height, and covered an area of over an acre. The loss on the buildings alone is estimated at upward of $100,000, upon which there is no insurance—the company being their own insurers. Nothing is left of the immense structure but the large chimneys and side walls, which were of brick—the remainder being of wood. The origin of the fire is unknown. Mr. Wandram, Superintendent of the Railroad, despatched a locomotive over the road at an early hour in the morning with a message to notify the owners in this City of their loss. The Messrs. Kreischer say that the fire will not interfere with their business, as they have ample room at their works, No. 53 Goerck street, in this City, to continue their business until new buildings can be erected at Kreischerville. Over 50 men have been temporarily thrown out of employment by the casualty.

OTHER FIRES.

A fire broke out at 4 o'clock yesterday morning in the Remington House, formerly St. Charles Hotel, Syracuse, N. Y. The building was badly damaged by fire and water. No lives were lost. The following are the sufferers: A. C. Hotter, landlord of the Remington House, loss by fire and water, $8,000, fully insured; Cookes & Plant, druggists, $4,000 to $5,000, insurance $4,000; E. P. Howe & Co., booksellers, $5,500, insurance $5,000; Thomas W. Darton & Co., booksellers, about $11,000; fully insured. A number of the boarders at the hotel lose small amounts. The building is the property of the Syracuse University and College of Missions, the gift of Philo Remington, of Ilion. The damage to the structure is from $6,000 to $9,000, and is covered by insurance.

Alexander Crow's wood-yard, at No. 506 East Twentieth street, was damaged by fire last evening to the extent of $1,500.

THE MEXICAN FRONTIER.

PROTECTION OF AMERICAN INTERESTS DURING THE POLITICAL DISTURBANCES—INSTRUCTIONS TO BE SENT TO THE ARMY AND NAVY ON THE RIO GRANDE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1.—The subject of outrages upon American citizens on the Mexican border of the Rio Grande by the revolutionists is occupying the attention of our Government, and orders will soon be sent to our Army and Naval forces in that quarter, with a view to their protection, as there is now no Government in Mexico to which an appeal can be made for that purpose. It will be recollected that, between three and four years ago, Gen. McKenzie pursued into Mexico and punished a band of Indian marauders who had been committing offenses in Texas. This act of Gen. McKenzie, though not directly ordered by our Government, was not disavowed by it, although the Mexican Minister protested against this invasion of his country while in friendly relations with our own, and our Government, since that time, has asked the permission of the Mexican Government, which was refused, to pursue into Mexico such of its inhabitants as crossed the river and committed offenses in Texas, but with the Mexican Government was powerless or indisposed to arrest and punish. In view of the present revolutionary condition of that country, the question is likely to be brought to the attention of Congress whether outrages on American citizens shall be permitted to continue or whether this Government shall take into its own hands measures of redress.

A MAN FROZEN TO DEATH.

On Friday night, during the prevalence of a blinding snow-storm, J. Kehoe, an employe of the Central Railroad of New-Jersey, heard cries of distress in the vicinity of the Singer sewing-machine factory at Elizabethport. Stopping a moment he heard distinctly the words, "Save me, I'm lost." but could not tell from what direction the sound came. After answering several times, and not hearing the cries repeated, he searched for a while in the gloom, but not finding any one, he went home. On the following morning he searched the road in the direction he had been on the night previous, but was again unsuccessful. At 10 o'clock on Sunday morning several citizens of the place had been searching for Michael O'Neill, a well-to-do resident of Elizabethport, who had been missing from his home since Friday morning, found his body frozen stiff in the snow a short distance from the sewing-machine factory. A small portion of the head was visible, and, from all the circumstances surrounding his death, it is probable that the cries heard by Kehoe on Friday night were those uttered by O'Neill. The latter left his family on the day mentioned, saying that he would return home in the afternoon after he had collected his wages at the Driver Foundry, where he had been employed. He was last seen alive walking in the direction of his house in Court street, at night fall, and it is thought that, having missed his way in the blinding storm, and becoming bewildered, he had wandered to the open meadows, where, benumbed by the cold, he sank in his tracks and perished almost within sight of the lights of his own dwelling. In his pockets were found his wages, almost intact, and several small articles for his family. The deceased was an old and respected resident of the Third Ward of Elizabeth, and was a prominent member of the Building and Loan Association of that city.

RACING AT GILMORE'S GARDEN.

The performance at Gilmore's Concert Garden last evening attracted about 800 spectators. A new game called Jeu de Bar was introduced in place of polo. Following this came the much talked of mule race. Four animals were entered, and at times during the contest some magnificent bursts of speed were shown. The first heat was won by Dandy Jim, a fleet-footed quarter, who accomplished the distance in 10:30. The same animal took the second heat in 10:37. Coming down the homestretch, urged on by the energetic belaboring of his rider, who had unshipped one of the stirrup straps that he might use it as a persuader, and two young men who braced their shoulders against him and pushed. Following this came the trotting contest for a purse of $100, for horses that had never beaten three minutes. The first heat was taken in handsome style by Roanoke in 2:58½; the second and fourth by Pat Lynch in 2:55 and 2:51½, and the third, fifth, and sixth by Flora in 2:57, 2:56, and 2:53. Between the heats Capt. Nell Mowry attempted to ride the buck-jumping horse, but the animal, which was blindfolded, started before his rider was ready, and threw himself violently against a brick wall, knocking his shoulder out of joint and injuring Capt. Mowry's right leg severely.

RAILROAD TRAVEL IMPEDED.

OSWEGO, Jan. 1.—The storm which set in on Friday night, did not abate till early this morning. The train from Rome and Ogdensburg, due here at 9 o'clock Sunday evening, got stalled before it reached the city, and the passengers were brought in yesterday by sleighs. No trains left here this morning, except on the Syracuse road.

THE DESPOILERS OF MR. LINCOLN'S TOMB.

A telegram from Springfield, Ill., Dec. 29, to the Chicago Tribune says: "Hon. W. W. O'Brien, of Chicago, counsel for Hughes and Mullins, charged with the attempted desecration of Lincoln's tomb on the night of Nov. 7 last, is here in the interest of his clients. He represents the defendants as a much-abused community. They came here only because Mullins wanted to see his sick brother in Springfield, and Hughes wanted to go to Buckley or Lodi on the Central road. They knew nothing of the plot until Swegles suggested it to them, after their arrival in Springfield, and they wouldn't countenance it. Hughes was persuaded to go and see the monument with Swegles in the afternoon. About 6 o'clock they all went out, Swegles having stolen an axe; and when Hughes and Mullins saw Swegles flashing a lantern about and otherwise acting suspiciously, they left, and being afraid to return to town lest Swegles should have put up a job on them and have them arrested, and knowing that Tyrrell was about, they struck across the country afoot. This is their story as told by Mr. O'Brien. It doesn't agree with previous versions of the prisoners. Mullins has no brother here. Hughes went over 200 miles out of his way to go to Buckley or Lodi via Springfield. Mr. O'Brien professes to desire a speedy trial for his clients, and says he will be ready by the February term of the Sangamon Circuit Court."

THE WRECK OF THE CIRCASSIAN.

CONTINUATION OF THE SEARCH FOR THE VICTIMS—ONLY THREE BODIES RECOVERED—PORTIONS OF THE WRECK WASHED ASHORE—THE QUESTION OF RESPONSIBILITY.

Special Despatch to the New-York Times.

BRIDGEHAMPTON, Jan. 1.—The search for the bodies of the unfortunate men of the ship Circassian was rewarded yesterday afternoon by the discovery of three corpses, which were thrown up on shore, about four miles east of Montauk Point. The wind did not abate until nightfall, yet it was not so keen as to drive off the patroling men of the Life Saving Service, nor did it discourage throngs of sympathizers in the bereavement of the Shinnecock men from volunteering to aid in the melancholy task. The bodies found were known to be those of two Shinnecock Indians, and an apprentice boy, the Indians being familiar to all the dwellers along this coast. The news of the discovery traveled slowly, and it was not until this morning had well advanced that a party of the Shinnecock men went up to identify them, and await the action of the Coroner before taking them to the reservation for burial in the tribal cemetery. This morning the search was resumed along this beach. The shore is now strewn, from this point to Awaganuset, with bits of the wrecked vessel, cases, chests, boards, and spars. The casting up of this broken and unprotected litter attracted to the water's edge, in addition to the mourning relatives and friends of the lost, another class of hunters. While the poor men who live near the sea are as a rule strictly honest, they cannot quite conquer the prejudice which is bone of their bone and flesh of their flesh, that anything which comes to them from the sea, cast up on their shores, is their rightful prey and plunder. Obeying the dictates of this old prejudice, these old-fashioned wreckers have already begun their work upon the fragments of the wreck. Chests which have been thrown up have been broken open, their contents examined, and, in some cases, the locks and hinges broken and carried off. Cordage has been stripped from spars, brass-work and bolts have been secured wherever they could be detached without difficulty. None of these men are included in the number employed by the Coast Wrecking Company, nor do the men connected with the Life Saving Corps ever resort to such practices.

The water was comparatively smooth this morning, and the preparations for visiting the sunken wreck having been completed yesterday, it was decided that an effort should be made to ascertain whether any of the lost men were under the mizzenmast, entangled in the rigging. A boat was sent out without difficulty. The end of the broken mast was still to be seen, floating above the water, and the boat was carefully rowed around the spot. The water was clear enough to allow the boat's crew to see down to the shrouds, but no forms of men could be discerned. After a visit to the forward portion of the vessel the boat was run ashore again. The news of the finding of the three bodies at Montauk almost conclusively confirmed Campbell's statement, that none of the party had been lashed to the rigging, and other bodies may be expected to come to the beach before long. One old sailor here has expressed the belief that many of the men had become so heavy with wet clothes that they sank in the eddies, and that after a short time they will rise to the surface and be washed ashore.

Now that the alarm following the first announcement of the disaster has subsided, the people hereabout are beginning to talk about the question of responsibility. The sea-captains, and others who are considered men of good judgment, entitled by experience to a respectful hearing at least, are disposed to be very charitable toward Capt. Williams. They utter no word of rebuke, but they shake their heads slowly and regret that he should have thought it necessary to remain with his ship, when he might have taken his crew to the City and left the vessel in charge of the Wrecking Company. Or Capt. Lewis and his over-confidence in the strength of the ship there is little said that is not entirely favorable to his reputation; but it is felt that he made a serious mistake when he decided not to adopt the precaution suggested by Capt. Huntting—that of running a line ashore to use in case of an emergency. The signs were all favorable at night, on Friday, to the supposition that the wind would "have its blow out" in the east and then subside, as most storms do arising in that quarter. Had the wind held there the ship could have been reached at daylight and all hands rescued. There is no room for complaint of the efforts the men of the Life-saving Service performed. The three gangs were all composed of men picked for their work, who were ready to brave any sea in which a boat could live, and who would gladly have exposed their lives if by undergoing that risk they could have helped the doomed crew. Their chief, Capt. Bunting, is one of the largest-hearted men in the world. When the rescued men were brought on shore, it is told of him by one who stood near at the time, that he pulled off his own undercloathing to put upon their benumbed bodies, and that no one was more active than he in the efforts to rescue the men.

INFORMATION RECEIVED IN THE CITY.

The office of the Coast Wrecking Company in this City was visited to day by great numbers of the friends and relatives of the lost wreckers, all of whom were in great distress. Nothing has been received of a nature calculated to console them, except a dispatch from Bridgehampton containing the information given above, of the finding of the three bodies. The two schooners which left the Circassian on Friday, and ran off before the storm to find a harbor, were yesterday heard from at Fire Island, whither they had sailed before the easterly gale began. The Wrecking Company's agents are going to and from Bridgehampton daily. The sailors of the Circassian had put their luggage on board a vessel and sent it toward this City to await the coming of the ship. It is now at Robinson's stores, foot of Congress street, Brooklyn, and the relatives and friends of the lost may by applying to the Wrecking Company, obtain the clothing and other effects. The probability is that the bodies of the drowned men will, if desired, be brought to this City by the Coast Wrecking Company. Unless specially directed otherwise, the company will bury the dead in its own cemetery.

CENTRAL AND SOUTH AMERICA.

PERUVIAN FINANCES—THE CHILIAN MINISTER TO WASHINGTON—THE WAR IN COLOMBIA—A DUTCH CONSUL KILLED.

PANAMA, Dec. 22.—In the Chilian Congress, Señor Vicuna Heackenna had proposed to abolish the mission to Washington, and succeeded in getting it reduced to a second-class legation. The British man-of-war Repulse was at Valparaiso on Dec. 1. The Guatemala bark Ciene cleared from Valparaiso for Panama, having on board arms and ammunition, believed to be for the Ecuador revolutionists at Guayaquil. Peruvian finances are improving, and the trade of the entire coast is looking up. Henry Meiggs is before the Peruvian Congress with a great mining scheme in Cerro de Pasca. There was a great fight in the Lima bull-ring, between a bull and a lion. Fourteen thousand people were present. The bull was killed at short notice. The population of Peru, by the census returns just published, is 2,703,075. Ecuadorian news indicates the progress of the revolution and its probable success. The suspension of the heavy houses of M. A. The Lusarraes, of Guayaquil, is reported by the last mail. The liabilities and assets are not stated.

Central America is quiet, although ex-President Guardia, of Costa Rica, is trying to get up a war with Nicaragua. An embargo has been laid by the Costa Rican Government on all intercourse on the Atlantic and Pacific with Nicaraguan ports. Rubber-cutting in the forests of Costa Rica has been prohibited. The Colombian war was very sanguinary. On the 20th of November a great battle was fought at Garanata. The result is that neither party can claim a victory. The Liberals had 600 killed and 1,300 wounded, while the Conservatives had 300 killed and 1,100 wounded. Peace proposals have been made, but the result is not known. At Carthagena, on the 8th of December, a bloody tragedy occurred. A mob of armed savages killed the Dutch Consul Moreno, Augustin Velez, and two others, and wounded many more. The cause is not assigned, but it is presumed to be political. Great indignation and alarm are felt.

The isthmus is quiet. There has been no news from the surveying party since its departure from Penoguna. Heavy rains continue. The Pensacola and the Omaha (American) and the Daring (English) men-of-war are in the port. Business continues dull.

THE DEMOCRATS IN DOUBT.

THEY SEEK A WAY BUT FIND NONE.

VIEWS OF MEMBERS OF THE DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS COMMITTEE OF CONGRESS AS TO THE POWERS AND DUTIES OF THE HOUSE—THE ONLY ACT AGREED ON BY THEM THE CALLING OF MEETINGS ON THE 8TH INST.—DIFFICULTY IN FINDING LEGAL MEANS TO SECURE THE ELECTION OF TILDEN.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, Dec. 31, 1876.

The Democrats of the House and Senate at the beginning of the session organized a Caucus Committee of 11 members of the House and five Senators, to mark out a policy to be pursued by the party in Congress with respect to the counting of the Electoral vote and the inauguration of a President. It is already well known that the only subject upon which this committee agreed was an address to be issued to the country, particularly calling for meetings to be held on the 8th of January. This address was suppressed by the National Committee. There have been many meetings of the Caucus Committee, but they have accomplished nothing more. It becomes interesting, therefore, to learn the individual views of its members, and such results as could be obtained from the undertaking are given below. It will be seen that so far as any direct expressions are given, all the members entertain the belief that there will be a compromise, and that Tilden will be President. Nearly all maintain that the House has greater authority than the Senate in the settlement of the disputed questions. They will not admit that the President of the Senate shall count the votes. One or two of the Senators regard the meeting of the House and Senate on Feb. 14 as a joint convention, in which the vote of one Senator can be balanced off by the vote of a single Representative. Only one of the ten gentlemen who have spoken makes a pretense of being yet an unconvinced juror—that is Mr. Warren, of Massachusetts. But, with all their talk about the will of the people and the rights of the House, they are remarkably chary of opinions and devices as to how the "will of the people" and the "rights of their representatives," as interpreted by the Democratic politicians, are to be maintained. If one concedes at the beginning that the will of the people is that the law and the Constitution should be obeyed in letter and spirit, an examination of the views of the Democratic statesmen must lead to the conclusion that their difficulty in announcing a policy arises from the inability to find any legal means to secure their desires, and that consequently they must misinterpret the will of the people in claiming that it demands the inauguration of Mr. Tilden.

Senator Eaton, of Connecticut, holds that the House will insist upon its right to participate, equally with the Senate, in deciding upon the Electoral votes, and that the Democratic Senators will insist upon the House having such right. He says that he does not like to talk much about the situation, for the thing has a very bad look to him. He holds that the presiding officer of the Senate has no positive right to preside when the votes are counted, and that the joint convention, when it meets, has the right to elect a presiding officer, either from the House or the Senate. He declares that the Senate has no arbitrary power whatever, and if there is any arbitrary power it is in the House, which will, in this case, insist upon its use.

Senator Bayard, of Delaware, says that he does not for a moment consider the possibility of anything but a peaceable settlement of the pending difficulties. He believes that the committee appointed by the Senate and House to prepare and present a proposition looking to a settlement of the pending issue between the two bodies, will settle these questions to the satisfaction of both parties and the country. He holds, however, that neither the Senate nor its presiding officer has any arbitrary power in determining the validity of the Electoral votes. He declares, also, his belief that the two Houses, when they meet, may, in their separate and distinct character, each have its presiding officer in control, if such should be thought proper. He says that if the Senate should assume arbitrary power it would undoubtedly result in an infraction of the relations between the two Houses, and that the House, in the exercise of its constitutional prerogatives, might under the Constitution and the law, as he expresses it, elect a President.

Senator Wallace, of Pennsylvania, holds to the opinion that the two Houses of Congress have a right equally to consider and determine the questions that may arise in relation to the Electoral vote. He is firm in the conviction that the House has greater powers than the Senate, and following out what he would conceive to be its duty, if there should be any trouble between the two Houses as to counting the votes by any arbitrary action of the Senate, the House would immediately proceed to elect a President under the Constitution and in pursuance of law, as he expresses it. He does not regard it within range of probability that there will be the slightest disturbance.

Senator Kernan, of New-York, says there is no question in his mind as to the right of the House, equally with the Senate, to determine what are votes when the time shall come for passing upon the action of the Electoral Colleges. He believes in the superior authority of the House in finally determining who shall be President. He has no expectation of any difficulty in determining the questions at issue; yet he says that revolutions are not generally premeditated, but are developed by the force of circumstances.

Mr. Hewitt, of New-York, says the House will never yield the point that the Senate has the right to arrogate to itself or its presiding officer, to count the Electoral vote, or to pass judicially upon it. He says: "We will proffer to them their own medicine in the twenty-second joint rule. If they refuse it, they will stand before the country as holding the view that what is sauce for the goose is not sauce for the gander. For myself, I would vote for Morton's bill, as a settlement of all pending questions, if I could do no better." Mr. Hewitt, in his conversation upon this subject, is inclined to be a little bellicose, and to insist that the only possible settlement of the question at issue is the declaration that Mr. Tilden has been elected President.

Mr. Watterson, of Kentucky, like Mr. Hewitt, holding that the twenty-second joint rule is constitutional and is now in full force and effect, says that there is no question as to the right of either House to object to the reception of Electoral votes in States where there are disputes. He says he believes this right of objection will be exercised by both bodies, and he would not be surprised to see so many States thrown out that there would be no election by the people, whereupon the House would proceed to elect Mr. Tilden President, and the Senate to elect Mr. Wheeler Vice President. He thinks there is no question about a fair and peaceable solution of the pending difficulties; but does not seem to recognize that there can be any solution except such as would make Mr. Tilden President.

Mr. Lamar, of Mississippi, is for a peaceable settlement of pending questions. He believes that the House has constitutional authority in determining the Presidential question over that of the Senate; that it was the intent of the framers of the Constitution to place in the hands of the House, who are the delegated representatives of the people, power to make the President of the United States in case there should be any legal obstructions as to his being otherwise elected.

Mr. Warren, of Massachusetts, says he does not care to express an opinion upon the subject, because he is still open to conviction and has yet made no determination upon the questions which have been raised.

Mr. Payne, of Ohio, says he has well-defined opinions concerning the rights and duties of the House, but that he does not care to express them. Having been made Chairman of the House Committee, which is to meet with the Senate Committee for the purpose of determining upon these questions, he does not feel like giving positive statements of what his demands and expectations will be.

Mr. Randall, of Pennsylvania, holds that the twenty-second joint rule is in full force and effect, but further than that he does not care to express an opinion as to what course will be pursued in the final determination of the pending questions.

NEW-YEAR'S DAY IN WASHINGTON.

THE PLEASURE OF THE CALLERS INTERFERED WITH BY A HEAVY STORM—A BRILLIANT RECEPTION AT THE WHITE HOUSE—A CHINESE OFFICER OF HIGH RANK IN ATTENDANCE—OTHER RECEPTIONS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1.—The festivities of New-Year's Day were sadly disturbed to-day by a snow storm, which began an hour or two before noon and continued without abatement till late in the night. At first it rendered the ice-covered pavements, whose most slippery places it concealed, almost impassable. Then it became so deep as to obstruct the street-cars, and carriages were driven through the blinding storm with difficulty. By 4 o'clock most of the calling had come to an end, though a few persevering young gentlemen still maintained the endeavor to carry out their programme of visits. The official receptions of the President and the members of the Cabinet were concluded about the time when the storm began to interfere seriously with the callers. They were not, therefore, rendered less brilliant and complete by the storm. At the White House the brilliant scene of the reception of Foreign Ministers, dressed in their official costumes, and wearing their numerous decorations and insignia of rank, was followed by the usual reception of the Justices of the Supreme Court, Senators, and Representatives in Congress, the Court of Claims, officers of the Army and Navy, and the Department officials, and after 1 o'clock the throng of people not possessed of official titles, and in some cases, it is necessary to say, not possessed of good manners, were admitted. But the White House is open on this occasion to all classes and all degrees of men. At the President's reception was present a Chinese officer of high rank. He is in Washington in the interest of his Government, which is soon to send an embassy to this country. Receiving with the President and Mrs. Grant were Mrs. Sartoris, Mrs. Frederick Grant, and several lady friends of the President's family. There was at the White House, and at the other receptions, the usual display of elegant and costly toilettes. The only member of the Cabinet not receiving was Postmaster General Tyner. Mrs. Tyner has been, and still is, very seriously ill, though she is now past the dangerous crisis of threatened pneumonia. The receptions of private citizens were not so numerous as usual. At 9 o'clock to-night nearly a foot of snow has fallen, an almost unprecedented quantity for one storm in Washington.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

The last New Year's reception of President Grant commenced to-day in one of the most severe snow-storms ever known in this latitude. The snow began to fall at about 11 o'clock, as the members of the Diplomatic Corps were assembling to pay their respects to the Chief Magistrate, and has continued throughout the day and late into the night, thus preventing hundreds of persons from their usual observance of the day. The streets to-night are fully knee-deep with snow, and locomotion, either on foot or in vehicles of all descriptions, is a work of no little difficulty. Despite the terrible weather, however, the arrangements for receptions were on a grand scale, and at the Executive Mansion there was a scene of brilliancy and animation which has not been eclipsed at any previous levee. The Blue, Green, and Red Parlors were lavishly decorated with flowers. There was no variation on the long-established manner in which the guests were received. The callers were received in the Blue Parlor, where they were first presented to the President and Mrs. Grant. The ladies assisting Mrs. Grant in performing the ceremonies of the occasion were Mrs. Sartoris, Mrs. Fred Grant, Mrs. Carpenter, Miss Carpenter, Mrs. Paul, Miss Paul and Miss Drexel, all of whom, with the exception of Mrs. Sartoris and Mrs. Frederick Grant, are of Philadelphia. Mrs. Grant wore a black velvet-trained skirt, embroidered in jet, with a basque out heart-shape in front and high at the back, and with long sleeves, a diamond cross, and solitaire diamonds. Mrs. Sartoris wore a very rich claret-colored, velvet-trained skirt, and a high basque, clasped in front with diamonds. Mrs. Fred Grant wore, beneath a very full overskirt of the rarest white lace, a pale blue silk train. A high basque of the same silk was also covered with rich white lace and clasped in front with diamonds. The toilette of the ladies generally were remarked as having been of a most elaborate and becoming character.

The Cabinet officers, with the ladies at their households, were present during the reception of the diplomats, and assisted in the courtesies. The ceremony opened with the entrance of Secretary Fish with Lady Thornton, and Sir Edward Thornton with Mrs. Fish. Other members of the Diplomatic Corps followed; Señor Garcia, the Minister from the Argentine Republic, who, in the order of seniority, ranks next to Sir Edward Thornton, being the next who was presented, and then Señor Marsecal, the Mexican Minister. All of the foreign Legations were represented by the Ministers and their attachés. The uniforms were showy, and the full visiting costumes of the ladies accompanying them exceedingly attractive. Among them were Mr. Plunkett, Mr. Lascelles, Capt. Gore Jones, and others of the British Legation; the German Minister, the Brazilian Minister, and several Brazilian gentlemen, Señor Dardon, of Guatemala, &c.; Mr. Preston, of Hayti; Mr. Delfosse, of Belgium; Aristarchi Bey, and others of the Turkish Legation; Señor Dalla Costa, of Venezuela; Mr. Mantilla, the Spanish Minister, and the gentlemen of the Legation; the Japanese Minister and the gentlemen of his Legation; Count and Countess Hoyos, of Austria; Chevalier Favera, Dr. Blum, the Russian Minister, and Mme. Chickine, Count and Countess Lewenhaupt, of Sweden; Colonel and Senora Freyre, of Peru; the Danish Minister, the Chilian Minister, and many others.

Following the Diplomatic Corps in regular order came the members of the Supreme Court, Senators and Representatives, the officers of the Army and Navy, and other officials, in compliance with the regular and stereotyped programme. The Army and Navy officers were very conscious of the flattering encomiums because of their fine appearance; Gen. Sherman and the members of his staff being particularly eulogized on all sides. The Army and Navy Chiefs of Bureaus were present as usual. The representation was greater than that of last year, because of the attendance of a large number of the officers belonging to the artillery forces recently ordered to this city and stationed at the Arsenal. The President appeared to be in excellent health and cordially responded to the New Year's greetings that met him from the visitors.

The Cabinet officers with the exception of the Postmaster General, who did not receive, owing to the illness of Mrs. Tyner, all held large receptions.

The Secretary of State received the foreign Ambassadors from 11:30 until 1, and thereafter, until 3 o'clock, held general levee. A noticeable feature of the entertainment was the absence of liquid refreshments other than coffee and chocolate.

Mrs. Gen. Sherman, assisted by her daughter-in-law from Cincinnati, Miss Sherman, Mrs. Col. Audenried, Mrs. Col. Bacon, and Mrs. Miles held open house at her apartments in one of the prominent hotels.

Receptions by private individuals were very general, though it does not appear that they were so numerous as those of last year.

PARIS, Friday, Dec. 15, 1876.

The new Cabinet—if the term is applicable in this case, only two members having been changed—has not had reason for complaining of the reception it met with from the Paris press. A majority of the journals express a prudent confidence in it, while making critical observations that show no decided animosity. It is a healthy sign of the times to find all parties recognizing the enormous difficulties which had to be overcome before this Ministry could be organized. The conservative journals generally accept it as the best which could be formed under the circumstances; the extreme radical journals are sarcastic; the Republique Française gives imperious advice and talks in a patronizing way. The situation was such that there had to be a Fourton Ministry or a Jules Simon Minist

POLITICS IN CONNECTICUT.

DEMOCRATIC DISAPPOINTMENTS.

INGRATITUDE OF THE ARISTOCRATIC GOVERNORS TOWARD THE SUBSTRATUM THAT ELECTED THEM—THE WORKERS IN THE PARTY IGNORED—NEPOTISM OF THE MOST GLARING CHARACTER—THE STATE GIVEN OVER TO THE HUBBARD FAMILY—LEGISLATIVE REMEDIES PROBABLE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

HARTFORD, Monday, Jan. 1, 1877.

In this correspondence, during the recent campaign in Connecticut, some pointed distinctions were made between Mr. Hubbard, the Democratic candidate for Governor, and Mr. Eaton, our senior representative in the United States Senate, the chief point being to show that Mr. Hubbard's politics, as well as ability, forced him upon a plane of oratory and opinion so high above the heads of his party as to make him an unpopular candidate compared with Mr. Eaton, whose magnificent powers as a gesticulator alone gave him welcome to the average Democratic heart. Mr. Hubbard, however, in spite of all intellectual disadvantages, succeeded in being elected, but more by the force of the existed partisanship of the Presidential campaign than from any inherent strength. But for the impetus he gained from the partisan fervor excited by the managers in behalf of "Tilden and reform," it is more than probable that the "boys" would have defeated him. Added to the enthusiasm of the campaign were promises to the middle-men and workers that they had much to hope for in the election of Mr. Hubbard, and, consequently, when the election had closed, there was the usual expectancy among the laboring under-strata for recognition.

It appears, however, that Mr. Hubbard has not justified the assurances which were made, though unquestionably without his authority, and has seriously offended the average Democratic politician who had expected much. The vote in this city was so strong, and his majority so large, that it was anticipated he would readily consent to certain appointments, especially as they had the sanction of the regular Ring. Mr. William H. Green, who has been Quarter-master General during Gov. Ingersoll's terms, was a candidate for further recognition in the possession of the office and the enjoyment of the comfortable salary which is a sort of sinecure. Mr. E. D. Fisk, who is Chairman of the Democratic Town Committee, and to whose efforts much of the good work of the campaign hereabout is ascribed, was also a candidate. Both these gentlemen, in a sense, represent the ward manipulators, though the former had something of a following outside. That one or the other would get the place was felt to be certain, but Mr. Hubbard pushed them both aside, and has selected a person unknown to Democratic fame in these parts, and, as might be expected, the local Democracy is in a state of bitter rage.

In making up his staff, however, Mr. Hubbard has not ignored Hartford altogether, but has chosen as his Adjutant General Major Gen. W. B. Franklin, of Colt's pistol works, and once of the Potomac army—in the days of McClellan and masterly inactivity. The reason given by the disgruntled ones why Gen. Franklin should have been honored is that he belongs to the Hartford Club, of which Mr. Hubbard is also a member, and that the appointment is on personal grounds wholly; and, being somewhat aristocratic in character, is in accord with the estimate placed by the Democratic masses upon Mr. Hubbard when they defeated him as a candidate for Governor in 1872. Aside from the honor and salary which attach to the office of Adjutant General is the title which it gives—making a man a "General" for life without ever having smelled of gunpowder; and there are so many Democrats who are ambitious to cover their peace records in war by securing the title of General, that you may imagine the depth of feeling which prevails in giving the place to a man who had already acquired the distinction by promotion in the regular Army.

While the gentlemen selected may be altogether better fitted to perform the duties of the offices to which they are called, yet that fact is of no account among the men who considered themselves worthy, and really did by themselves or agents the severe work of the campaign. The result goes to prove what had been said of Mr. Hubbard's "aim" as a party candidate—that he cares very little for the ward bummers, if he does not really despise them, and is not to be turned from his convictions or pride to satisfy even a just claim that to the class he ignores, he is indebted for his election. As spectators, the Republicans may certainly enjoy the discomfiture of their opponents, though they may not be disposed to find fault with Mr. Hubbard for his independent action.

In another direction Mr. Hubbard has shown that he is not independent enough to rise above the filial and selfish attachments which he himself in 1873 denounced in the President of the United States as dangerous to liberty. Nepotism frightened him four years ago. Gov. Ingersoll was also badly jarred by it, but when he became Governor he appointed his nephew as Executive Secretary at $1,600 a year, and the next year gave the place to his son, who had, meantime, got into jacket and trousers, and was considered old enough to act and draw the salary, though yet a minor. In the several State Departments, the Democratic officials, who had each and all worried through many sleepless nights because Grant had appointed relatives to office, "got even" with the National Government by doing the same thing themselves. Mr. Hubbard's first impulse was to appoint to the Secretaryship Judge George G. Sumner, of the City Court of Hartford, a very capable man; but just at the decisive moment, Gov. Ingersoll, seeking evidently for some justification for his own act, put the suggestion into the head of Mr. W. D. Hubbard, son of the Governor elect, to go for the place, as there was little or nothing to do, and it would be a handy perquisite. The theory is that the son spoke to his father, and the father nodded assent to the son, as it is now settled that the former is to have the place, and Judge Sumner must retire.

But this terrible nepotism does not rest here. The Controller has two good appointments—Chief Clerk in his office and State-house Keeper. Mr. C. C. Hubbard, of Middletown, is the Controller elect, and if there is any name in Middletown more conspicuous than another it is that of Hubbard. Though the Democracy of the State did not elect the whole family of Hubbards, yet they had two of the name on their ticket, one at the head and the other at the tail. Mr. C. C. Hubbard, finding that Mr. R. D. Hubbard was to make the best use of relationship possible for one wing of the family, wisely concluded that he would do his share toward the noble enterprise of crowding in as many of the name as possible. He has, therefore, decided to put in a new chief clerk and also a new State-house Keeper. This displaces from the Controller's office the son of the present Controller, Dr. Goodrich, and puts into forlorn retirement and temporary obscurity Mr. R. J. Johnson, who, as State-house Dictator, has shared all the secrets of the party, and been leaned upon for advice in the greatest stress of partisan contests. With nepotism thus prevalent—and I am not about to stringently condemn it, but shall pass it by simply as illustrating the hollowness of the Democratic outcry a few years ago—there are very promising reasons why, in the course of the next two years, the people of the State should not only be provided with copies of the statutes and reports of departments, but also, for library use, with carefully-prepared genealogies of the Hubbard family.

The salaries of the Governor and Lieutenant Governor of Connecticut have been for years ridiculously small. The former only received $1,100 up to a comparatively recent period, and the latter has had but $500. In the forthcoming report of the State Treasurer the Legislature will be recommended to place the salary of the Governor at $4,000, the same as the Judges of the Superior Court get, and to raise that of the Lieutenant Governor to at least $1,500. Particularly with reference to the office of Governor is it reasonable that he should have more than is now paid, as upon it he cannot live respectably, and poor men cannot afford to take the office. It is the custom here, if a Governor is a lawyer by profession, that he should cease to practice in the State courts, and by giving up that practice he may be forced to surrender the bulk of his income. Gov. Ingersoll felt the strain of the small salary very forcibly, and only recovered himself pecuniarly by diverting his practice into the United States Courts, and as he secured several important patent cases, he probably lost nothing in the long run. As for the Lieutenant Governor, it is a minor matter whether he receives more or less. Holding the position is sure to bury a man so deep politically that the most he can do to keep himself before the public is to preside at agricultural meetings; and yet it is a question whether a man ought not to be well paid when he deliberately consents to force himself into such hopeless martyrdom.

The Legislature will come together this week, and will enter upon the experiment, for the first time, of a Winter session. You have already been advised of the probable political changes which the Republicans will make in legislation to restore to the statute books the wholesome laws against fraud which the Democrats have removed for partisan purposes. It is proposed in some quarters to take away from the Governor the appointment of Bank, Railroad and Insurance Commissioners, and place it back in legislative hands. With reference to the Railroad Commissioners very many Democrats favor it because there are numerous disappointed men in the State, and more than that, Gov. Ingersoll has not been fortunate in his appointments, which have been severely partisan with reference to this board. When the change was made giving the appointments to the Governor, in 1874, it was urged that Gov. Ingersoll would select men fitted for the work, taking, for example, a civil engineer, a lawyer, and a practical business man, the board being composed of three; but he did nothing of the sort, rewarded his personal friends, and made weak selections, with possibly one exception. In theory, Executive appointments are right, and if there had been judicious selections, no one probably would suggest a change. As it is with the Railroad board, it is urged that the Legislature can do better than Gov. Ingersoll has done, and not "half try." These and other matters will be the subjects of conference when the members get together, and probably some well-defined plan of action will be agreed upon early in the session. As the Democrats, to suit locality, provided in their charter bills for the appointment of Prosecuting or City Attorneys by the Judges of the local courts, and also gave the appointments to the Common Council in Democratic cities, it is expected that the Republicans will make the whole thing uniform by allowing the Judges to appoint. This will, unfortunately or otherwise, throw out of office several very able-bodied Democratic prosecutors.

Some weeks ago there appeared, in the dispatches from Washington to the World and other Democratic newspapers, an account of the appearance there, at a meeting of the Tilden and Hendricks Club, of Col. Love, of Connecticut, who spoke very confidently of the position and courage of the Democracy of his State. No one here at the time could "place" Col. Love, so to speak. He was a mystery; and yet why should he be, after such outspoken oratory as he indulged in in behalf of our gallant reformers? Gradually it dawned upon the political mind here that the person, like the hero in the official Army Gazette, had got his name spelled incorrectly. The real speaker was Mr. E. M. Lull, formerly a Democratic member of the Legislature from Tolland. He reappeared in the western part of the State last week, and is now meditating in the Litchfield County Jail, to which he was sent for obtaining money under false pretenses.

A TEXAS MURDER.

A CHRISTMAS NIGHT TRAGEDY IN AN AUSTIN THEATRE.

A dispatch from Austin, Texas, Dec. 26, to the St. Louis Globe says: "A terrible tragedy was enacted at the Capital Theatre on Christmas night Wilson, the proprietor of the establishment, being killed, and the bar-tender having his tongue shot out. The attending physicians say he also will die. The night before Christmas Wilson ejected several disorderly characters from the theatre, one of the number being a noted desperado and a brother of Bill Thompson, of Kansas, the man who was captured in this State three weeks ago, and taken to Abilene, where he had murdered a Sheriff. Thompson swore that he would be revenged on Wilson for putting him out, and the latter had a presentiment that he would be killed, speaking freely to his family and friends on the subject. During the day a gentleman called on Wilson and told him that he had overheard several men discussing a plot to kill him at the theatre that night. 'To-night is my last to Texas,' replied Wilson. 'I have felt it all day.' The doomed man applied to the Captain of Police for protection, and, after stating their fears, two officers were detailed to keep Thompson and his gang under surveillance. Wilson's mother entreated him to remain at home on the night of the murder, but as it was Christmas night, and he knew the theatre would be crowded, he refused to neglect his business. The old lady, who, with seven daughters, were dependent on the unmarried man for support, went bitterly on parting with her son. As Wilson entered the theatre he noticed Thompson and two accomplices seated on tables opposite the bar. It was necessary for him to pass them in order to reach his arms, which were behind the bar. As he passed, Thompson thrust at him with a large knife, at the same time throwing a handful of lamp-black in his victim's face to blind him. Wilson rushed to the bar, seized a double-barreled shot-gun and fired at Thompson, but just as he pulled the trigger one of the two officers detailed to protect him knocked up the weapon and the charge passed over Thompson's head, lodging in the wall. Thompson then fired three shots at Wilson, hitting him every time, one ball entering the heart, causing instant death. A fourth shot was fired at the barkeeper, cutting out his tongue. The murderer and his accomplices were arrested and locked up, but they will probably escape the punishment they deserve, as all who know Thompson are afraid to testify against him. He bears the same reputation in Texas as his brother in Kansas—that of being a cold-blooded murderer."

THE LICK ESTATE WRANGLE.

The San Francisco Chronicle of Dec. 24 endeavors to shed a little light upon what is getting to be a complicated matter as follows: "The entire Lick estate is in the hands of the Board of Trustees for disposal according to the last deed of trust. There are three sets of claimants. First, John H. Lick, son of James Lick, and the nearest heir. He has asked for letters of administration on the estate, but has been opposed by the second set of claimants, headed by James William Lick, nephew of James Lick, and which consists of two nephews, two nieces, two half brothers, and one sister of the deceased millionaire. These in turn are opposed by a third set of claimants, who have objected before the Probate Court to letters of administration being granted to any save claimants under their party. This third set is headed by William H. Lick, who includes in his petition two of the second set of claimants, James W. Lick and his sister, Mrs. Julia Ann Antrim, of Paris, Illinois. This third petition is brought by William H. Lick and Henry Lick, of Alton, Illinois. Regarding these two a history was given a reporter of the Chronicle yesterday by one of the second set of claimants, who stated that John Lick, brother of the deceased James Lick, died in 1835, leaving one son, James William Lick, and one daughter, Mrs. Antrim, by his first wife, and two daughters, now deceased, by his second wife. Six months after his death his wife gave birth to a daughter, who has since died. About four years after the death of her husband the widow gave birth to twins, both boys; the mother still bore the name of Lick and gave the name to the boys, who now are bringing the third petition. This is the story as given by one of the heirs, and who positively declares it to be true. So that neither of the Lick heirs as we can call them on the behest of James Lick, three suits before the Probate Court must be finally disposed of."

THE ORDER OF MAXIMILIAN.

Besides the numerous decorations which exist in Germany, and which are so lavishly bestowed by crowned heads and ministers upon courtiers, officers, civil servants, scholars, and artists, that they have almost ceased to be distinctions, there are two which differ from all the rest, the Ordre pour la Mérite and the Order of Maximilian. They are intended exclusively for men distinguished in science and art; the number of knights is limited by statute, and the election rests with the knights themselves, though it has to be approved by the Emperor or the King. These orders are still highly prized by scholars and artists, and, as several vacancies had occurred during the last year, there has been much curiosity as to the result of the new elections. The Ordre pour le Mérite—for, strange to say, it still retains the French name which was given to it by Frederick the Great—is confined to 30 men of science and 10 artists, for the whole of Germany. There are also some foreign knights, among them Thomas Carlyle, Prof. Owen, Sir H. Rawlinson, in England, but without the right of voting at new elections. This order is valued highest; it is the order which one always sees on Humboldt's portraits, and to belong to the Thirty Knights pour le Mérite in Germany is as much as to belong to the Forty Immortals of the Academie Française in Paris. The Order of Maximilian, founded by the late King Max of Bavaria as a reward for distinguished merit in science and art, admits a larger number of knights. The elections for this order have just been held, the best-known among the newly-elected knights being Berthold Auerbach, the Poet of the Dorfgeschichten; Prof. E. Von Brücke, the eminent medical professor of Vienna, the founder of the science of phonetics; Prof. Conrad Maurer, the Icelandic scholar, and Prof. Helmert, the editor of the Astronomische Nachrichten.

THE ILLINOIS SENATOR.

WHO SHALL SUCCEED GEN. LOGAN?

COMPLEXION OF THE LEGISLATURE—THE BALANCE OF POWER HELD BY THE INDEPENDENTS—THE SEVERAL CANDIDATES OF EACH PARTY—SENATOR LOGAN'S CHANCES CONSIDERED—A VERY MIXED CONDITION OF THINGS.

From Our Own Correspondent.

CHICAGO, Thursday, Dec. 28, 1876.

There are 51 Senators and 153 Representatives in the Illinois Legislature, making a total, on joint ballot, of 204; necessary to a choice, 103. As nearly as can be ascertained, before the assembling of the caucuses, the Republicans will have 21 Senators, the Democrats, 24, and the Independents, 5; the Republicans, 79 members of the House, the Democrats, 74, the Independents, none—the totals on joint ballot being 101 Republicans, 98 Democrats, and 5 Independents. The Republicans are 2 short of a majority, the Democrats, 5 short, the Independents, 98 short. The problem is which party can secure a majority. Not since the historic fight, nineteen years ago, in this State, has the Legislature been in such doubt as to permit of any question about the politics of the United States Senator to be elected. The situations then and now have a similarity that might be ascribed to the theory that history repeats itself. Five men then held the balance of power. John M. Palmer was the most prominent. He has since been a General in the Union Armies, Governor of the State, and conspicuous in all political parties, and on all sides of every question that has engaged public attention. Norman B. Judd has been Minister to Prussia, served two terms in Congress, and was, until recently, Collector of the Port of Chicago. Benton C. Cook has been in Congress, and now he is a well-known railroad lawyer. These three, with two others, held the balance of power. They were Anti-Nebraska Democrats. Gen. Shields was the Democratic and Abraham Lincoln the Whig candidate. At the proper juncture Palmer presented the name of Lyman Trumbull, and Shields and Lincoln were defeated. Palmer and his four comrades were then starting in political life. They were stronger than the average of legislators, and made the most of their opportunity. They could have elected one of themselves, but they discerned that their independence and influence would last only so long as they refused to be candidates for the Senatorship. Of the five Independents now in the Senate four may be said to be of Republican antecedents, and it would be natural to expect that they would vote for a Republican in preference to a Democrat. This they may do, if they get a Republican who suits them. There is at present no reason for believing that they have a preference for either party, in fact they have studiously avoided entangling alliances of any kind and are patiently waiting for what may turn up, hoping that in the scramble they may come out ahead. There is not a single one of them that would not like to go to the United States Senate himself, and who does not think that by him lustre would be reflected upon the State. Senator John C. Haines, of Chicago, an ex-Republican, is a candidate, and he expects to rally the other four Independents around him and compel either the Republicans or the Democrats—he doesn't care which—to take him up. Mr. Haines is an old citizen, and cuts quite a reputable figure in histories of this city, of which he was twice Mayor; but nobody except himself dreams that he is the kind of timber out of which United States Senators should be made. He is a savings bank President of more than ordinary ability, has had considerable experience in politics, and is a Greenbacker. While a candidate for the office he now holds, he was supposed to have pledged himself to vote for Senator Logan, but it seems that he does not feel bound by the pledge now. Mr. Haines is not to be sneezed at as a candidate. A few of his personal Democratic friends in the Chicago districts have held a meeting and decided to support him. He has a long-headed brother, who may manipulate things successfully for the interest of the family. Mr. Fawcett Plumb, another of the Independents, has a rich uncle he desires to send to Washington. After ascertaining that nobody will vote for the uncle but himself his nephew may vote for Haines. It is not likely that Haines or Plumb will vote for Logan under any consideration, but if they cannot get their own choice they will probably support Palmer or Trumbull. Mr. John Buehler, a German Senator from a Chicago District, will not vote for a Democrat or for Gen. Logan. He states that he will vote for a Republican—who is not Logan. E. B. Washburne seems to be his man. The other Independents are not committed, so far as can be ascertained.

While it is true that the five Independents can hold the balance of power, it is equally true that any other five members can do the same. It is rumored that six members of the House who have been claimed and counted as Democrats have announced that they were elected as Independents, and will act as such. In that case the Haines programme cannot be executed. If six Democrats keep out of the caucus there will be no use in holding a caucus. It is stated, but not on trustworthy authority, that these Democrats will vote for a Republican, if necessary, to defeat Palmer, Trumbull, Haines, or any one who has been on both sides of the fence, and never very long on either side. It is probably true that certain Republicans will vote for a straight out Democrat like Mr. Morrison, ex-Congressman Robinson, or Melville W. Fuller, to defeat the same class of men.

The sentiment of the Republican Party is overwhelmingly for Gen. Logan; that is, he is the first choice of perhaps three-fourths of the Republican members. Still, there are some who are disinclined to vote for him, and who may refuse to go into caucus and be bound by its action in case he should be its nominee. The Democrats are holding out inducements to them to bolt, with the expectation that out of the chaos something will turn up to their advantage. They have all to gain and nothing to lose by a Republican bolt, which they are actively encouraging. If the Republicans stand firm they can elect the Senator; if not Logan, some one else. While Logan is the undoubted choice of a majority of the party, his friends are not so blindly devoted to him as to insist upon his election at the risk of losing a vote for the party in the Senate. If it becomes apparent that he cannot be elected some one else will be taken up. Col. Robert E. Ingersoll has many warm friends, but he disclaims being a candidate, and is for Logan. It is certain that Col. Ingersoll will not seek the office, and it is also certain that he will not decline if elected. But he will not be elected. There is a Christian prejudice against his theology, or his want of it. Mr. Washburn's name is mentioned, and he would be a strong candidate; but if Logan does not get the place himself his next object will be to see that Washburn does not. Mr. Cullom, the Governor-elect, announces that he is not a candidate, and that he is for Logan, but if it becomes necessary for the good of the party to elect him, of course he will serve. Mr. Weldon, a lawyer of Bloomington, and Leonard Swett, of Chicago, also Lieut. Gov. Shuman are mentioned as compromise candidates. Of the Republicans, Gen. Logan's prospects are now the best; of the Independents, Mr. Haines's; of the Democrats, John M. Palmer's, and Lyman Trumbull's, with the chances rather against all of them. President Grant is talked of jocularly, but he can't get more votes than Gen. Logan, and his indorsement of the latter has not improved his chances; among those who rail against "machine" politicians, Gov. Beveridge is trying to figure in the capacity of "dark horse," but he is not stronger than Logan.

The most that can be said at this writing is that things are mixed, and it is unsafe to venture predictions until the Legislature assembles. The houses will be called to order Wednesday, Jan. 3, at noon, and balloting for Senator will probably begin the Tuesday following.

THE PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

HOW IT APPEARS FROM A DEMOCRATIC POINT OF VIEW TO A SMART WOMAN.

From the Lancaster (Penn.) Examiner.

I never until this Fall realized the debt we owe the press, and I never appreciated the advantages of living in a country that elects its own rulers. My husband is a Democrat, and my father, who boards with us, is a Republican. On the 7th of November I took down my last Winter's cloak, and I couldn't keep back the tears. That cloak cost $25, but it was short, and of course I couldn't wear it this season. It didn't seem as if I could wear my double Paisley shawl all Winter, but I thought of the sufferings of the poor, our heavy church debt, and of the many obligations William had to meet the 1st of January, and I concluded I wouldn't say a word about it. I might be a dowdy, but I would go calmly forward—up the church aisle—supported by the smiles of an approving conscience.

When William came home that night he said New-York had gone for Tilden, and there was a glow upon his brow and a light within his eye I hadn't seen there for years. The biscuits were light as a feather, and said I: "William, what do you think I had better do about a cloak this Winter? You know they don't wear short cloaks. I suppose you don't feel as if you could afford a new one?"

"See about it," said William, scraping the last drop of peach juice from his preserve plate. That's a dreadfully vulgar habit, and I've told William so over and over again, and I do wonder that being a genuine, elegant Democrat, he will persist in it.

The next morning, when I passed through the sitting-room, William sat shivering over a closed register in his shirt-sleeves, his hair uncombed, but he cried out from the top of his paper, "Democratic victories everywhere!" "The country gone en masse for Tilden!" "Intense excitement and rejoicing!" We had waffles and maple molasses for breakfast, and I made too coffee myself. William had made the same dab at his head with the hair-brush, but had evidently missed. Father called for toast, and said he had neuralgic pains streaking all down the left side of his face. William read aloud soothing morsels from the Democratic paper, such as "Indiana gives Tilden 10,000 majority!"

"What do you think this morning about my having a new cloak, William?"

"Of course you can have a new cloak, if you need one. 'Full returns not yet received from Oregon, Nevada, Florida, and Louisiana, but they are undoubtedly ours!'"

"Um!" said father.

I felt a good deal of anxiety about family prayers. William isn't a professor. Father leads devotions, and I was afraid he would be too supplicatory; but he prayed mostly for the heathen, Jews, and such like, but didn't refer to the Democrats, and only once—just after the heathen—alluded to our suffering country.

When William came up to dinner he said returns of Democratic majorities were pouring in from all quarters, and said I: "William, I've been thinking the matter over, and I do believe it would be the best economy to buy a fur cloak. Everybody is wearing fur. It might cost more at first, but it would be cheapest in the end; fur is so durable."

"How much will it cost?"

"Mrs. Col. Tucker's sealskin sacque was $200 last Winter, but I don't feel as if, in our circumstances, we can afford more than half that sum. Father's coat and I think I could get a good, desirable article, not so rich as some, but still good enough for people in our circumstances, for $150."

"Um!" said father.

William had taken out a blank check, and was reflecting, when in whisked Mrs. President of the Democratic Club and Mrs. Florida and South Carolina had gone for Tilden, and William was wanted down to the club-room to see about the illumination. He filled out the check, and I immediately went down street and selected the cloak.

That evening a shade of anxiety—a scarcely perceptible shade—settled on William's countenance, while father's neuralgia was better. William asked if I had done anything about my cloak, and, if I hadn't, he should suggest waiting awhile; furs might be cheaper. He said, when I asked him about it, the illumination had been postponed.

The next morning I heard the boys in the street screaming that Hayes was elected, and when I went down father was sitting on the front stairs careless, and with his vest on one shoulder, while William balanced himself on the edge of the hat-stand. Both patriots were stoned to the core. They had just taken in the morning papers. Very little conversation was made at the breakfast-table, but father was extremely polite to William, and said he didn't know when he had eaten buckwheat cakes that tasted so much as they did when he was a boy.

At noon William didn't stay to dessert, but father, having eaten his own pudding, drew William's unbroken plate to himself.

The tears were welling to my eyes, and father kindly inquired why I wept.

"I've been thinking my old hat fixed over won't look at all suitable with my new cloak, but William is so blue I can't bear to ask him for more money."

"Mercy on us, child, don't cry over a bonnet. Go down and get what you want and bring the bill to me."

My hat was to be of seal-brown. "Two feathers or three," asked the milliner. I thought of the hundreds out of employment, of the destitution and want the Winter would behold, of the vacity and pride of Dem., but with a heart subdued I answered, out with the afternoon papers, yelled: "Florida and Louisiana both sure for Hayes!" I knew how father would feel, and said: "O, three, certainly."

For two or three days there was a look, not so much of pure melancholy as of gloom, wrath, and vengeance commingled in William's countenance, and he sprinkled pepper on his beefsteak fearfully. Father said that he awaited the action of the Louisiana Returning Board with confidence in their integrity, and sipped his tea with a spoon. I never knew father to sip his tea before with a spoon in my life.

By and by it was reported that Electors' names had been omitted from Republican votes in Louisiana, and father said there was a chill in these November days that struck to the very marrow, and William said he intended to arrange his business so that he could spend two or three weeks of Winter in some Southern clime, say in Georgia or Louisiana. That afternoon I went shopping, and at tea-time laid on the cloth four or five samples of seal-brown merino.

"William," said I, "which of those do you call the best piece of goods?"

His opinion coincided with mine. I held two bits off at a distance. "Ever so many women that I know have dresses off that piece," said I. I laid the bits down and sighed. Then I held them off again and said, "How dreadful it is to be poor!"

"If you want a dress so badly, get it, Mary Ann," said William.

"I really don't know as in our circumstances I ought, William.

"If there's anything I hate to see it is a shabbily dressed woman—get it." So, in order to satisfy William, I had to get the merino.

Since that time Hayes has been sometimes elected and sometimes Tilden, but disguises have fallen off in our family, and though my father and William treat each other with forced politeness, such words as "corruption," "nigger," "bolt-dosed," have become familiar language in what I once hoped would be a refined Christian household.

"William," said I, as I rasped for more baked potatoes one morning, "I never allowed myself to read the Beecher scandal—much as I wanted to—and if it was worse than this I'm glad I didn't."

One day, when Louisiana went for Hayes, father promised me a new parlor carpet. If the question isn't settled soon I think I can easily get the house refurnished, and perhaps have a new China set and a silver cake-basket, for I know Congress can't adjourn if it is closed, for I know I could just as well spend another fortnight in Philadelphia, and I do believe I could have that lovely pink coral set I wanted so badly.

I don't understand politics, but I am so glad I live under a republican form of government, and I do feel sure, if any one makes good resolutions it entries to be economical, and really means to be a good wife and daughter, a way will open out of difficulties.

INTEMPERANCE IN SCOTLAND.

From the Pall Mall Gazette.

The Scotch are a sober nation, but they can get drunk occasionally, and it appears from a return just issued that during the year ending June 30 last 54,330 persons were taken in charge in Scotland for being drunk, of whom, however, it is fair to say that 31,146 were simply incapable, and only 23,184 were disorderly as well as drunk. Of these drunkards Glasgow claims 15,231 cases, and the neighboring burghs of Govan, Maryhill, and Patrick contribute 1,969 cases between them, making a grand total for Glasgow of 17,213. These are all returned under the head of "incapable," there being no such charge as drunk and disorderly in the Glasgow Police Act. It is, however, difficult to believe that 17,213 persons could have drunk themselves into a condition of such incapability that they were none of them capable of disorderly behavior. Edinburgh contributes 6,923 incapable and disorderly drunkards, and Dundee 3,607. The town of Aberdeen shows well on the list, with only 596 of both classes; Greenock gives 2,464; Leith, 1,991; Paisley, 1,693; Port Glasgow, 923; Hamilton, 763; Kilmarnock, 735; Ayr, 699; Stirling, 671; Dumfries, 621; Forfar, 263; Montrose, 227; Brechin, 190; Arbroath, 76; Broughty Ferry, 27; Kirriemuir, 16; Dunfermline, 178; and other places in Fifeshire, 428. The total for the County of Aberdeen is 615. Perth County numbers 763, and Perth City 236. The County of Kincardine gives a total of 192, and Kinross County, 5. To the town of Lerwick alone belongs the honor of having no drunkards, of any variety, to figure on the list.

THE MEXICAN REVOLUTION.

PARTICULARS OF RECENT EVENTS.

DETAILS OF THE FLIGHT OF PRESIDENT LERDO—THE FINAL BATTLE OF HUAMANTLA—SCENES IN THE CITY OF MEXICO AFTER THE BATTLE—THE UNITED STATES CONSULATE.

Correspondence of the San Francisco Bulletin.

CITY OF MEXICO, Nov. 27, 1876.

As you may have anticipated, the decisive blow has been struck, and Mexico has changed Governments. It has been known for some time that the two opposing forces were approaching each other, and there was a rumor late last week that a battle had been fought on the 16th. This proved true, and full details reached us on Tuesday. As you may not have had them, I will give them in full, exactly as they are. The battle, which was fierce and bloody, occurred near the line of the Mexico and Vera Cruz Railroad, within sight of the station of Huamantla, the Government forces being commanded by Gens. Allatorre, Topete, Villagrana, and Tepeo, and the revolutionary forces by Gens. Diaz and Gonsalez in person. The action commenced about 10 o'clock in the morning, continuing with fury on both sides until 3 o'clock in the afternoon, when Gen. Gonsalez, coming up to reinforce Gen. Diaz, made an attack upon Allatorre in the rear, and, putting his forces between two fires, the demoralization was complete, and a surrender followed immediately. Allatorre had the choice of ground, Diaz occupying a very unfavorable position, and at the approach of Gonsalez, his troops were beginning to lose ground, but the reinforcements came up most opportunely, giving Gen. Diaz a complete victory. On Monday morning, the 20th, the news of the defeat was confirmed here in the capital by the arrival on the previous night of Gen. Allatorre with some of his officers, accompanied by the political and military Governors of Puebla, that city having pronounced against Lerdo. The excitement that prevailed was intense. Allatorre, in concluding his report to the Government, assured them that further resistance would be utterly useless, resulting only in the spilling of more brave blood to no purpose. Congress went into a secret and stormy session, and the report spread like wildfire that Lerdo would resign, upon which the populace began to rest with a good show of contentment, when it was suddenly contradicted, with the additional rumor that he would that night escape from the city, accompanied by some of his Ministers.

This he accomplished, going in his own coach and four, escorted by 800 soldiers as guard, and taking with him silver to the amount of about $140,000. It is certain that the night before he left, all the money in the Treasury, raised by forced contributions, with $23,000 taken from the Monte Pio, (Government pawn-shop,) was divided between Lerdo and some members of his Cabinet, and the 49 Deputatas who supported him. A little beyond Tacubaya, a few miles from the city, 100 of his guard, with their commanding officer, turned back; and again, at Lerma, their stopping place on Tuesday night, another 200 deserted and returned to the city, the officers giving as a reason that the soldiers, being aware of the amount of silver accompanying them, a conspiracy was feared, which would result in the killing of Lerdo, the Ministers, and officers, and the taking of the booty by the conspirators. On Wednesday last the party passed through Toluca in safety, and since then no thing definite has been heard from them, although it is believed that Lerdo will endeavor to put himself in communication with either the port of Acapulco or Manzanillo, if not captured in the meantime.

On the Tuesday morning, when the fact of the escape was made known, and the robbery of the Treasury, (for so the people considered it,) the greatest excitement and confusion prevailed. A boisterous crowd of the lower classes surrounded the palace, and the air was rife with their wild vociferations as they shouted, "Muren los lerdistas," and "Viven los Porfiristas," (Death to the Lerdistas," and "Long live the Porfirists"). Numerous speeches were made by members of the excited rabble, setting forth the sanguinary, unjust, and perfidious acts of the fleeing President and his Ministers, but happily no outrages were committed. The anticipated entrance of Gen. Diaz was a great reception room for them. During the excitement of the morning, however, the guard left in the palace, consisting mostly of the undrilled levy, under the apprehension that they would be compelled to fight. Diaz, shouted in wild enthusiasm, "Viva Porfirio Diaz! Viva Porfirio Diaz!" and firing indiscriminately into the crowd, they rushed wildly out from the gate of the palace en masse, and went flying down the street, nothing restraining them. One person was killed and several wounded, as the result of the pronunciamiento on a small scale.

The political prisoners of Belean and Tlatteloco were released on Monday and Tuesday, including Señor Romero Rubio, Minister of the Supreme Court, Señors Ramirez, Guzman, and Attorney General Aiza, who were detained as State prisoners in the Municipal Buildings, near the palace. We all confidently looked for the entrance of Gen. Diaz on Tuesday afternoon, but as it transpired afterward, the communication both by telegraph and by railroad was cut off. Gen. Diaz was not made aware of the true situation of affairs at the capital until Wednesday noon, and it was currently reported through the city that he had commenced reorganizing his forces, with the view of taking Mexico by assault. Just as he was about to move on the city, information reached him by courier of the flight of Lerdo, the danger the capital was in from the lack of governmental authority.

On the following day, Thursday, the loud clangor of the cathedral bells announced the approach of the victorious Diaz, and for the third time the people gathered by thousands to receive him. The principal streets—San Francisco and the Interoceanic—from the Alameda to the Plaza, were lined with thousands upon thousands of the excited populace, through which the fresh hero of Mexico passed amid deafening shouts, universal and continuous, of "Vivas! Vivas! Vivas!" Arriving at the palace, the hero disappeared for a moment, but presently reappeared on a front central balcony, from which he made an attempt to speak to the assembled multitude, who, with their enthusiastic hurzas, together with the ringing of the bells, drowned every attempt at utterance, reducing the effort to a mere pantomimic performance.

The forces said to have been engaged on both sides in the late great struggle are very seriously estimated as to make it impossible to arrive at the truth. Those of Diaz are said to have been from 6,000 to 14,000—a pretty good margin—while those of the Government could not have outnumbered them. The losses of the latter are acknowledged to have been far heavier than those of the victor, which number some 800 in killed and wounded, with 150 prisoners, arms, artillery, &c. The losses of Gen. Diaz amount to some 1,100 or 1,200, killed and wounded. Among the latter, Gen. Gonzalez—the valiant officer, who, coming as he did at the critical moment, turned the fortunes of the day—and also Tiburcio Montiel, ex-Governor of the Liberal District.

But scarcely has the blood so freely spilled grown cold, or the acclamations to Gen. Diaz died away on the ear, when we hear of another combination or new revolutionary programme in favor of Gen. Mejia, ex-Secretary of War, whose design is to throw over completely the "Plan of Tuxtepec," with Gen. Diaz as its nonest and patriotic promulgator, and institute another political burlesque, based on principles not unlike those upon which President Lerdo attempted to sustain himself. Gen. Diaz accordingly has constitutional right as Vice President, and will support him as such, until a duly authorised election shall declare a legitimate Executive, but he will submit to no illegitimate and unpatriotic intrigues. These have already cost the country too much blood and treasure. The plan is said to be deeply laid, and may involve this wretched country in a yet longer and more bloody struggle—or rather, it may prove that the bloody struggle has but just begun. The city is quiet once more, and the people are generally satisfied now that Diaz is here. Señor Iglesias is still in Guanajuato, and we hear nothing of his intended approach to the capital to assume the position of President, (provisional;) but standing at bay, and thus in part uncovering his position, we do hear loud-mouthed rumors that Gen. Diaz may send forward a part of his well-tried warriors to salute him. This may be mere rumor. Of course the city was full of alarm during the interim of Lerdo's flight and Diaz's entrance. It was a season of danger.

Many robberies of houses and individuals did occur at night and during the evening. Parties on horses would ride up and demand of the unfortunate pedestrian whatever of value he might chance to have about him, and from the muzzle of a pistol there was no appeal. "Thieves for their robbery have authority, when Judges steal themselves." The Police refused assistance, as everything is in a chaotic, revolutionary state.

At one time there were serious fears entertained in regard to the United States Consulate, as it was known that the railroad company had deposited $50,000 with Consul General Sutton for safe keeping. It is supposed that the cargadores who conveyed it to the Consulate revealed the fact, and the spirit of mob violence was ready for even a raid upon the sacred portals of the United States Consulate. Better counsels prevailed and the behavior was abandoned, but later the rumor was current that Lerdo was secreted in the United States Consulate, and for three days there was a secret espionage kept upon both the Consulate and the American Legation. The servants of both houses were interrogated upon the streets and in the Plaza, and were boldly told that it was known that Lerdo was secreted by the United States officials. Especial guard was on duty at the Consulate to protect the treasure stored there, and to watch against any premeditated attack. Windows and doors were barricaded, and, although no overt act was manifest, there was a sense of relief, I doubt not, when Diaz entered the city and held supremacy over a lawless mob.

MICHIGAN UNIVERSITY.

A telegram from Ann Arbor, Mich., says that at a meeting of the Board of Regents of the Michigan University on Friday last, the School of Pharmacy was entirely separated from the Department of Literature, Science and Arts, with which it has been heretofore connected. Steps were taken to lengthen the course in medical schools from six to nine months each year. A plan has been drawn for a new museum building and art gallery, costing something more than $100,000. Probably the Legislature at the coming session will be

The choice of Mr. Sloan as Speaker of the Assembly by the Republican caucus last evening is, as our readers know, a very good one. Mr. Sloan is an able man, an experienced member of the Legislature, upright in his personal character, and a representative of the best elements of the Republican Party. The nomination is a deserved recognition of past services and an opportunity for increased usefulness in the future. The most important duty which Mr. Sloan will have to perform at present is the selection of the House committees. It is necessarily a delicate and difficult task; but we have confidence that Mr. Sloan will see to it that the reform sentiment in the party which has shown its strength in his own election shall be efficiently served throughout the session. The work of all American Legislatures is done, and their powers are chiefly lodged, in the committees. It is for Mr. Sloan, therefore, to say, so far as the Assembly is concerned, whether the next session of the Legislature shall be faithful to the renewed and better spirit of the party which has so signally asserted itself lately, or not. We have no doubt as to the result.

Messrs. Tilden and Robinson yesterday organized themselves into a mutual admiration society, and held a brief, but brilliant, session in the Assembly Chamber. Mr. Tilden assured Mr. Robinson that it was a great compliment to be called to fill his [Tilden's] place, and hinted that it had been done because Mr. Robinson had occupied a subordinate place in the Government, while Tilden was in the Governor's chair. He then proceeded, in an amiable manner, to show that so much had been done, and it had been so well done that there was very little room for the exercise of even Mr. Robinson's great abilities. Mr. Tilden posed for the thousandth time as the modern Hercules, and recounted his achievements with an assurance that would have been the despair of the Greek braggart, demiged though he was. He told Mr. Robinson how he (with Mr. Robinson, but mostly he) had reduced taxes and improved institutions and laws, and systematically called into the civil service, "whether by appointment or election," men of "higher ideals," and so on to the end of the old story. One would suppose, to read his rhodomontade that there had been no Legislature in existence for the last two years, and that Mr. Tilden, not the people, had amended the Constitution and chosen the officers of the State.

This elaborate boasting, of course, had, like all of Mr. Tilden's recent public acts, a purpose with reference to the attainment of the Presidency, to which the forlorn reformer still clings with the tenacity of despair. Mr. Tilden takes occasion on retiring forever from public life, to parade his fancied superiority over the rest of the world in hopes of fanning the weary energies of his supporters at the national capital in their effort to grasp the prize which the law denies him. But it is too late. The sober sense of the people has not been cheated by his empty pretensions and his persistent attempts to steal the credit which belongs to others. Mr. Tilden occupies at present a position quite as conspicuous, but by no means as honorable, as he imagines. The greatest calamity that can befall a man of his stamp has happened to him—he has been found out. He is to-day the representative, not as he fondly hoped he would be, of a great nation, not even, as he might have been, of a great party, but only of a gigantic scheme of fraud and outrage by which he expected to seize the Presidency. The scheme has failed, and Mr. Tilden "but wounds his lungs" to prate so loudly of his false claims to public respect—which he long ago wholly forfeited.

For a belligerent speech, that of Gov. Vance, in Raleigh, N. C., yesterday, was as pacific and inoffensive a one as could well be imagined. The Governor—who would not be Governor if there had been a fair election in his State—wishes it to be understood that North Carolina Democrats will not take the first step in any violent resistance to the inauguration of President Hayes. That responsibility he lays quietly on the shoulders of his Northern friends, and then, with a comfortable sense that he has sheltered himself behind a condition that can never be fulfilled, he goes on, in the approved oant terms of the Tildenites, to declare how dangerous he and his followers would be if the Northern Democrats should open the ball. We suppose Mr. Vance enjoyed this little bit of bombast, and that being the case, no one else need object very much to it. It is quite harmless.

Mayor Ely's inaugural Message is certainly not the work of a man who knows much about the Municipal wants of New-York. It is as commonplace in style as it is weak in treatment. It sets out by making two assertions which are not true: 1. That 172,000 legal voters deposited their ballots in New-York last November, and 2, that it is conceded that all our City Judges are men of "good ability." The Message is mainly occupied with the baldest possible allusions to matters of more or less importance which Mr. Ely has evidently neither studied nor thought about. The solitary suggestion of the Message which shows the slightest acquaintance with the necessities of our Municipal system is to the effect that one member of the Board of Apportionment should be chosen as the representative of taxable property.

Our readers will find in another column a very interesting letter from our special correspondent at Columbia on the general politics of the South, and particularly of South Carolina and Florida. Its author is a gentleman of large experience in public affairs, an acute and sensible observer, and of peculiarly sound and candid judgment. His statements may be relied on, and they are certainly pointed and pertinent. There is so much persistent misrepresentation touching Southern politics by the Democratic papers, and so little opportunity for personal observation by most Northern people, that the conclusions of a clear-headed correspondent who has had unusual opportunities to get at the truth, have a value of their own.

COMPOUNDING WITH FRAUD.

The disposition to compromise with perpetrators of robbery and fraud and in other ways to treat them lightly, is unfortunately not new in the American management of criminal cases. Not the least damaging evidence of this tendency lies in the loose notions that prevail in reference to a trusteeship, and the penalties that ought to attach to faithlessness in the discharge of its duties. Morally considered, the dishonest trustee is infinitely worse than the common thief. The latter—if his operations are on a small scale, or if he have no rich relatives to bear the cost of restitution—is hunted down without mercy. His photograph goes into the Rogues' Gallery, and he is a marked man where known to the end of his days. His vulgar method of stealing, however, is less dangerous than the plan pursued by the dishonest trustee. He is in most cases trusted implicitly. His position and pretensions have obtained for him unlimited confidence. Property is handed to him for safe-keeping and judicious management, in the belief that his integrity is equal to his capacity. Widows and orphans depend upon him, perhaps for their bread. If there is any position of trust which should be jealously guarded, surely it is this. If there is any crime connected with the misappropriation of funds for which the law should provide stringent penalties, to be firmly enforced, it would seem to be this betrayal of confidence in the perversion of property held in trust. Practically, we know that no crime is more uniformly condoned, or is at any stage attended with less risk to the perpetrator. There are many who speak of a trustee's dishonesty as a venial thing, and who have more sympathy for the offender than for his victims. He may employ trust funds in speculations entered into for his own benefit. He may use them in acquiring property which is so disposed of as to be beyond reach. He may expend them in keeping up the appearances which bring other trusts into his hands. He will break down at last and disappear. The officers of the law make no attempt to catch him. Beyond the unpleasantness incident to running away, he incurs very little hazard. His friends invent apologies for him. They proclaim his piety, his kindness of heart, his charms in social life, his good intentions, and wind up with assurances of unabated regard for the "poor fellow." He has nothing to fear from the civil law, either because he has wasted his own as well as the trust funds, or because what is saved is beyond the reach of ordinary processes. As for the criminal law, it does not disturb his slumbers. Unless he has, in an incautious moment, resorted to forgery to obtain control of money, he may be reasonably sure that no punishment will overtake him. The breach of trust, cruel and scandalous as it is, entails upon the guilty party little besides disgrace. They for whose benefit the misappropriated funds were placed in trust are rarely heard of as objects of sympathy. As the world goes on this side of the Atlantic, more kind words are expended upon the knave who squanders that which belongs to others than upon the persons who are beggared by his rascality. As long as this impunity lasts, Mr. Swan will have many imitators.

Other betrayals of responsible fiduciary positions pass unnoticed. Directors and officers of an insurance company may falsify sworn accounts for the purpose of misleading examiners and the public, and the law officers of the State make no sign in the direction of a criminal prosecution. Money contributed for provident purposes, and held in trust, may be wasted or lost, no one knows how; and though perjury be committed to conceal the fact, no voice is heard demanding punishment. The plea is put forward that Directors and officers are "honorable men," and that is relied upon as an answer to proofs of perjury. They whose duty is to vindicate the law compound with fraud in obedience to the lax opinions which prevail in regard to abuses of trust. Whether they occur in the mismanagement of a savings bank or of a life insurance company, the result is the same. Fraud goes unpunished. The victims have not even the satisfaction of seeing the victimizers put upon their trial.

The crowning illustration of the baneful habit of bargaining with fraud comes in connection with the Tammany prosecutions. The release of Woodward, and the expected reappearance of Sweeny, are evidently the first fruits of a change of policy on the part of those by whom the prosecutions are managed. At the outset the true principle was affirmed. All the powers of the law were to be employed to make an example of the audacious men who had plundered the City on a scale that had no precedent. They were to be held amenable to the criminal law, while their ill-acquired wealth was to be got at through civil suits. The two processes were essential to each to the other. The mere recovery of money fraudulently obtained would obviously have been inadequate; it would have been a compromise with robbery, the robbers having the best of the bargain. On the other hand, penal proceedings, while of the highest consequence to an outraged community, would have met the requirements of only half the case, since they would have left convicted thieves in full possession of the profits. Now, it seems, another course is to be pursued, the history and mystery of which is yet to be written. No one can doubt that the negotiations between the counsel for the thieves and the prosecuting lawyers, looking to bargains in the interest of the thieves, were begun prior to the arrest of Woodward at Chicago. His reappearance on the scene was unintelligible, except on the supposition that the result just announced was even then understood. Of the million or more which Woodward realized as his share of the Tammany plunder, he gives back $150,000 and is liberated on his own recognizances. A very good bargain for Woodward—a very discreditable one for the City. On what basis the negotiations with Sweeny are proceeding time will tell. It is certain, however, that the explanations vouchsafed to the public are disingenuous. Sweeny is not likely to come hither simply as a witness, on an assurance of being allowed to return to Paris in safety. If he comes at all, it will be as Woodward came, to play a nicely-arranged game, to disgorge a small proportion of the money stolen from the tax-payers, and then to mingle once more with them a free man. The altered tactics cannot end here. If Woodward and Sweeny may buy exemption from punishment, paying therefor with the proceeds of gigantic robberies, Tweed cannot be kept in prison. Their guilt is, in its way, as great as his; and accepting the settlement with Woodward as a sample, the pecuniary penalties are not likely to be intolerable in the case either of Tweed or Sweeny. The pretense that Woodward and Sweeny are to be used as witnesses is also in Tweed's favor; for if the prosecution is willing to release its hold upon captured criminals in consideration of a little money and testimony that shall bring into the net participators in the plunder now unknown, then it is clear that Tweed's testimony would be worth that of all the rest put together. And when, on one pretext or another, the leading spirits of the Tammany frauds shall have closed terms with the law, and secured peace and safety by a judicious application of stolen money, the citizens of New-York may find time to meditate upon the merits and consequences of a system which converts the machinery of justice into an agency for trafficking with thieves.

THE ASHTABULA DISASTER.

Later particulars of the frightful railroad disaster near Ashtabula, Ohio, do not greatly mitigate the terrors of that calamity, as first reported. There is still some uncertainty as to the exact number of the killed. It is not likely, indeed, that the death-roll will ever be complete. Many of the dead were not only burned past all possible recognition, but the bodies of some were so nearly consumed that it would be difficult to tell whether the poor remains represented one person or fragments of several. It is likely that some of those hurled from the bridge and drowned in the stream, were swept away by the icy current, and will never be recovered. The world is full of people who, dying and making no sign, may leave none to moan over their absence and inquire what has become of them. Some such may have been on that fatal train. We have no later data from which the exact number of persons on the train can be ascertained. There is some reason, however, for changing the original estimate made by those in charge of the train. The conductor says that about one hundred and sixty passengers left Buffalo with him, and that about thirty left at various stations. If forty-nine escaped alive, and all the rest perished, there would be a loss of life of about seventy-five. Possibly, as investigations are pushed, the estimate of the number on the train at the time of the wreck may be still further changed. The conductor's calculation would seem more likely to be nearer the truth than that of any passenger who had not specially noted the occupants of the train. But some of the passengers insist that there were nearly 200 on the train.

The disaster had all the elements of a most horrible tragedy. The night was cold and stormy, the snow blowing furiously as the fated carriages struggled on to the bridge. The continuity of the train was not broken, but, as the net-work of the iron span gave way, everything upon it, save an extra locomotive at the head, was precipitated into the gorge below. The fall, the fire that succeeded, and the icy stream in which some were entrapped by the crushed ice, were the means by which so many were cut off. It was a frightful spectacle, at which we do not look, even in imagination, without a thrill of horror. It has filled many homes with lamentation, and left many persons maimed for life. It was a swifter destruction than that which came upon the lost in the Brooklyn fire. The train fell like a bolt. The agony of some was prolonged. But the most part died suddenly. It was a mercy that they were spared the lingering suffering of a few.

The attention of everybody will be directed to conjecturing the cause of this shocking slaughter. It is idle to say that railroad traveling is attended with a certain percentage of risk and that the average of casualties is made up somehow. In this particular case, there was a fault in the bridge which fell; if this were not true, the bridge would have been standing to-day and there would have been no such lamentable disaster to chronicle. To be sure, the bridge had stood the test of heavy trains for eleven years; but there must, sooner or later, come a strain which will bring down a structure which has its weak point. It came to the Ashtabula bridge last Friday night. The storm of snow had nothing directly to do with the disaster, except to add to its terror. Even the cold, which was intense, should not have hastened the catastrophe. There have been colder nights during these eleven Winters past, and the bridge has stood through them. But the weak place, wherever it was, may have been made weaker by the low temperature; and the work, with its imperfection undetected, was ready to fall when frost had contracted the iron, and a heavy train had rolled upon it. Men build bridges for absolute safety; for years, after a due trial, they seem absolutely safe. Then vigilance relaxes. Millions of passengers go and come without any apparent danger. But the work only needs the fatal touch. It is tottering to its fall.

If the Ashtabula bridge had been a new one, there would be less difficulty in reaching the exact cause of its destruction. As it is, there is as yet no explanation of the disaster to which both the managers of the road and the public will assent. It is natural for the former to plead that the disaster was unavoidable; and the public is equally certain to say that it was the inevitable result of criminal and gross carelessness. There are reports, more or less vague, of the bridge being considered unsafe. Certainly it does seem as if a work of this sort, constructed to insure the safe passage of countless passengers, might have been so built that a frequent and careful examination would show its weak spot, if it had any. It is probable that this was the case with the Ashtabula bridge. Whatever may come of the frost theory, or the theory of a car thrown from the track, in this particular case we are forced to the conclusion that the Ashtabula disaster might have been averted if the bridge had been more vigilantly examined.

TAXATION OF BANKS.

Within a few days one of our leading banks has reduced its capital by the amount of a million; several other banks are following suit, and it is believed that within a short time the banking capital of New-York City will be reduced several millions, in order to escape the excessive taxation under State laws. That is, this considerable amount of capital will be withdrawn from banking business in this City, and will very probably be transferred elsewhere.

The Department of Taxes and Assessments informs us in its recent report that the assessments on shareholders in banks has increased from $73,390,989 in 1875 to $85,145,114 in 1876, or that an added burden of nearly $12,000,000 taxes was laid in this year of business depression on one of the most important branches of business in this City. Besides this increase, the real estate of the banks was taxed in 1876 $10,395,256. It is obvious that this is only another illustration of the familiar fact that over-taxation defeats itself. The banks have immediately begun measures, now that their suit in regard to taxing surplus earnings has been decided against them in the General Term, to reduce their capital, or by distributing their surplus to escape these heavy burdens.

The case seems not unlike the local taxation laid in this City on the property and business of steam-ship companies. This, as is well known, became so heavy that the companies transferred their property to foreign cities, and, under both local and Customs taxation, the whole business was finally removed to European countries. No American could carry on this enterprise under such burdens as we had laid upon it here. Our experience in taxation has been frequently of this unpleasant nature. It seems only another instance of that ignorance of the principles of political economy among our legislators for which we have paid so dear.

The experience of foreign nations had proved that a few taxes laid on articles of luxury and indulgence was the best source of income, and weighed the least on production. Under the glowing idea of having an "American" system of economy, we began by taxing everything that man could wear or use, and, fearing to oppress any one branch of industry, we ended by weighing them all heavily with such burdens that our manufactures ceased to be able to contend with foreign, and we became known as the country least able of all to compete with the countries of the world in cheapness of production. After tremendous losses and burdens from this injudicious taxation, we have begun to reform our national taxation, to reduce the number of taxable objects, to aim especially at luxuries and burden trade or business as little as possible. We retain, it is true, many foolish burdens on production, but these will gradually be lessened; and in the meantime the prostration of business has so lowered all prices in the country that we are enabled now, in spite of our taxation, to compete again with foreign manufacturers.

State and local taxation, however, still remain burdensome. The load placed this past year upon banking is evidently tending to withdraw important masses of capital from that business, and perhaps from the City. Now, this City has already lost enough in the indiscreet burdens it has placed upon various branches of business. Factories are continually removing to the country; large commercial houses are transferring their offices to other cities; the steam-ship companies have gone; iron-works, ship-building, or machine-making are almost a thing of the past. Capital has been driven away by taxation and bad Municipal management. If now, banking capital be driven away, we shall diminish one of our most important sources of wealth, for New-York is naturally the financial centre of the country. Pennsylvania is a remarkable instance of the wisdom of sparing personal property and capital invested in business from heavy taxation. Its great progress in wealth as compared to New-York is largely due to this fact. The experience of the world is against efforts to tax heavily personal property.

Of the recommendations made in the report of the Commissioners of Taxes and Assessments it is difficult to speak until the whole report is published. They scarcely seem to reach the evils. The exemption of real estate and the taxation of personal property for State purposes would seem against all sound economical principles; nor are license taxes held to be of the wisest nature in favoring production. The recommendations in regard to bank taxes are exceedingly vague, though they appear to except the surplus from a separate tax.

THE SPREAD OF RESPECTABILITY.

The recent flight of an eminently respectable gentleman who had misappropriated the funds of other people, and the still more recent nomination for Congress of another eminently respectable gentleman, who is intimately associated in the public mind with the late Mr. James Fisk, Jr., and the present Mr. William M. Tweed, ought to attract attention to the rapid increase in numbers and power of the so-called respectable classes.

It needs no demonstration that the crime of abusing trusts and embezzling trust estate is one which is monopolized by the respectable classes. The tramp, the burglar, nor the pickpocket, no matter how depraved he may be, is ever known to run away with one or more hundred thousand dollars which have been confided to his care. Poverty, undoubtedly, tempts weak men to crime, but when has a poor workman, or even a common pauper, been guilty of embezzling the funds of a savings bank or of squandering at the gaming table or the Stock Exchange the property of widows or orphans, with the care of which he had been intrusted? Crimes of this character are invariably committed by respectable men, and their growing frequency shows that the respectable classes are increasing to an alarming extent. Respectable men have gradually worked their way into positions of prominence and trust, until at the present moment they actually control most of our banks, insurance companies, and other moneyed corporations. As a rule, the Presidents of those corporations are men of notorious and conspicuous respectability. Among the bank cashiers and treasurers who daily handle vast sums of money can be found men whose confirmed respectability has been a matter of common report for years. We have in this City become pretty well accustomed to the rule of the vicious elements of society, but were the statistics to be published which prove the extent to which the respectable classes control moneyed corporations and private trust funds, the community would be absolutely appalled.

The danger of this state of things is self-evident. Experience has shown that when an eminently respectable man thinks that the time has come for him to take whatever money is within his reach, and to carry it with him to Belgium or Spain, nothing can prevent him from carrying out his purpose. Our first knowledge of his crime comes from the discovery that he has already made his escape; and our only consolation must be drawn from the assertions of his friends that they had never thought him capable of embezzlement. The blindness of such friends is difficult of explanation. Those who know the last respectable gentleman who has disappeared with the property of confiding persons, must have known that for nearly thirty years his respectability was notorious. He was not merely accused here and there, by malicious enemies, of having been occasionally respectable, but every man and woman who had ever heard his name knew that habitual and hardened respectability was his most prominent characteristic. Had he been a penniless outcast, sleeping at night on the Park benches, and begging whisky from charitable liquor-sellers, no one would have suspected him of an intention to embezzle the funds of a church or a savings bank; but why any one should have been surprised that so thoroughly respectable a man should have been proved a defaulter is explicable only upon the hypothesis that too partial friends willfully shut their eyes to his respectability and its natural tendencies.

How we can suppress the respectable classes and put a stop to their depredations is not very clear, but it is evident that unless we are willing to have all the loose change in the country carried off to Europe by absconding defaulters, something must be done. It is worth while to inquire whether an "habitual respectability act," modeled upon the "Habitual Criminals act," might not prove useful. Under the latter act the Police have the right to arrest any person who is known to be an habitual criminal, and the magistrates have the power to commit him to prison. It is not necessary for him to commit any overt act of crime, but the mere fact of his habitual criminality warrants his arrest and detention, as a preventive measure. Now, if the Police were authorized and required to keep under surveillance all men who are known to be habitually addicted to respectability, the opportunities for successful crime would be greatly lessened. From time to time it would be well to arrest two or three pre-eminently respectable men, and to give them thirty days each on Blackwell's Island, as a wholesome warning to their confederates in respectability. It is not pretended that respectability could be wholly suppressed by the passage and enforcement of such an act, but there is certainly good reason to suppose that the measure would have a restraining and beneficial influence.

After all, we must rely mainly upon the effect of education and careful moral training. Most of our leading, respectable men are the offspring of respectable parents, whose tendencies they inherit. We have no right to expect that a boy born in a hotbed of respectability, and accustomed from his infancy upward to associate exclusively with persons among whom respectability is esteemed as something manly and creditable, will be better than the influences which surround and form him. He will grow up an open and shamelessly respectable man, and he will naturally have funds committed to him, with which he will run away in due time. If we wish to successfully combat this giant evil, we must rescue the young and innocent from the respectable influences to which they are exposed, and carefully train them in a better way. By this means we may check their evil tendencies, and render them a blessing rather than a danger to the community. That things can be long permitted to go on as they are at present is manifestly impossible. Last Summer it seemed to be an imperative duty to warn our readers that the Police element had grown much too powerful to be held in check by our small, though efficient force of thieves and burglars, and that, unless prompt measures were taken, we should all be in danger of being clubbed to death, or thrown into damp cells on the charge of drunkenness, whenever we might feel disposed to indulge in a little apoplexy or other cerebral dissipation. To the danger to life from the bold and lawless Police element is now added the danger to property from the alarming increase of the respectable class, and if we are successfully to cope with these two dangers, we must arouse ourselves to the task at once.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

CHICAGO REAL ESTATE.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

When it was understood that the firm of A. T. Stewart & Co. were to establish a Western department (we don't use the word branch) in this city, there was quite a flurry of real estate speculation in the vicinity of the buildings they were to occupy. It was believed that property in that locality would not only advance in value, but that this expression of confidence in Chicago would be followed by similar action from those in different branches of business, and that thereby the real estate owners generally would be benefited. No such result has as yet followed. It is not intended in this statement to convey the impression that neither Messrs. Stewart & Co. nor the other houses which have established themselves here are succeeding as well as they anticipated. The same result would doubtless have followed if they had each transacted five times as much business as they have. John Taylor, of New-York City, bought last week a lot on the opposite corner from Stewart's, and paid for it $97,000, or $1,000 per foot for the Wabash avenue front. The lot is 163 feet deep. It was considered worth $2,000 per front foot in 1873. Since that time it has been considered worth much more than the amount for which it was purchased.

So it can readily be seen that, however much the mercantile interests of the city may have been advanced by the advent of the above-mentioned and other houses, the effect upon real estate, even in their immediate neighborhood, has not yet been made apparent, unless to make sales at any price possible. The reason for it all is, mainly, that while there is firm faith in the future of Chicago, no one seems to be satisfied that the bottom has been reached. Some income-paying property is being bought occasionally, two men within the last year and a half having purchased to the amount of over $1,000,000, but there is a general distrust which has become all but morbid.

Two years ago a jury awarded to the owner damages of over $400,000 for the condemnation for park purposes of 80 acres of land, about eight miles south from the Sherman House, on the lake shore. This was about $5,000 per acre. A new trial was asked and granted. It is the opinion of some of the best judges of real estate that the land to-day is not worth $500 per acre, some rating it as low as $200. It will probably be a matter of surprise to your readers, who are within such an easy distance of Central Park, that property as remotely situated as this should be desired for this purpose. It is no less a wonderment to the citizens of Chicago to-day. They voted for it, however, and must pay for it; but it is a heavier discount on the future than they would be willing to meet if called on to decide at the present time.

What for a long time after the panic gave an impression of activity was exchange. When it became impossible to sell for money, the thousand dealers, more or less, were driven to trading one piece of property for another, and usually at the inflated prices of 1873. Suburban property, free from mortgage, would be traded for incumbered inside property. After awhile the latter would be traded for farms, or, later, for wild land, the consideration in nearly all cases being at former balloon rates. Many sales have been made in this way where the prices were represented to have been from $20,000 to $50,000, but in which no more actual cash passed than was necessary for the examination of titles and the record of papers. This last resource has failed, the owner of Iowa, Wisconsin, or other undeveloped land preferring to keep it to trading it for Chicago property, mortgaged.

This system of trading has rendered it extremely difficult to determine the decline in the values of real estate. It would, perhaps, be not far from the truth to say that the depreciation in residence property has been not less than 50 per cent., and of acre property from 62½ to 75 per cent. A Boulevard lot of 103 feet frontage, for which the owner was offered $22,500 cash, can be purchased for $7,500; houses which would have readily brought $8,000 or $10,000 are offered for $4,000 or $5,000; acre property, considered worth $2,500, can be bought for $1,000 or less. The main difficulty, however, is to secure purchasers even at the above concessions.

In looking in The Times at the report of sales I see it noted that very many of them are under foreclosure—so that in this way your transactions far surpass ours in amount. This has not been the custom here. It is but fair to say that if we were credited with all sales of this character, we should be found to be doing as lively a foreclosure business as any city in the country.

In what has been written there has been no disposition to lessen in any way the greatness, glorious future, &c., ad libitum, of Chicago, but to concede that the same depression in real estate exists here which exists to a greater or less degree in every city of the Union. It may, perhaps, be some little satisfaction to that class of misery in your City which "loves company" to be assured of what they doubtless knew, that in the West, as in the East, many magnificent fortunes have been lost in the depreciation of the value of real estate. It simply remains to be seen whether, in the revival which, to cities situated as these two are, must sooner or later come, there will be exhibited the same wild speculation and inflation of offices, or whether this dearly-bought experience will prove of lasting benefit. W. O. C.

OBITUARY.

MRS. JULIA KILPATRICK.

Mrs. Julia Kilpatrick, mother of Gen. Judson Kilpatrick, died at Dockertown, N. J., on Saturday last at the ripe age of 77 years. Mrs. Kilpatrick was one of the noble women who devoted well-nigh all their time during the war to the Union cause. In season and out of season her patriotism was contributing to the comfort and inspiration of the soldiers at the front, in camp, and hospital, while her benevolence and consistent piety were searching out the needs of families at home broken up by the harsh necessities of war. Here was the quiet work, accompanied by unceasing prayer, which looked for no official titles as its reward, but which required hardly less nerve and patriotic fire than the posts of danger in the field. And the brave warriors who fought the battles recognize her mission and such as hers as of equal importance to their own. Mrs. Kilpatrick was known and beloved by a large number of friends, all of whom will remember her benevolence, devotion, and womanly nobility through life. She was for 68 years of her life a member of the Baptist Church.

OBITUARY NOTES.

Frank Limberg, one of the proprietors of the Cincinnati Volks Freund, died yesterday. He was a native of Westphalia.

Judge Mondelet, of Montreal, died Sunday of congestion of the lungs. He was the oldest Judge of the Superior Court.

Walter E. Coyle, prominently known as baseball reporter for the Cincinnati Gazette, afterward with the Enquirer, and more recently employed on papers in the City and Brooklyn, died yesterday at Cincinnati, aged 36.

THE "COLOR LINE" POLICY

PLAIN FACTS PLAINLY TOLD.

THE SOUTHERN PURPOSE TO DESTROY THE REPUBLICAN PARTY—FALSE NOTIONS ABOUT THE "CARPET-BAG" RULE—GOVS. CHAMBERLAIN AND STEARNS TWO OF THE BEST STATE OFFICERS THE SOUTH HAS EVER KNOWN—A CLEAR VIEW OF THE COLOR QUESTION

From Our Special Correspondent.

COLUMBIA, Wednesday, Dec. 27, 1876.

The question is often asked, both here and at the North, what is to be the end of the conflict now going on in South Carolina and other Southern States, where the colored population are in an undoubted majority? I do not refer to the temporary contest now pending for the possession of the State Governments of those States, though this must have an important bearing upon the final issue of the conflict, unless the General Government should interfere to protect the rights guaranteed to all citizens by the Constitution of the United States. But what is to be the issue of the "color-line" war that was waged with such desperation by the Democrats during the last campaign in South Carolina, Florida, and Louisiana? Is the "shot-gun" policy to be pursued in future political contests in those States, and, if so, what will be the final result? That this "color-line" war was inaugurated by the Democrats for the basest political purposes there is not the shadow of a doubt. Their pretext, of course, was the alleged intolerable condition of affairs resulting from "negro rule" and "corrupt carpet-bag government." This is the invariable plea entered in justification of their conduct when talking with Northern men. With great apparent sincerity and with an air of injured innocence, they will appeal to a stranger and ask him, in all candor, whether he would like to have a lot of ignorant negroes, led by a few carpet-bag thieves, rule over him. Assuming their premises to be correct, relative to the "ignorance" of the negroes and the thieving of the "carpet-baggers," most Northern men would answer "No." But if a stranger were to suspend his judgment with regard to the justice and accuracy of these complaints long enough to inquire into the facts he would find that "ignorance" in the South is not by any means confined to the negro, and that this random talk about "thieving carpet-baggers" is, nine times out of ten, meaningless bosh. The most corrupt Governor that South Carolina ever had, as all admit, was a native South Carolinian, the son of Chief Justice Moses, whom the Democrats, before they captured him, used to curse without stint. On the other hand, the best Governor that South Carolina ever had, either before or since the war, if we are to believe the utterances of Democrats themselves six months ago, was Governor Chamberlain, a "carpet-bagger"—though why he should be called a "carpet-bagger" after living in the State twelve or fifteen years, no one but a Democrat would be able to tell. There are more Southern "carpet-baggers" in New-York City to-day than there are Northern "carpet-baggers" in the entire South. If it was reform in the State Government that the "white liners" of South Carolina were after, they never could have had a better chance of attaining it than under Gov. Chamberlain. At the time the Democrats made up their minds to open a shot-gun campaign here last Summer, and for two years before, Gov. Chamberlain had devoted all his time and energies to a reform of the abuses that were undoubtedly practiced under the reign of Moses, the native South Carolinian. He had incurred the hostility of the corrupt elements in his own party by those very efforts at reform. The Democratic papers of the State, with hardly an exception, praised his administration and demanded his renomination. As a matter of fact, which the records will abundantly sustain, there never was an administration of the State Government of South Carolina conducted with more honesty, economy, and ability than that of Gov. Chamberlain during the last two years. His course was also gradually tending to break down the "color line" in the politics of the State. It he had been supported by the native whites in the last campaign, there is every reason to believe that he would have been able, before the close of his present term, to have separated the good from the bad element in the Republican Party of the State, and to have brought the great mass of colored voters into permanent harmony with the native whites in a common endeavor to maintain a pure and economical State Government.

The same thing might be said of Gov. Stearns in Florida. I have heard many Democrats admit that Gov. Stearns' administration had been the best the State ever had, and the improvement in the financial condition and credit of Florida since he came into power, proves it. It is evident, therefore, that it was not to reform abuses arising from "carpet-bag rule" that the Democrats went into the late "shot-gun" campaign with such murderous zeal and energy. Nor was it to escape the rule of "ignorance," either black or white. There is nothing in my observations in the Southern States that has caused me greater surprise than the general intelligence of the negro population. It far exceeds anything I had anticipated, and, in view of the fact that these colored people were nearly all slaves twelve or fourteen years ago, it is really amazing. Of course, there are plenty of negroes, as well as native whites, in South Carolina and the other Southern States who cannot read or write. But the capacity of the blacks for acquiring knowledge, their readiness to learn, and their desire to improve their mental condition, are all among the most surprising, as well as the most hopeful features of the situation to a Northern man whose ideas of the negro population of the South, obtained from prejudiced sources, are such as generally prevail at the North. I had some interesting conversation on the subject with Rev. Dr. Cumming, President of the University of South Carolina, whose long experience in teaching, both in the North and South, entitles his opinion to great weight. It is probably known to most readers of The Times that the old University of South Carolina, which was founded by the State three-quarters of a century ago for the education of the scions of the slave-holding aristocracy, has now been taken possession of, like the State Government, by the negroes. The new Constitution of South Carolina, adopted since the war, makes no distinction of color in those who shall be entitled to the benefits of this University, which is supported now, as it always has been, by the State. The first colored man who applied for admission was Henry Hayne, the present Secretary of State, who is not only a descendant of one of South Carolina's greatest statesmen, but is as white as any of his ancestors. But he was once a slave, and therefore must be a negro, and his admission to the privileges of the University was the signal for all the white students and most of the Professors to leave. There were many students and several members of the Faculty who were a good deal blacker than Mr. Hayne, and it is said that those who were the blackest showed the most indignation. This was about four years ago, and since that time most of the students educated at the University have been colored. The Faculty has been reorganized, and among the Professors is one colored man. Prof. Gessner, who graduated with high honors at Harvard. The number of students at present is about 120. In answer to an inquiry as to his opinion of the mental capacity of the negro, and his facility for acquiring knowledge, Dr. Cumming said that this was a question that had often been asked him, and that he invariably refused to answer until he had had sufficient experience to warrant his forming a decided judgment and conviction in his own mind. He had now had two years of such experience, with this problem constantly before him, and the result was that he was firmly convinced, and had no hesitation in saying, that, in his opinion, there was absolutely nothing in the color of a man's skin as indicating his mental capabilities, but everything depended upon his opportunities. He said that since he had been President of the University he had taken special pains to test this question by a comparison, not only of the blacks with the whites, but also with the partly colored or mulattoes, and of the mulattoes with both of the other classes. He had made an average of their scholarship, and progress, as shown by their daily marks, and he could see no difference. As a matter of fact, the black students were a little ahead, on their average marks, of both the whites and mulattoes, which he attributed to their closer application to study, arising, perhaps, from their anxiety to maintain their standing and not fall behind their white classmates.

This opinion of Dr. Cumming as to the capacity of the negro was fully corroborated by the exercises at the Commencement of the University, held here two weeks ago. The members of the House Congressional Committee, who were all here at the time, were invited to attend the Commencement, and most of them did so. The orations of the graduating class would compare favorably with similar essays at the best universities in the North, as every member of the committee present agreed. The salutatory oration, by a young negro named Dart, formerly a slave in Charleston, Gen. Banks remarked, was quite equal to anything he ever heard at a Harvard University Commencement.

My observations of the Legislature of South Carolina, composed of more than three-fourths negroes, is to the same effect. There are, of course, plenty of ignorant men, among the members, and some who cannot read and write, but such a thing is not wholly unknown, according to my observation, in even the New-York Legislature. The proceedings of the South Carolina Legislature, at its late session, were conducted with as much order and decorum, and the bills were discussed with as much ability, as would be found in an average New-York Legislature. The number of good speakers and debaters is comparatively few in any Legislature, but I doubt whether the Assembly elect in New-York will be able to show three better parliamentarians or debaters than Messrs. Straker, of Sumter, Thomas, of Newbury, and Miller, of Charleston, all colored members of the Assembly of South Carolina. And it is very certain that Georgia, where the "shot-gun" policy has been successful and the "White Liners" have assumed the reins of government, cannot boast over South Carolina either in the superior intelligence or honesty of its law-makers. A gentleman who attended many of the sessions of the Georgia Legislature at Atlanta last Winter informs me that for ignorance, coarseness, vulgarity, venality, and general corruption, that body could carry off the palm from any Legislature that ever assembled in South Carolina or elsewhere.

There is really nothing, therefore, except the old slaveholding prejudice against color, in this cry of "ignorant negro rule," which the Democrats set up as a justification for their attempt to crush out the constitutional rights of the colored people. The real secret of the desperate movement of the late slaveholders and rebels to gain possession of the State Governments of South Carolina, Florida, and Louisiana in the last campaign lay in something very different from this pretended anxiety to escape from the thralldom of "corrupt carpet-baggers" and "ignorant" negroes. It was a part of the grand conspiracy set on foot in the North, under the direction of the crafty and unscrupulous Samuel J. Tilden, to carry the "solid South" in his favor. The Southern Democrats were, of course, glad of an opportunity to get possession of the patronage of their State Governments and to secure a President who would help them keep possession of it, even at the sacrifice of every right guaranteed to the negro by the Constitution. But a majority of them joined the conspiracy more for the share they were to have in the Federal spoils under Tilden's administration than anything else. Here in South Carolina, it is suspected that the leaders had an additional motive in getting the State under their control. It is a significant fact that the men who were instrumental in procuring the nomination of Wade Hampton for Governor, as well as Wade Hampton himself, are nearly all bankrupts. They are men who have been watching an opportunity for several years past to enter into almost any kind of a financial scheme to "raise the wind." Several of them had a hand in a lottery swindle in Charleston a year or two ago, by which hundreds of unsuspecting darkeys, as well as white people, were robbed of their money. It is well known that Gov. Chamberlain, since he has been Governor, has steadily fought every corrupt scheme that the lobby has attempted to bribe through the Legislature, and thus far he has succeded in defeating them all. Only a year ago a well-known capitalist from New-York came down and spent half the Winter here trying to lobby through the Legislature a bill reimbursing him to the tune of $300,000 or $400,000 for money which he claimed to have advanced on scrip of the Blue Ridge Railroad. The bill came very near passing, and would have passed had it not been for the determined opposition of Gov. Chamberlain. It should be stated right here that nearly all of the corrupt acts of the "carpet-bag Legislatures" of South Carolina have been for the benefit of outside capitalists, and many of the Democrats here in Columbia who howl the loudest about "negro rule" have profited most by this corruption. Whatever the negroes know of corruption, they have taught them. They are the bribers, and have pocketed their thousands by it, while the bribe-taking negroes got only the pittance of a few dollars. These outside capitalists, both here and at the North, are only waiting for Chamberlain to go out of office to renew their raids on the State Treasury. It is by no means certain that Tilden has not got a finger in the Blue Ridge Railroad pie. At any rate, he and other Northern capitalists supplied the funds, and the rifles, by which such men as Butler and Gary prosecuted the campaign for Wade Hampton last Summer, and, should they get possession of the State Government, there is no doubt that the financial schemes of their co-conspirators of the North would meet with favorable consideration. The advent of the "White Liners" to power, therefore, would be, in this State, as it has been to a great extent in Georgia, simply saddling the State with a band of greedy bankrupts and adventurers, and would open the door to the prosecution of swindling railroad schemes here in South Carolina like those which Tilden and his pals have been so skillful in manipulating in other States.

But to recur to the question propounded at the beginning of this letter: What is to be the result of the "color-line" war in those States of the South where the negroes have an undoubted majority of the voting population? These three States, South Carolina, Florida, and Louisiana, have just passed through a campaign in which the attempt was boldly made by the Democrats to nullify the constitutional rights of the negro by fraud, intimidation, and murder. In their prosecution of this programme, encouraged and aided by Northern Democrats, they committed outrages unnumbered, which it would curdle the blood of every humane man in the land to hear related. Could one-tenth part of them have been witnessed by the people of the North, the Democratic Party would never get the vote of another respectable citizen. And the question now arises whether these things shall be repeated in the future—whether fraud, intimidation, and murder are to be the standing Democratic methods of running political campaigns in the South? If so, the Republicans of the South, whether black or white, wish to know it, because on this knowledge may depend the final issue of the "color-line" war. So far as the United States Government is concerned, whoever may be President, there can only be one path of duty. It may have been a mistake to invest the negroes of the South with the right of suffrage so soon. There are many people who think it was a mistake to extend the right of suffrage to millions of white men who now enjoy it in the North. But it has been done, and it cannot now be recalled. So far as the South is concerned, I have not seen a Democrat here who expressed a desire to recall it. On the contrary, they say they don't want to deprive the negro of voting, because by his enfranchisement they have gained large additional power in the national councils. What they do want, however, is that the negro shall vote as they tell him, otherwise that he shall have his head blown off at the muzzle of the shotgun. This is practically what it amounts to, and one may discuss the political situation by the hour with a Southern Democrat without reaching any other logical conclusion of the argument than that. Now, what the Republicans of the South demand, and what every one must admit they have a right to demand, is that the provisions of the Constitution of the United States shall be enforced; that every man's political rights under it shall be protected and guaranteed, even if it takes a standing army of 100,000 men to do it. This is the only logical, just, or permanent way of settling the difficulty, and if the Southern "White Liners" were given to understand by the General Government that it had got to be settled in that way, and in no other, they would very soon abandon the "shot-gun" policy for a more legitimate and peaceable way of conducting elections. The native whites of South Carolina could easily have had the political support of the negroes, had they sought it at the close of the war, instead of repelling the negroes as they did, and telling them to "go to their liberators." There are many Democrats here who now admit that they made a mistake at the outset, and that they have persisted in a mistake, by allying themselves with the Democratic Party of the North instead of joining their fortunes with the loyal man of the country. It is quite probable that before another four years roll around under a Republican administration of the General Government, there will be a material change in public sentiment in the South on this subject, and that the next Presidential election will not witness a "solid South" for any Democratic candidate—much less for such a man as Tilden. But, meantime, the right of every man, whether black or white, in the South, to vote as he pleases should be enforced to the letter, regardless of all Democratic bluster about "interference of Federal bayonets." This will be found in the end to be the speediest and cheapest way of bringing peace and order to the South, and, had it been done during the last two years, the country would not now be convulsed with a dispute as to whether the Republicans carried three Southern States at the late election. They would have had seven instead of three, and Tilden would not have been able to keep the nation in a turmoil with his unscrupulous and insane ambition. If, however, the rights of the negroes and white Republicans are not to be protected, and "shot-guns" are to be the permanent political weapons of the Democratic Party South, then we have hardly seen the beginning of the end. If the "color line" is to be kept up, and the antagonism between the native whites and blacks is to be maintained, the final result, in South Carolina at least, must inevitably be a war of races. One more campaign of murder, such as the negroes have just passed through, will work them up to a point where such massacres as that at Hamburg will not end with the simple killing of one white man. "Retaliation" is a word the meaning of which they are fast learning, and are fast gathering courage to reduce it to practice. The men who composed the "rifle clubs" in South Carolina during the late campaign have stirred up the fires of a volcano which may yet bring ruin upon their households, and from the terrors of which they, in their turn, may be glad to invoke Federal protection.

AMUSEMENTS.

MR. BOOTH'S REPRESENTATIONS.

John Howard Payne's tragedy called "Brutus; or, The Fall of Tarquin," was revived at the Lyceum Theatre last evening. We do not share a rather widely-diffused opinion as to the importance of this work. It has soundant action, and the language, though neither very poetical nor particularly muscular, is terse and forcible, but there is a sketchiness, so to speak, about the play which robs it of any claim to rank with even second-rate efforts in the same direction. Mr. Booth's performance of the hero, first christened Lucius Junius, who assumes idiocy until the outrage upon Lucretia finally rouses the indignation of Rome, and afterward known as Brutus, cannot break the bonds set by the dramatist. The quaint and graceful picture of simplicity presented in the first two acts of the tragedy is very striking in its naturalness, and some fine transitions from this condition to utterances of fury and power occur at the same stage of proceedings, but the remainder of the representation is taken up with ferocious denunciations couched in good, set tragic terms, and hurled forth after a fashion more suggestive of rant than an artist of Mr. Booth's talent should like to have so considered. The general performance of "Brutus" at the Lyceum is far from good; we would not complain, however, if the principal actor's personation were as conspicuous as are, in varying degrees, all his portrayals, for light and shade and nice detail. Still there may be playgoers who care to behold the tragedian in this as in each of his other roles, and such as were kept from the theatre by the storm, last night, will be glad to know that Payne's achievement is to be rehearsed every evening this week.

GENERAL MENTION

A dramatic sketch and pantomime, taken from Dickens' Christmas Carol and called "Santa Claus, or Harlequin Bob Cratchit and Ding Dong Bell," was produced at the Eagle Theatre, last evening.

The present week will be the last of the run of "The Shaughraun" at Wallack's Theatre. On Monday, Mr. Lester Wallack is to make his first appearance in New-York this season, in a drama new to local audiences, and entitled "All for Her."

Mr. Thomas' third Symphony Concert, this season, is to occur at Steinway Hall, on Saturday evening next, the concert being preceded, as heretofore, by a public rehearsal on Thursday afternoon. The programme, on the two occasions we refer to, will include Mozart's G minor Symphony; four new sketches ("Novelletten") by Gade, for string orchestra; Bargiel's "Medea" overture, and Schumann's E flat Symphony, No. 3.

POLITICAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE SITUATION IN LOUISIANA.

PEACEFUL ORGANIZATION OF THE HOUSE AND SENATE—REFUSAL OF DEMOCRATIC MEMBERS TO TAKE PART UNLESS A CROWD THAT ACCOMPANIED THEM WAS ADMITTED—A SHAM ORGANIZATION EFFECTED AT ST. PATRICK'S HALL—M'ENERY IGNORED AND KELLOGG NOTIFIED BY THEM—THE INVESTIGATING COMMITTEES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 1.—The Legislature of Louisiana assembled at the State-house to-day, with a quorum of legally-elected and returned members in both the House and the Senate. There was no bloodshed, no riot, no United States troops. Everything done was done decently and in order. The Democratic members of the House and the Senators elected refused to take part in the organization of the Legislature, but it was their folly, and not the fault of the Republicans. Anticipating that the Democrats would try their old tactics, and by recognizing contestants as members endeavor to seize the Legislature by force, the Governor had taken the wise precaution of preserving the peace by keeping out of the State-house all persons not entitled to admission. The Sergeant at Arms was assisted in his duties by the Metropolitan Police and the Militia officers of the Governor's staff. The doorkeepers stationed at the street doors were furnished by the Secretary of State with a roll of the members entitled to seats in the House and Senate. None of such members were excluded from the State-house.

At the proper time the Democratic members marched in a body from their caucus room to the State-house doors and demanded admission, not only for themselves, but for the public at large, including their constituents and the contestants. The latter were, of course, refused admittance. Col. Louis Bush, for the Democrats, then read to the Militia and to the Police officers guarding the door, a protest which was in substance that they declined entering the hall of legislation until it be thrown open to all the members of the Legislature, and to all contestants for seats, and to the public. Having performed this act, Col. Bush retired and led the way to St. Patrick's Hall, followed by the Democratic members in a body.

In the State-house Mr. P. J. Trezevant, Democratic Clerk of the old House, was found at his desk, and was asked to call the roll for the new House as furnished him by the Secretary of State. He stated that according to law it was his business to assist in organizing the House, but that he had found the State-house in charge of the Police and Militia, that he had demanded that the doors should be unbarred, and that free ingress should be given to every citizen of the State of Louisiana. This request had not been complied with, and for that reason Mr. Trezevant said: "I refuse to call the roll." Mr. Trezevant retired and the roll was called by Hon. Louis J. Sauer, the oldest continuous member of the House. Sixty-eight members, seven more than a quorum, answered to their names, and the House proceeded to business, electing Hon. Michael Hahn Speaker. The Senate organized with Lieut. Gov. Antoine presiding, having 19 Republican Senators present, making just a quorum.

The Democrats, arriving at St. Patrick's Hall, proceeded to organize what they called a Legislature. Mr. Trezevant there read a roll prepared by the Democratic State Central Committee, and declared a quorum of the House present, and Col. Louis Bush was elected Speaker. The Democratic Senate was also organized at St. Patrick's Hall, by choosing Senator H. D. Ogden as temporary presiding officer, in the absence of a Lieutenant Governor. The St. Patrick's Hall body ignored Mr. McEnery, who claims to be Governor, and notified Gov. Kellogg by special messengers that the St. Patrick's Hall Legislature was ready for business. One of the messengers from St. Patrick's Hall to Gov. Kellogg was Senator William Stevens. While on his errand from the rump body he was taken in charge at the State-house, by a Sergeant at Arms of the regular Senate, and thereafter during the day was obliged to sit in his proper place at the State-house. The St. Patrick's people elected officers of their organizations, and went into executive session until adjournment.

So far, no harm has been done by the legislative seceders, and they may continue to meet harmlessly at St. Patrick's Hall until the 4th of March. But the peaceful solution does not meet the favor of the turbulent fire-eaters, and to-night the Democratic Bourbon official organ urges aggressive measures, saying:

"To-morrow morning, at the legal hour of assembling, the members of the legal Legislature must proceed to the State-house and occupy it. If lawless ruffians claiming to be Policemen and Militiamen attempt to interfere with them, these ruffians will be swept from their path. Nothing must prevent the legal Legislature of Louisiana from assembling in the Senate Chamber and Hall of Representatives of this State except the bayonets of the Federal Government."

This is bad advice, but it is a specimen of what bad men are constantly giving.

The Congressional Investigating Committees remained in session during the day, taking testimony. It is noticeable that Mr. Morrison, of the House committee, gives the Republican members no chance to prepare for cross-examinations. The Republicans are kept in ignorance of who is to be called until the Democratic witnesses present themselves. More courtesy is shown be Chairman Howe, of the Senate Committee, who invariably provides Messrs. Saulsbury and McDonald with an advance list of witnesses to be called by the Rebublicans.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

About noon the Democratic members, accompanied by about 500 persons, called at the State House and demanded admission. The officer on duty replied that the members could enter, but the crowd could not. Col. Bush, the spokesman, then called upon Clerk Trezevant to clear the obstructions — barricades, Police, &c., which prevented the ingress of members. A formal demand was then made by Clerk Trezevant upon Gen. Badger and other officials for their removal, which being declined, Col. Bush read the following protest and retired:

"We, the Democratic conservative members of the House of Representatives of the State of Louisiana, presenting ourselves at the doors of the State-house, for the purpose of repairing to the hall of the House of Representatives, find the State-house occupied by a military force consisting of United States soldiers and Metropolitan Police, having full control of said building, under orders and directions of the Executive of this State. The right to enter the State-house is denied to such of the members as have not certificates of election from the Secretary of State, although duly elected and returned by the Commissioners of Election. Besides, the right of ingress is denied to contestants for seats in this Legislature, and to the public generally, and the State-house is barricaded and fortified as in time of war, notwithstanding the patent fact of general peace and tranquillity prevailing in this State and in this community. We, therefore, protest most solemnly—first, against the invasion by the Executive of the rights and privileges of the Legislature, a co-ordinate branch of the Government; and, second, against the military occupation of the State-house by United States troops and the Metropolitan Police; and we decline entering the Hall of Legislation until it be thrown open to all the members of the Legislature and all contestants for seats and to the public, and until said military occupation shall have ceased, and all these obstructions shall have been removed."

A copy of this protest was presented by the committee to Gov. Kellogg, who replied:

"In receiving this protest, I have just these few words to say: As chief magistrate, a conservator of the peace of this State, in exercise of my official discretion, and in belief that there was danger of the organization of the General Assembly being interfered with by violent and illegal means, I have thought it best to station in and about the State-house a portion of the Metropolitan Police, and to direct that the lower part of the building, in which are situated the offices of the State Treasurer, Auditor, and other officials, and which are easily accessible by means of glass doors and windows opening directly on the street, shall be secured. I have had no other motive in taking this course but to preserve the peace. No member of either house or attaché of either house will be interfered with in any way. As to the passage way to which you refer, as communicating with a building on Chartres street, in which United States troops are stationed, I beg to state that there are no United States troops in the building, and I sincerely trust there will arise no exigency which will justify calling upon United States troops for assistance in any manner to aid the State authorities. When once the General Assembly is organized they will be able to deal with contestants and all matters relating to the maintenance of public order. My object is simply to preserve peace until they shall have legally organized. I am by law distinctly made guardian of the State-house during the recess of the General Assembly."

Soon after the Committee left, Clerk Trezevant entered the Governor's office and made similar demands. The Governor told him that the few men in the Hall of Representatives should be removed. Clerk Trezevant said unless the barricades and Policemen were removed from the building so as to allow ingress to all, he would decline to call the House to order and to call the roll; to which the Governor replied: "Very well, Sir, I think it absolutely necessary to retain them in order to maintain peace."

At 12:30 o'clock Hon. Louis Sauer, member from Avoyelles, called the House to order, at the request of Secretary of State Desionde, and called the roll. Sixty-eight members answered, making a quorum. Without administering the oath to members, nominations for Speaker were announced, ex-Govs. Hahn and Warmoth being the nominees. A vote was then taken by yeas and nays, and Mr. Hahn receiving 53 votes was declared elected, and took the chair.

The Senate was promptly organized by Lieut. Gov. Antoine, with more than a quorum.

A concurrent resolution was passed by the House, establishing, in place of the present Superior District Court, one to be called "Superior Civil Court of Orleans," having jurisdiction of all matters of contestation of office.

Gov. Kellogg's Message was sent to the Legislature. It is not long, but it is very pointed. He refers to the difficulties which have surrounded him; organized tax resistance and armed rebellion during the first two years of his administration, and subsequently the revolutionary attempt to seize illegal control of the lower House, and an effort to displace the executive authorities by false and frivolous articles of impeachment, which were adopted in violation of plighted faith. Respecting State finances he says: "The total consolidated interest-bearing debt, when funding is completed, (exclusive of interest coupons due prior to January, 1874, and interest warrants issued thereto, amounting in all to about $100,000,) will be $11,855,922. The taxation for State purposes, when this administration entered into power, was 21½ mills on the dollar, with an equal or even greater taxation in most parishes for parish purposes. Taxation for all State purposes, including schools, is now limited by constitutional amendment to 14½ mills, and by the law of the State the rate of parish taxation can in no case exceed the rate of State taxation. Constitutional amendments limit expenditures, and render null and void all warrants issued in excess of the revenue. The total expenditures of the preceding State Administration for the support of the Government from 1869 to 1872, inclusive, were $11,622,005. The total expenditures for the support of the Government during four years of my administration have been $4,209,293, a saving of $7,412,180. The interest on all bonds funded up to date has been promptly met at maturity. The payment of interest falling due on Jan. 3, 1877, is announced. Political difficulties have rendered the collection of taxes somewhat slow, and it has not been thought desirable to force the funding of the bonds which still remain to be converted. The interest fund is intact, and cannot be diverted for any purpose. It is believed that the delinquent taxes to come in will be sufficient to pay the interest on every outstanding bond, and also on those that yet remain to be funded."

The Governor quotes from the tax assessment rolls to show that the assumption that the Southern States cannot prosper under governments elected in strict accordance with the requirements of the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States, is disproved by facts. The crops made in the State during the present year are computed at 450,000 bales of cotton, 125,000 hhds. of sugar, 364,000 bbls. of molasses, and 270,000 bbls. of rice, with more than sufficient corn to supply all home demands. These figures are exclusive of other products, which being estimated make a total value of between $55,000,000 and $60,000,000. "By whom have these results been produced? not to any appreciable extent by white labor. It is one of the lamentable legacies of slavery that by a large class of the white population the cultivation of the soil is regarded as a badge of degradation. Cotton, sugar, and rice, which maintain the commerce of New-Orleans and afford support to the great bulk of the population of our chief city, are the products of free colored labor."

Under suspension of the rules a resolution was passed by the House setting forth that armed resistance to State authority exists in the State, and calling upon the President to afford the protection guaranteed by the Constitution.

THE INVESTIGATIONS.

FURTHER EVIDENCE OF INTIMIDATION AND COMPULSORY VOTING OF THE DEMOCRATIC TICKET BY REPUBLICANS—A DEMOCRATIC MORAL SUASIONIST.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 1.—The Senate Investigating Committee resumed the examination of Ouachita Parish to-day.

Emily Sloan (colored) testified that she lived on the opposite side of the road from Henry Pinkston; saw the men when they came there and killed him; heard them ask for him, and Eliza answered he was not there; they then broke the door down; heard pistol shots; became frightened, and ran under house and finally to the gin-house; about daylight returned, and found Pinkston's body lying on its back in the road, with several shots in the head; did not see the child.

Several colored witnesses testified to intimidation and being forced to vote the Democratic ticket.

Col. Clayton, Sixteenth Infantry, commanding Post Monroe, gave substantially the same evidence as given before the Returning Board and incorporated in Senator Sherman's report, as to the riot which was supprehended at Monroe, just preceding the election, and his search for arms brought there by the negroes, which resulted in finding 98 guns, nearly all old shot guns, nearly as dangerous to the persons firing as the ones fired at; the colored people said they brought them to protect themselves. He also said Mayor Endom had requested him to bring troops into Monroe on the day of the election, but he declined using them in sight of the polls. Numbers of colored people complained to him that they had been driven from home for voting the Republican ticket or giving evidence. He also stated that the roads leading to Monroe were picketed by Capt. Burfington and parties of rifle clubs on the day of the election.

David Faulks testified to his house having been fired into; believed it was done by negroes at the instigation of white Republicans, who wanted to excite the whites to violence to get up a bloody-shirt story, and that the shooting of Ben James was put up by some parties to prevent the ballot-box being taken to Logtown; that he used moral suasion only to induce negroes to vote the Democratic ticket; many of them wanted to, but feared social ostracism from their own race.

F. N. Deanois testified that he lived with Capt. George Phillips, and that on the night that Pinkston was killed Phillips and Dr. Young were at home, all witness had heard up their horses and had the key in his pocket.

The Senate Sub-committee met this morning, but the Republican counsel being engaged at the State-house, adjourned until to-morrow.

The House Committee examined W. H. Nutt, Deputy Sheriff and Supervisor of Registration in Concordia Parish, who testified at considerable length in regard to the war waged by the Jackson and Young factions there; he had excluded three polls in the parish upon affidavits made to him and forwarded to the Returning Board, and since the election State Senator Dave Young had threatened him in case he came before this committee; considered his life in danger, but was prepared to defend it.

Wade R. Young and eight colored men testified as to the intimidation of colored voters by Republicans, and corroborated evidence previously given as to influences through churches, secret societies, and other means to secure that end. Committee adjourned until to-morrow.

EVENING SESSION OF THE SENATE COMMITTEE.

At the evening session of the Senate Committee, John R. Vincent, Andrew Burnett, (colored,) and Reuben Boosterfield, (colored,) testified as to the circumstances of Eaton Sagwood's death. Their statements were not materially different from those already published.

Robert Logan, one of the parties alleged to have been guilty of the shooting of Lagwood, the killing of Prince Johnson, Henry Pinkston, and whipping of several parties, testified that there was no truth in any of the charges, and that George Phillips, Dr. Young and others charged, bore the best of reputations in their community.

Isaac Randall (colored) testified that he was President of a colored Democratic club; that he joined the Democratic Party three weeks before the election, and that the election was quiet and peaceable.

To Senator Howe, Randall stated that he joined the party after several assassinations.

Joseph Benoit testified to the fact that Ben James was a very noisy, bustling man, and sassy to the whites; that he had said no "Democratic nigger ought to be noticed."

THE FLORIDA SUPREME COURT.

THE RETURNS OF THE CANVASSING BOARD QUASHED AS NO ANSWER TO THE WRIT—ANOTHER COUNT ORDERED AND WITH THE SAME RESULT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

TALLAHASSEE, Jan. 1.—The Supreme Court reassembled to-day, and took up the matter of the return of the State Canvassing Board to the writ ordering a new count from the face of the returns. The court quashed the return as no answer to the writ. A new order was then issued directing the board to reassemble and make a fresh canvass and count of the returns, and to confine themselves to the votes for Governor, as no other candidate's rights were involved in the proceeding. This new order was made returnable at 4:30 P. M. to-day. The Canvassing Board reassembled, in obedience to the order, and canvassed the returns for Governor, as before, and returned the result to the court as their answer to the new writ. Whether this return will be more satisfactory to the court than the former one will not be known before to-morrow, as the court took no action upon it, adjourning till 10 A. M. to-morrow.

This afternoon Mr. Drew called upon Gov. Stearns and made a modest request to him, the nature of which is conveyed in the following note from Gov. Stearns to Capt. Mills, in command of the military here:

Hon. George F. Drew, who contemplates being inaugurated as Governor to-morrow, requests that you have a portion of your command placed on duty in the capitol grounds for the purpose of preserving the peace. While I apprehend there can be no possible danger of disturbance, yet in deference to the request I suggest that if not inconsistent with your orders you place such guard around the Capitol as you think proper.

INTIMIDATION IN ALABAMA.

A CORRECTION IN OUR WASHINGTON LETTER OF YESTERDAY—37,000 REPUBLICANS PREVENTED FROM VOTING—THE PRETENSE OF REPUBLICANS VOTING FOR DEMOCRATS EXPOSED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1.—In a letter to THE TIMES of this morning, from your Washington correspondent, a conspicuous blunder is made in using the name of Mississippi in place of Alabama from beginning to end. The aggregate vote for three years, stated, is the vote of Alabama, and the 12 counties whose votes are examined are counties of Alabama. The facts and the conclusions all pertain to Alabama, and are true for that State in every particular. The blunder was caused by writing from memoranda over which the word Mississippi had been inadvertently written. If the name of Alabama is substituted wherever Mississippi occurs, there will remain no other correction to be made. It does not follow that the conclusions of the letter are false if applied to Mississippi and other Southern States. It will probably be found, on examining the election statistics, that a similar state of facts exists in a large part of the South. The loss of 37,000 Republican votes in Alabama, without any Democratic gain, but instead a Democratic loss, is a fact showing so clearly the existence of intimidation that it should be repented and emphasized.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

PERSISTING IN FRAUD EVEN AGAINST THE DECISION OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1.—John W. Harrington has arrived here from Columbia, S. C., bringing with him the sham Democratic Electoral vote of that State, which will be delivered to the President pro tem. of the Senate. Mr. Baxter, the President of the pretended college, requested Secretary of State Hayne to affix the seal of the State to the three sets of certificates of the Electors, but he declined to comply with the request, and therefore they are not thus officially indorsed.

WINTER'S MOST VIOLENT STORM.

A heavy snow-storm, which had been portended by the overcast skies during the early part of yesterday, burst upon the City shortly after 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and the indications are that it will prove to be one of the severest of the season. It was the eleventh snow-storm this Winter, there having been a greater or less fall on each of the following dates: Dec. 1, 2, 9, 10, 12, 16, 18, 21, 22, 26, and 29. The ground being frozen, and several inches of previous snows remaining in the streets, it took but a few hours to drift to a depth sufficient to greatly impede the street cars. By 10 o'clock at night, nearly all the lines were forced to double up their teams, and even with this addition nearly all of them failed to make their schedule time. The wind was variable, but was generally from the south-west. At 9 o'clock it was blowing at the rate of 22 miles an hour.

The only mails which were delayed by the storm yesterday were the northern mail, on the Hudson River Railroad, which was 40 minutes behind time, and the mails from Boston, by the New-Haven Road, and the southern mail by the Pennsylvania Railroad, due at 11:30 and 12 o'clock, respectively, which had not arrived at 12:30 o'clock this morning.

The snow-storm seriously impeded travel in Jersey City and Hoboken, the teams were doubled up, and on no line did they run any oftener than once in a half hour. On the Lafayette and Bergen lines, the cars were withdrawn altogether at 11 o'clock last night. The trains on the various railroads were unable to make their trips on schedule time, and reached the various stations along their respective routes at a late hour. The local Elizabeth train on the Pennsylvania road, due in Jersey City at 9:45 P. M., was obliged to delay for 15 minutes on the Meadow, and then to make locomotion possible, was compelled to drop two of the passenger cars.

BENNINGTON, Jan. 1.—A terrible wind-storm here on Saturday and great damage, the loss amounting to fully $25,000. The spire of the Baptist Church was blown over, and the greater portion of the knitting mill of A. B. Valentine demolished by the falling of a large chimney. Numerous houses and barns were wrecked.

CHATTANOOGA, Jan. 1.—The heaviest snow-storm ever known here is now prevailing. The snow is 18 inches deep, and the railroads are blockaded.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 1.—A sleet and snow storm last night extended as far South as Osyka. Two feet of snow fell at Holly Springs, 14 inches at Jackson and Vicksburg, one foot at Shreveport and Monroe, and four inches at Osyka, delaying trains and breaking down telegraph-wires, interrupting communication.

A man named Whittier left Munsonville for his home in Stoddard, N. H., during the snow storm Friday, and has not since been seen. It is supposed he perished.

INDICATIONS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2—1 A. M.—For the lower lake region and the Middle States, rising barometer; winds backing to northerly and westerly, and snow, followed by colder, partly cloudy weather.

For New-England, falling barometer, increasing east to north winds nearly stationary temperature and snow succeeded during the afternoon and night by rising barometer, north-westerly winds, and colder, clearing weather.

FATAL RAILROAD ACCIDENT IN ILLINOIS.

QUINCY, Jan. 1.—At 10:50 o'clock to-night a passenger train on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad came into collision with an engine and way-car of the Toledo, Wabash and Western, on the northern limits of this city. The conductor and brakeman of the Toledo, Wabash and Western train were killed and the engineer and fireman of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy train are reported killed. No passengers were hurt.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT IN VERMONT.

RUTLAND, Jan. 1.—The mail train on the Rutland Railroad to-day was run into at Healdville by a large snow-plow which was following. The rear passenger coach was demolished, and several workmen engaged in operating the plow were injured. None of the passengers were hurt.

THE CONSTANTINOPLE CONFERENCE

AN ADDRESS BY THE FRENCH MINISTER—THE RUSSIAN AMBASSADOR'S DECLARATIONS ACQUIESCED IN BY GREAT BRITAIN, ITALY, AND AUSTRIA—THE POLICY OF GREECE.

LONDON, Jan. 1.—A delayed dispatch from Constantinople, dated Friday, Dec. 29, says it was then believed that at Saturday's sitting of the Conference the European Plenipotentiaries would make further concessions to the Porte, and an agreement would be reached. It was thought to be improbable that Gen. Ignatieff would remain in Constantinople as Russian Ambassador after the conference. It was asserted that the Turkish Government contemplated a fresh issue of paper money to the amount of 300,000,000 Turkish pounds.

A telegram from Constantinople reports that at Saturday's sitting of the conference, after the Turks announced that their counter-proposals were not ready, Count Chandoray, the French plenipotentiary, addressed the conference, pointing out that the propositions of the European representatives contained nothing contrary to the integrity of the Ottoman Empire. Gen. Ignatieff declared that Russia had made every concession in order to arrive at an understanding. It was to Turkey's interest to accept the proposals of the powers. Lord Salisbury, Count Corti, the Italian representative, and the Austrian representative expressed approval of these statements. Hopes of a peaceful solution continue. The Plenipotentiaries appear disposed to make concessions in matters of detail.

The Greek Envoy at Constantinople has informed Sir H. G. Elliott, the British Ambassador, that Greece will subordinate her Eastern policy to that of England. The Marquis of Salisbury has promised the Cretan delegate that he will consider the claims of Crete.

It is stated that the Porte is willing to concede that Governors of the insurgent provinces shall be Christians.

It is reported at Bucharest that in consequence of the prolongation of the armistice the Roumanian Army will be placed on a peace footing.

LONDON, Jan. 2.—The Daily News publishes a sensational dispatch from Constantinople, representing that the proceedings in the conference on Saturday were stormy, and asserting that the European Plenipotentiaries will refuse to discuss any project but the proposals of the conference; and if the Porte refuses to discuss these proposals an European ultimatum will follow.

THE TURKISH COUNTER PROPOSITIONS.

The Daily Telegraph's special from Pera, dated Sunday, says the Turkish counter propositions were sent to the Plenipotentiaries late on Saturday night. The Turks offer a system of administration very like that proposed by the powers, but ignore the questions of a gendarmerie and international commission, and absolutely refuse to pardon the Bulgarian prisoners, or subject the appointment of Governors to the approval of the powers. They also reject the financial proposals, and suggest no guarantees. The European plenipotentiaries held an informal meeting on Sunday to consider the counter proposals. The Russian, German, Austrian, and French delegates declared they could not act with the Porte, and seemed inclined to cut short the discussion. After Lord Salisbury stated his views they became calmer. Gen. Ignatieff, however, read to the representatives a telegram from Prince Gortschakoff directing him not to listen to any counter-proposals whatever. It was finally arranged that the Conference should present their original propositions again on Monday. The correspondent adds: "Should the Turks persist in their refusal, I understand all the Ambassadors will quit Constantinople and leave their legations in the care of Chargés d' Affaires."

In confirmation of the foregoing, a dispatch, dated Pera, Monday, and just received, says: "To-day at the conference the situation was very grave. The Porte resists. There will be another sitting on Thursday." Another dispatch from Pera to the Daily Telegraph states that at Saturday's sitting of the conference Gen. Ignatieff informed the Turks that his instructions justified his saying that Russia had absolutely reached the limit of concession. The announcement of an issue of additional Turkish paper money has caused almost a panic in Constantinople. Many bakers and others have closed their shops, and there is much excitement and distress.

THE ARMISTICE WITH SERVIA.

LONDON, Jan. 2.—The Standard's dispatch from Belgrade says the Servians are jubilant at the prolongation of the armistice. All warlike preparations have ceased. The Militia which started for the front have been recalled. The Russians who have formed part of the garrison of Belgrade will be sent to Gladova.

The Times' Vienna correspondent says the condition of the Grand Duke Nicholas is so critical that it is reported he will return to St. Petersburg as soon as he is able to travel. Gen. Kaufmann is mentioned as his successor in the command of the army in the south of Russia. Gen. Tchernayeff has set out on his return to Servia. His reception at Kischeneff was not very cordial. He only saw the Grand Duke Nicholas privately. He has been asked for an account of the money forwarded by Russian societies to Servia. This he has been unwilling or unable to give. In the meantime all the money from Russia hereafter will be sent direct to the Servian treasury.

EMPEROR AND EMPRESS.

HIS SEVENTIETH ANNIVERSARY AS A SOLDIER—VICTORIA DECLARED EMPRESS OF INDIA.

BERLIN, Jan. 1.—The Emperor William to-day held a grand reception, to which all the Generals of the Army were specially invited, in honor of the seventieth anniversary of his entry into the Army.

DELHI, Jan. 1.—Victoria was to-day proclaimed Empress here, and throughout India, with great ceremony.

RAILROAD FREIGHTS ADVANCED.

CHICAGO, Jan. 1.—The managers of the trunk lines have decided to advance the rates on grain and fourth-class freight to New-York five cents, making the rates 35 cents on grain and 40 cents on fourth-class freight. These rates went into operation to-day.

THE ELECTORAL VOTE OF NEVADA.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1.—Mr. Daggett has delivered to the President pro tem. of the Senate the Electoral vote of Nevada for Hayes and Wheeler.

—"'Tis the work
Of many a day-hour and of many a prayer
To bring the heart back from an infant game," sings a poet. Would there would be less need of this effort if parents exercised more care in certain little matters. For example, by using B. T. B

COUNTING THE VOTE.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL WAY.

JUDGE WEST, OF OHIO, SHOWS WHAT IS AND WHAT IS NOT REQUIRED BY THE CONSTITUTION—THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE'S DUTIES—THE RIGHTS OF THE SUPREME COURT.

The following letter on counting the Electoral vote has been addressed to Attorney General Taft by Judge West, of Bellefontaine, Ohio:

BELLEFONTAINE, Ohio, Dec. 19, 1876.

Hon. Alphonso Taft, Attorney General:

MY DEAR SIR: Our pleasant relations during a brief sojourn in your city, and a profound sense of your devotion to constitutional rights, furnish my apology for addressing you.

What powers may be exercised, and by whom, in opening and counting the Electoral vote for President and Vice President, and when the House of Representatives may choose the President, are matters just now attracting much attention. I propose to consider these as original questions in the light of the Constitution alone, without reference to the precedents or practice of former years.

The national Government is one of exclusively delegated powers. Its several departments and officers, in the administration of their ordinary civil functions, can exercise only such as are conferred either by clearly expressed or necessarily implied delegation. Applying this touchstone of interpretation, all doubts and differences ought to vanish and disappear.

Allow me to recall your attention to the provisions of the Constitution bearing on this subject, which are as follows:

"Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of Electors equal to the whole number of Senators and representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress; but no Senator, or representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector."

"The Electors shall meet in their respective States and vote by ballot for President and Vice President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice President; and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify and transmit sealed to the seat of Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate."

"The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted."

"The person having the greatest number of votes for President shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers, not exceeding three, on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by States, the representation from each State having one vote."

Very grave differences, arising out of recent and existing complications, have made these provisions the subject of much controversy. On the one hand it is contended that the power to control the count and declare the result of the Electoral vote is vested in the two Houses of Congress; that upon objection to the vote of any State or of any Elector thereof by either house it shall be rejected; that the candidate receiving a majority of the unrejected votes shall be the President, and that if no candidate receives such majority, the choice of President shall devolve upon the House of Representatives. On the other hand, it is insisted that the President of the Senate is vested with exclusive power over the subject, in the exercise of which his duties are purely ministerial, restricted to the opening of the returns, counting the votes, aggregating the numbers received by each candidate, and declaring the result as found from a clerical inspection of the lists. Of this latter opinion, modified by the limitations which will hereafter be suggested, I am.

I do not doubt the legislative power of the nation to inquire and determine whether the constitutional relations of a State to the Government be such as entitle it to the right of a State to cast a vote in the Union. But this is not the question here presented. The extent of legislative power, which in its exercise includes the executive sanction and approval, is not put in issue. The question made is whether power has been vested in the two houses of Congress, or either of them, by the provisions of the Constitution above cited, to control the counting or exclude the Electoral votes of a State whose normal and constitutional rights in and relations to the Union are recognized.

In discussing the differences presented, the following will be assumed as established and incontrovertible truths:

1. No power not delegated by the Constitution, either expressly or by necessary implication, can be exercised by any officer, branch, or department of the Government in the administration of its civil functions. Hence no power not so delegated can be exercised by the two houses of Congress, or either or both, in counting, certifying, announcing and declaring the vote of the Electoral Colleges.

2. No power to control the counting, or to announce the result of the Electoral vote, is vested in the two houses of Congress, or either of them, or any officer thereof, by any section, provision, or clause of the Constitution except the above, which declares that "the President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open the certificates, and the vote shall then be counted." Hence, unless such power be delegated to the two houses, or to one of them by this clause, it is not delegated to, and consequently cannot be exercised by, either of them.

3. It is equally clear that no power is vested in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives? Does not the fact that the opening of the returns and the counting of the vote shall be made in their presence, raise the conclusive implication of power in them to declare what votes shall be counted and what excluded?

A sufficient and powerful reason exists for their presence other than the exercise of extraordinary and dangerous power supposed. Although the opening of the returns, and the counting of the vote, are purely ministerial and clerical functions, yet in view of the momentous consequences possible to result from error or unfaithfulness in their performance, the presence of the two houses to witness and attest their accuracy is of the very greatest importance. But it by no means follows from the constitutional command to be present and bear witness to the accurate and faithful performance of his duty by the President of the Senate, that they are thereby clothed with power to restrain or supersede him in the performance of that duty by requiring him to count or reject some part of the votes which the Constitution declares shall then be counted. The duty imposed is to count the vote, not to reject it. The presence of the two houses is to bear witness to and insure the performance of this duty, not prevent it.

Under the tests first given the logic of this reasoning becomes irresistible. Neither the two houses, nor either of them, nor any officer thereof, can rightfully exercise any power not delegated either expressly or by necessary implication. No clause delegates any power to nor devolves any duty whatever upon either house or officer thereof as to the counting of the Electoral vote except the clause under consideration. But all and the only power delegated or duty enjoined by this clause is to count the vote, not to canvass it, scrutinize part and rejecting the residue. If, therefore, the whole power so delegated was exclusively vested in the two houses, or either of them, instead of the President of the Senate, they would be clothed with authority to do no more, no less, than what the Constitution commands shall be done, namely, that the whole vote—no part of it—shall then be counted. Whence it follows that what they could not do or omit, if exclusively vested with the power of making the count, they cannot compel the President of the Senate to do or omit when clothed with the same and no other or greater power.

Let me now refer to some of the embarrassments that would result from conceding to the Senate and House of Representatives the functions of a Canvassing Board, with power to count or reject at pleasure:

First—The two houses are separate, distinct, and independent organizations, coequal in dignity, authority, and sovereignty. Neither can be subordinated to the power nor merged in the existence of the other.

Second—Their investiture with joint power to count or reject implies the right to determine the cause for, and the occasion of, its exercise. As the Constitution nowhere indicates the causes which shall influence them in the exercise of the power, they must be clothed with uncontrolled discretion to reject for any cause, or upon any pretext, they may arbitrarily assume to exist.

What rule shall obtain on the hypothesis that the power is joint, and cannot be made effectual without the concurrence of both houses? Shall a disagreement in regard to any vote require that it shall be counted, or shall such disagreement require that it be rejected?

If the former rule obtain, then either house, favoring all the votes cast for a majority candidate, can compel them to be counted, and its favored candidate declared to be elected in defiance of the opposition and protest of the other house.

If the latter rule obtain, then the non-concurrence of either house in the counting of any vote will compel its rejection. It would thus be in the power of either house, by dissenting to a sufficient number of votes cast for the majority candidate, to defeat the election of a President by the Colleges whenever political or other motives might prompt the exercise of such discretion.

Again, if either house by non-concurring in any vote for any cause or upon any pretext whatever, could work its rejection, it can be readily conjectured, in case of disagreement or contest between the two houses, that each might arbitrarily and obstinately refuse to concur with the other in the counting of any vote, and thus work the exclusion of all. Or either might decline to unite with the other and prevent or defeat a count altogether. Let us suppose either contingency to arise, would it not altogether defeat the election, and render the Constitutional mode of choosing a President impossible? That instrument declares that the President of the Senate shall open the certificates and the votes shall then be counted.

"The person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers, not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President."

It is perfectly apparent that a count of the vote is a condition precedent to the choice of a President by the House of Representatives; for if there be no count, it cannot be declared that no person has received a majority of all the votes cast. Or if a count be made in which by arbitrary nonconcurrence all the votes be excluded, so that no candidate shall be declared to have received a majority, it would be impossible to indicate the three receiving the highest number of votes, from among whom alone the House is authorized to make choice. It can be readily seen, therefore, that the concession of joint judicial or canvassing powers to this dual sovereignty might work the non-election of a President altogether.

Again, suppose it be assumed that the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives at the opening and counting of the vote by the President of the Senate, be essential to the legality and effect of his action, nor would the non-attendance or withdrawal of either in like manner work the total defeat or or prevent a constitutional election. It a count by the President of the Senate could be thus defeated or prevented, it could not be declared that any candidate had received the majority of the votes, nor that there had been a failure to elect by the Colleges, nor could it be declared who were the three from whom the House might constitutionally choose. Thus the obstinate and arbitrary non-attendance or withdrawal of either house would, if its presence were essential, work the non-election of a President in any constitutional manner.

Besides this, it might be proper to consider the astute manner in which such recusant house would place itself. If its presence at the count be essential to the validity thereof, then it is obligatory; if non-essential, it is discretionary. If the former, then its arbitrary non-attendance or withdrawal would, in view of its resulting consequences, clearly place such recusant house in a revolutionary attitude. If the latter, the validity and effect of the count by the President of the Senate would be assured as well in the willful non-attendance as in the orderly presence of either house. But I need not further pursue these reflections. These, and many other disastrous consequences, will, from what I have indicated, readily suggest themselves to the thoughtful statesman and jurist.

The clear conclusion reached from these considerations is that the power to open and count the Electoral vote is vested where the Constitution plainly indicates, in the President of the Senate, and that in the exercise thereof his functions are purely clerical or ministerial, restricted to the simple duty of computing and aggregating the votes received by each candidate, and declaring the result.

But it may be asked, has no power been delegated to exclude or reject false, fraudulent, or spurious certificates or votes, or to distinguish and determine between the opposing returns of rival claimants? Such power has been delegated, but not to the Senate and House of Representatives, or either of them.

Ministerial functions, however simple, cannot be intelligently exercised without information concerning the thing to be done. The power to acquire such information, and hence to determine when it has been obtained, is an incident of the duty to be performed; otherwise its intelligent performance would be impossible. The power and jurisdiction to ascertain the returns which shall be opened, and determine the votes which shall be counted, are, therefore, necessarily lodged with, and must in the first instance be exercised by, the ministerial functionary charged with the duty of making the count—with the President of the Senate.

The exercise of this power is in the nature of original jurisdiction of exceedingly limited scope. The officer exercising it must have satisfactory information, and, therefore, prima facie evidence that the returns, which he is commanded to open and count, are what they purport to be and what the Constitution requires they should be, the genuine and honest returns of legally appointed Electors. Hence, to authorize the counting of what purports to be the Electoral vote of any State he must have prima facie evidence of the concurrence of the following facts, viz:

1. That the Legislature of such State has directed the manner in which its Electors shall be appointed.

2. That Electors have been appointed in the manner thus directed.

3. That they have performed the duties enjoined upon them by the Constitution.

4. That the certificates to be opened are the genuine records of their proceedings.

When these things concur, no discretion is left but to count the vote which the certificates contain. The highest evidence of the existence of the first are the statutes of the State. Of these the officer will take official notice. The certificate of the State Executive is generally accepted as prima facie evidence of the due appointment of the Electors in the manner directed. Higher and better evidence of this, however, are authenticated copies under the great seal of the State, of the official record of the appointment, or of the returns thereof on file in the proper department.

As the Legislature of each State frames the certificates of the Electors, under their own signatures, is the highest evidence. In fact, their own certified lists are all that the Constitution requires shall be directed to the President of the Senate. Beyond or behind the prima facie evidence which these properly authenticated lists and accompanying documents furnish, he has no right to go. He cannot judicially inquire into the validity and sufficiency of the appointments, or touching the antecedent facts on which their validity depends. To concede in him the right to exercise such extraordinary power and jurisdiction, would surrender the election of the President to the uncontrolled authority and discretion of one man. As the framers of the Constitution wisely withheld these from the Congress, a purely political body, actuated, it might be, by motives of ambition or partisan passion, so for like reasons they have withheld them from the President of the Senate, vesting in him ministerial functions only.

But it is asked, has not authority and jurisdiction been lodged in some tribunal to judicially inquire concerning the antecedent facts upon which depends the validity of the vote to be counted, and to instruct, control, and direct the ministerial function of the President of the Senate in regard to possible, but must have been delegated by some other clause to some other tribunal. I think it may be assumed with entire accuracy that unless jurisdiction to go behind the lists or returns has been vested in the Federal Judiciary, it has not been delegated to, and therefore cannot be exercised by, any other department or tribunal whatever. That is been delegated to the Judiciary!

Article 3, section 2 of the Constitution ordains: "The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution." Whether this provision vests in the Judiciary power to assume jurisdiction of the questions raised by the existing differences, and to what extent, will next be considered.

All offices created by the Constitution are necessarily Federal, and the incumbents of such offices, however chosen or appointed, are Federal officers. The office of Representative in Congress is created by the Constitution. Representatives are therefore Federal and not State officers, although elected by a limited number of the people of the several States. The office of United States Senator is created by the Constitution. Senators are therefore Federal officers, although chosen by the several State Legislatures. The office of President of Elector is created by the Constitution. Presidential Electors are therefore Federal and not State officers, although appointed in such manner as the respective State Legislatures may direct. They officially exist by virtue of the constitutional provision which ordains that "each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof shall direct, a number of Electors equal to the whole number of Senators and representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress." The performance of such duties is the exercise of Federal functions, and in discharging them they become officers of the United States, and are subject to the subsequent Constitutional provisions which prescribe their powers and duties. They are, therefore, in the strictest sense, Federal and not State officers, and as such are subject to the Constitution and authority of the Federal Government.

The Constitution makes each house the exclusive judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members. This jurisdiction thus conferred is far-reaching, extending in the case of Representatives to the qualifications of the elector, and all antecedent facts affecting the rights of the majority, and the fairness, honesty, and validity of the election; and in the case of Senators, to the constitutional character of the Legislature and the integrity of the means and influence employed to effect their choice; and in the case of both, to the personal qualifications of the incumbents. Jurisdiction of all these questions is expressly excluded from Judicial cognizance, and they are therefore excepted from the general jurisdiction of the judiciary "in all cases of law and equity arising under this Constitution." But questions respecting the elections, returns, qualifications, and duties of Presidential Electors are not expressly excluded from judicial cognizance. Are they not, then, made subject to it under the general jurisdiction vested by the Constitution in the judiciary?

Beyond the limited ministerial jurisdiction of the President of the Senate, questions affecting his right to receive and open the certificates and count the votes, the concurrence of both houses is essential. Shall a disagreement in regard to any vote require that it shall be counted, or shall such disagreement require that it be rejected?

If the former rule obtain, then either house, favoring all the votes cast for a majority candidate, can compel them to be counted, and its favored candidate declared to be elected in defiance of the opposition and protest of the other house.

If the latter rule obtain, then the non-concurrence of either house in the counting of any vote will compel its rejection. It would thus be in the power of either house, by dissenting to a sufficient number of votes cast for the majority candidate, to defeat the election of a President by the Colleges whenever political or other motives might prompt the exercise of such discretion.

Again, if either house by non-concurring in any vote for any cause or upon any pretext whatever, could work its rejection, it can be readily conjectured, in case of disagreement or contest between the two houses, that each might arbitrarily and obstinately refuse to concur with the other in the counting of any vote, and thus work the exclusion of all. Or either might decline to unite with the other and prevent or defeat a count altogether. Let us suppose either contingency to arise, would it not altogether defeat the election, and render the Constitutional mode of choosing a President impossible? That instrument declares that the President of the Senate shall open the certificates and the votes shall then be counted.

"The person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers, not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. M., for the whole or any part of the sum of $2,800,000, MUNICIPAL BONDS OF THE CITY OF CINCINNATI, as authorized by an act of the Legislature of the State of Ohio, entitled "an act relating to cities of the first class having a population exceeding one hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants," passed May 4, 1869, and "an act supplementary thereto," passed Feb. 24, 1876, a vote of the people of the CITY OF CINCINNATI, and a resolution of the City Council as prescribed by the said act.

SAID BONDS WILL BEAR INTEREST AT THE RATE OF 7 3-10 PER CENT. PER ANNUM, PAYABLE ON THE 1ST DAY OF MAY AND NOVEMBER IN EACH YEAR, AND THE PRINCIPAL WILL BECOME DUE IN 1906, BOTH PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST BEING PAYABLE AT THE AMERICAN EXCHANGE NATIONAL BANK IN NEW-YORK.

Each proposal should be sealed and indorsed:

"PROPOSALS FOR 7 3-10 PER CENT. BONDS OF THE CITY OF CINCINNATI," AND INCLOSED IN A SECOND ENVELOPE ADDRESSED TO THE AMERICAN EXCHANGE NATIONAL BANK OF NEW-YORK.

The right is reserved on the part of the undersigned to reject any or all of the bids, if, in their judgment, the interests of the city require it.

AWARDS WILL BE MADE ON JAN. 11.

ORGANIZATION OF THE MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT FOR 1877.

INSTALLATION OF MAYOR ELY—THE CLOSING WORK OF THE OLD BOARD OF ALDERMEN — ORGANIZATION OF THE NEW BOARD—MAYOR ELY'S MESSAGE—CITY HALL APPOINTMENTS—OFFICIAL RECEPTIONS.

The City Hall was decorated with large and small flags yesterday—less, perhaps, in honor of the opening of a new year than of the formal inauguration of the new Mayor, the Sheriff, and the County Clerk, who were elected to their respective offices under the auspices of Tammany Hall. The fact that the old Board of Aldermen would surrender their chamber to the new one, and that the latter would communicate with the new chief magistrate of the City, Smith Ely, Jr., attracted a large number of the friends of both organizations to the hall, but there was a far greater concourse in the new Court-house, where the Sheriff and County Clerk had "tables" spread in the office of the former. Every few moments scores of new-comers, including politicians from all the wards in the City, laborers, and others stood in front of these tables, and were served with liquor, sandwiches, and other refreshments. The entertainment lasted from 11 until 2 o'clock.

At 11:30 o'clock Mr. Smith Ely, Jr., the new Mayor, entered his office in the City Hall. He was received by the outgoing chief magistrate, Mr. Wickham, who formally conducted him to his chair. The ceremony, which occupied only a few minutes, was witnessed only by Corporation Counsel William C. Whitney, ex-Alderman Hardy, and a few others. The new Mayor remained in his office until he received the usual communication from the Common Council for 1877.

THE OLD AND THE NEW BOARD OF ALDERMEN.

The old Board of Aldermen met at 11 o'clock preparatory to winding up the business of the year and formally vacating their seats. Every portion of the chamber was filled. After the President, Mr. Samuel A. Lewis, had taken the chair, a communication was received from Mayor Wickham vetoing the resolution assigning the Ninth Regiment to the building on the corner of Ninth avenue and Twenty-seventh street, and providing that a lease should be obtained of it for five years on behalf of the City at a rental of $8,000 per annum. The Mayor's reasons for disapproving of the resolution are that the building is inadequate to the wants of the regiment, and that all the leading officers of the National Guard are of opinion that it is not suitable for an armory. The veto, which was the last official act of the retiring Mayor, was placed on file. A communication was received from the Brooklyn Bridge Company stating that their receipts for the Month of November were $226,442 13, and their expenditures $29,931 19. This statement was ordered to be printed. Alderman Purroy announced that the Board of Apportionment had, at the request of the Common Council, inserted $50,000 in the tax levy of 1877 for the relief of the out-door poor. Resolutions were then passed thanking the officers and clerks of the board for the manner in which they had performed their duties during the past year, after which the board adjourned sine die.

At noon the new Board of Aldermen, whose names appeared in THE TIMES of Sunday, took possession of the Chamber. The board was called to order by Capt. Tuomey, the Chief Clerk, who read the County Clerk's certificate of the election of each member. Alderman Guntzer was then appointed temporary Chairman, after which Henry D. Purroy was nominated for permanent President, and elected by the Tammany Aldermen, the Republicans voting against him. Mr. Purroy, on taking the chair, said he would endeavor to retain the confidence of the board by acting in an impartial and satisfactory manner. "Your instructions," said he, "shall be my guide. The administration now controlling the City takes office under exceptionally auspicious circumstances, and we have reason to hope that it will be marked by harmony in the City Government." After making this complimentary allusion to the success of Tammany at the last election, Mr. Purroy said that the board was ready for business. Capt. F. J. Tuomey was then elected Chief Clerk of the board, and Mr. Welsh, Sergeant-at-arms. The Republican members gave complimentary votes to F. F. Whittemore and Frank Keokeisen for these offices respectively. A committee, of which Alderman Cole was chosen Chairman, was then appointed to inform Mayor Ely that the board had organized and was ready to receive any communication which he might have to make. Soon after they had performed this duty the Mayor sent in the following Message, which was read and ordered to be printed. Five hundred copies of the document are to be issued in pamphlet form. The comparatively brief character of the Message is accounted for by the fact that the reports of the various departments for 1876 have either not yet been completed or have not been added to it:

THE MAYOR'S MESSAGE.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT—MAYOR'S OFFICE, NEW-YORK, Jan. 1, 1877.

To the Honorable the Common Council:

In this country it is customary for newly-elected executive officers to publish, on the day of their taking office, their views and opinions concerning the duties and powers with which they are charged. I have concluded to follow the example of my predecessors, briefly, although I think the duty might be more intelligently discharged at a later day. On resuming my connection with the administration of our City and County Government, after an interval of six years, I find much that is gratifying and much to deplore. Our highest prerogative as citizens is the privilege of choosing our rulers and representatives freely and without interference. I congratulate my fellow-citizens on the grand spectacle our City presented on the day of the last general election, when 172,000 voters deposited their ballots without any obstruction or disorder, and these ballots were afterward canvassed openly and justly. That this vote was intelligently given is demonstrated by the fact that, although the party lines were distinctly drawn, only two tickets were in the field, it is estimated that a majority of the whole number of voters refrained from voting a regular party ticket, but discriminated by erasing or changing one or more names on their respective ballots. This result, in a population composed of such strange and varied elements, is properly a matter of congratulation and pride, while it vindicates the wisdom and practicability of universal suffrage even in large cities. It is more gratifying when contrasted with our condition a few years ago, when dishonest men manipulated our ballot boxes, and ballots of our citizens, by thousands, were counted for candidates against whom they were cast. Next in importance to honest elections is an honest judiciary. At the present time it is conceded that all of our Judges are men of good ability and undoubted integrity, within whose jurisdiction liberty and property are protected, and not imperiled. We all remember the time when some of the Judges of our most important tribunals were the sycophants and tools of the men who had nominations to give, and the courts of law were used by rapacious men as instruments of oppression and extortion.

A very gratifying improvement is also observable in the management of our Municipal affairs. With rare exceptions, the various departments and bureaus of the City Government are controlled by officials who are entitled to the confidence and respect of the community. In this respect there has been a manifest improvement during the last few years, and I think it may now be truthfully said, that our City officials will compare favorably with those of any other large city in this country. It cannot be denied that great inefficiency and delay arising from the inharmonious, irregular, and feeble administration of some of the departments and bureaus are apparent to all who interest themselves in public matters. Complaint is constantly made of the condition of our streets and wharves; of our imperfect back and cab system, and the want of proper and comfortable facilities of communication; of the capricious and spasmodic raids made upon offenders against the laws; of the illegal exactions made by subordinate officials from citizens, whose business and property bring them into communication with some bureau of the City Government; of the opening and improvement of streets long in advance of the needs of the public, by which heavy burdens are imposed upon unproductive property, and of various other abuses more or less conspicuous. It is painful to acknowledge that so much remains to be done to perfect our local Government, but the many improvements already accomplished warrants us in believing that the evils which still exist may be checked and remedied. If citizens who are the objects of official injustice will communicate with this office, its power will be exerted in their behalf. The subject of Municipal reform has recently received considerable attention from our State authorities, both executive and legislative, and it is to be hoped that the commission recently appointed to report to the Legislature such constitutional amendments or laws to remedy the evils of our municipal systems, composed as it is of some of the ablest men in the State, may be instrumental in procuring amendments to our Constitution and laws which will effectually correct many if not all the evils of our present defective system of Municipal Government. During the period of misrule to which I have alluded, our City indebtedness was enormously increased. Some portion of this debt is so involved that it is difficult to estimate its magnitude, and it is to be greatly regretted that there are now pending in the various courts of law about 3,600 suits, involving in the aggregate several millions of dollars.

The debt of the City at the present time, including assessment bonds, &c., is estimated to be.....$141,977,713 00
Less amount in sinking fund.....23,147,102 00
Leaving a net debt.....$118,830,611 00
In addition to this there are revenue bonds outstanding, issued in anticipation of the collection of taxes, amounting to.....6,104,844 00
There is also to be added for the liability of the City for the debts of the annexed portion of Westchester County.....1,345,000 00

Revenue Bonds in anticipation of taxes...	Charter of 1873.....	For amount not to exceed the annual taxes.

The Board of Estimate and Apportionment, consisting of four of the highest City officials, are charged with a most important duty in fixing and limiting the amount to be raised by taxation and to be expended by each of the Departments, a duty which they have discharged with singular fidelity and wisdom. It seems to me that the efficiency of this Board might be still further increased by appointing to it an additional member directly representing the taxable property, particularly the real estate, of the City.

It became necessary during the administration of my immediate predecessor, to take measures for the protection of the ferry rights of the City. Suits have been instituted, one of which involves the very important question whether our ferry franchises extend to the newly-acquired territory embraced in the towns of Morrisania, West Farms, and King's Bridge. The annexation of these towns to the City has added to our Municipal territory a new water front on the eastern shore of the Harlem River, and on the East River, and it is very important that the rights of the City therein should be fully protected. Another litigation now pending relates to the lease of five of the City ferries running to Brooklyn, at a nominal rent, being a loss to the City Treasury of more than $100,000 per annum. The pending suit seeks to have the lease set aside as an unlawful diversion of rents that are pledged to the sinking fund. Proceedings have also been taken to determine whether the Central Railroad of New-Jersey is infringing on the ferry rights of the City. The progress and results of these litigations will be made known to you in due time.

The deficient supply of Croton water during a portion of the past year, has occasioned much inconvenience, and many remedies have been suggested. Our financial condition will not permit us to construct a new aqueduct. The present one cost $10,000,000 and when laborers received only 50 cents per day, and an additional one might now cost double that sum. Our present aqueduct can convey to the City 110,000,000 of gallons per day, an amount much beyond our necessities, and on the completion of the new reservoirs in Westchester County, this quantity can be furnished regularly during the whole year. These new reservoirs, I am informed, can be completed within a year, and when completed there will be a supply of water sufficient to meet the requirments of the City. Besides this, the new high-service water-works, for the purpose of supplying water to the elevated localities of the City, will soon be completed, when water can be furnished in the upper stories of most of our buildings. It is also a fact worthy of consideration, that during the past season when there was an exceptional scarcity of water, there was a sufficient supply for all necessary and legitimate purposes, and that as soon as the services of our efficient Police Force were directed to stopping the waste of water, all danger of a failure of supply was at once averted. I am opposed to the extension of the use of water-meters to private houses, believing that there is no necessity for any such innovation in our water system.

The subject of rapid transit is one of very great importance to our City, and I trust that some method of communication between the upper and lower portions of the City will be devised which will accomplish the desired object, without causing uncompensated injury to the property along the route.

The recent combination on the part of the gas companies to compel the City to pay $36 per lamp, per annum, instead of $23, as heretofore, (an attempt happily frustrated by the strictures of the press and the force of public opinion,) suggests the consideration of the propriety of adopting some system of lighting the City which shall be under the control of its own authorities.

The present peculiar depression and stagnation in our business affairs, the large number of persons now out of employment, greater by far than ever before known, and the consequent depression in the value of real estate in our City, call for increased vigilance on our part to see that no greater burdens are placed upon the people than are necessary, and for increased fidelity in the discharge of the trusts committed to our charge. I therefore think that we should not only abstain from sanctioning any increase of the City debt, and from creating any new public office, but that we should rigidly reduce as far as practicable, both the numbers and the salaries of those now in existence. A Winter of unusual severity compels us to deal at once with the most difficult social problems, in providing the means and the agents for the relief of destitution, without encouraging pauperism and vice. A good City Government cannot be secured by the acts of the officials alone, without the co-operation of the people. With such co-operation, it is fair to believe that the Government of our City, instead of being a scandal and reproach, as it was a few years ago, may be made creditable to our position as the first City of the continent.

SMITH ELY, JR., Mayor.

Alderman Morris offered a resolution requesting the Commissioners of Parks to have all the ice and snow removed from the walks of the various parks, and also requesting the Commissioner of Public Works to have the ice and snow removed from the sidewalks and steps of the public buildings. Mr. Morris said that the work was absolutely necessary to prevent accidents. The resolution was amended by adding to it the bridges over Fourth avenue, after which it was adopted. A resolution was adopted rescinding the one passed by the old board, providing for taking a lease of the building Nos. 7, 9, and 11 West Thirteenth street for the use of the Karl Klein Battery. Messrs. Purroy, Keenan, and Howland, who were selected by the old board to investigate the management of the Third District Court-house Commission, were reappointed. The Board then adjourned.

MAYOR ELY'S APPOINTMENTS.

Mayor Ely has appointed G. B. Vanderpoel Private Secretary, and ex-Alderman Hardy Chief Clerk, in place of Messrs. Harrison and Lathrop, resigned. He has also reappointed Daniel Peixotto as Record Clerk and John Halloran as Messenger. These four are the Mayor's personal staff. Mr. Vanderpoel is a business partner of Mr. Ely. Both are in the leather trade. Ex-Alderman Hardy was formerly Clerk of the Common Council. He was at one time prominently connected with the Anti-Tammany organization. His appointment is accounted for by an effort to demoralize the Democratic magnates who are opposed to Tammany. In the Marshal's Bureau, Mayor Ely has made no changes. The salaries, however, have been somewhat reduced, but the old employes have all been retained, as follows: Marshal, John Tyler Kelly, $2,500; Deputy, Lobert Pratt, $1,500; Clerk, Francis Murray, $1,000; Clerk, Carl M. Roth, $800; Messenger, T. E. Barratt, $800. In the Peruft Department three changes have been made. The following is the present list: Superintendent, D. S. Hart, $2,350; Interpreter, Herman Schroeter, $1,500; Clerk, John T. Boyd, $1,000; Clerk, Philip N. Gaulon, $1,000; Clerk, E. L. Waterbury, $750; Inspector, John D. Newman, $1,000; Inspector, Conrad Friedmann, $1,000; Inspector, James Keese, $800; Inspector, Joseph Keeble, $800; Messenger, John Gorman, $900; Messenger, Joan Bush, $900. Messrs. Friedmann, Keese, and Keeble are new appointees; the other eight served under Mayor Wickham.

TRANSFER OF LUDLOW STREET JAIL TO SHERIFF REILLY—TWEED'S RECEPTION.

At 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon Sheriff Reilly, accompanied by ex-Sheriff Connor and Under-Sheriff Cummins, drove up to Ludlow Street Jail and were received by Warden Watson, who ushered them into the main reception-room where the usual courtesies were exchanged. After which the party passed up-stairs to a large room, where a formal transfer of the prisoners was made by Mr. Conner to his successor, a deputy calling off the names of the prisoners, who responded, and at the same time passed from one large room across a passageway into another. There were 92 of them without Tweed, whose name, singular as it may appear, was not called. Warden Watson then handed to Mr. Conner "all the keys of the jail, and Mr. Conner turned them over to Mr. Reilly, who in turn transferred them back to Mr. Watson. As soon as Mr. Reilly had assumed official control of the institution and the occupants he and ex-Sheriff Conner drew away from the party and passed into Tweed's handsomely-furnished room, where they remained four or five minutes. On returning, both gentlemen refused to say what had taken place between themselves and Tweed, claiming that only the compliments of the season were exchanged. An adjournment to a lower room was then had, and for the succeeding 30 minutes wine flowed freely.

Tweed received a number of callers during the day, but, according to the statement of Warden Watson, neither the "flowing bowl" nor the seductive Conchs entered into the hospitalities extended by "Big Six."

THE NEW SHERIFF AND COUNTY CLERK.

The newly-elected Sheriff and County Clerk gave a joint reception at the office of the former yesterday. The rooms were thronged for several hours by numbers of politicians and others who were profuse in their congratulations to Messrs. Reilly and Gumbleton. Among those present were Controller Kelly, Corporation Counsel Whitney and nearly all the members of the new Common Council. A luncheon, including the usual eatables and potables, was also freely partaken of. The Sheriff has retained in office as Custodian of the Sheriff's juries, Col. Charles L. Crawford, the former incumbent, who has made himself exceedingly popular with jurymen and others with whom he has been brought in contact officially. Among the incidents of the day at the County Clerk's office was the presentation of handsome cameo scarf pins to Messrs. Charles I. Jones and Demosthenes L. Holmes, two of the clerks, by their associates. The following officers of the County Clerk's office were then sworn in: Fairfax McLaughlin, Deputy Clerk; Demosthenes L. Holmes, Assistant Deputy; Edmund L. Flinn, Clerk of Records; Stephen C. Duryea, Chief Recording Clerk; Walter A. Brady, Book-keeper; Isaiah Rynders, Clerk in Chancery; Samuel Mutien, Hugh F. Dolan, James Carney, Edward Kelly, John H. Roberts, Charles I. Jones, Denis Carroll, Michael Brady, Hugh J. Kelly, and Michael Whelan, Recording Clerks; George W. Hardie, Law Clerk, Supreme Court; J. Henry Ford, Equity Clerk; William Lamb, Jr., General Term Clerk; Edward McCue, Special Term Clerk; William Sinclair, Clerk of Chambers; John P. Gaw, Recording Clerk; Michael F. McLaughlin, Clerk, Part I.; William E. Hughes, Clerk, Part II.; and Van Glahn, Clerk, Part III.; Assistant Docket Clerk, John J. Glasson. Nearly all of these are reappointments, and some of the gentlemen have occupied their positions through several official terms.

THE "WARD" ALDERMEN.

The new Board of Aldermen, who claim to have been elected in each ward last November, to act as the Common Council for this year, met in French's Hotel yesterday and "organized for business." They intend to contest the right of the City Hall Aldermen to their seats. It is considered probable that they will notify Mayor Ely of their official existence in a few days.

NEW YEAR'S FESTIVITIES.

A GENERAL OBSERVANCE OF THE DAY—BRILLIANT AND NUMEROUSLY ATTENDED RECEPTIONS — CROWDS IN THE STREETS — CELEBRATIONS IN CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

The celebration of New-Year's Day, if not quite up to the ancient standard, was as elaborate and general as the ever-prevalent plea of "hard times" would allow. Among the rich there was the usual number of calls and receptions, the fashionable world being divided for the nonce into two great classes—those who called and those who received. From noon until an early hour in the evening, throngs of well-dressed visitors marched up to the steps of the brown-stone mansions on Murray Hill and elsewhere, paid their devoirs to the fair occupants, and then marched down again, to repeat the same programme ad infinitum. The toilets of the ladies were radiant with the favorite colors of the season, and the number of costly costumes betokened anything but a season of general depression. In the way of liquid comfort many of the better class of tables were furnished sparingly, but in all such cases palatable substitutes were furnished in the shape of tea, coffee, or chocolate, with perhaps a concession to the drinking community in the shape of claret punch, or some other mild compromise between beverages spirituous and non-spirituous. Different "sets," of course, followed their different tastes, and many a caller, who started out with nothing more exhilarating that a cup of fragrant Oolong, found himself a few hours later the sole possessor of a variety of assorted liquids, to say nothing of edibles, that it would tax the strongest brain and stomach to retain with equanimity. Most of the aristocratic callers made their rounds in cabs, though in the upper part of the City sleighs were patronized in considerable numbers. Some very handsome turnouts of both descriptions were to be seen, and a walk along either of the central avenues during the afternoon was replete with interest and amusement. In many of the up-town mansions the beautiful Christmas wreaths of evergreen and holly still decked the parlor windows, and afforded an earnest that the sister festival was being appropriately commemorated within. Among the lower classes the day was hardly as "happy" a one as might have been; still, in the poorer localities there was something of that atmosphere of comfort and happiness which the day is accustomed to bring with it. Along the Bowery and throughout the avenues, a straggling crowd et pedestrians flowed back and forth through out the day, filling the corner groceries and increasing the sale of malt and spirituous refreshments greatly. The German lager-beer saloons of the East Side, were generally filled with visitors, who enjoyed themselves in their accustomed fashion, while the cigar shops, confectioners' shops, and restaurants did a considerable business. Large audiences gathered at the theatres and music-halls during the afternoon performances, and, during the evening, notwithstanding the counter-attractions, places of amusement were generally well attended. As the day wore on, the effect of "too much New Year's" was visible in the customary amount of intoxication and disorder. In the evening the driving snow-storm kept many of the revelers indoors, but the "tin-horn" clamor at the street corners proved that the juvenile portion of the population regarded the snow in the light of an addition to, instead of a drawback upon, their enjoyment. All the public buildings, including the City Hall, Court-house, Custom-house, Post Office, and Sub-Treasury, were closed, and the employes enjoyed a welcome holiday. At the Episcopal and Catholic churches the day was observed with the usual services in the morning.

THE DAY IN THE CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

As it is not the custom in the charitable institutions to celebrate any of the holidays except Thanksgiving and Christmas, there was no special celebration of New Year's Day. In some instances, however, there were exceptions to the rule. At the Girl's Lodging-house, in St. Mark's place, the inmates were given a grand dinner of roast beef and pudding in the afternoon, and in the evening participated in a New Year's party, and passed the hours until bed-time in dancing, singing, and playing games. The inmates of the Island institutions were the recipients of a holiday dinner similar to that enjoyed on Thanksgiving Day, and spent the remainder of the day and evening in such amusements as their tastes suggested. At the Tombs, the only event of the day was the celebration of a special religious service in the forenoon. There was no holiday dinner, as on Christmas Day. At the Juvenile Asylum, at High Bridge, the holidays are always celebrated with appropriate festivities, and yesterday was no exception to the rule. From early morning until late at night the inmates, 640 in number, kept up a continual round of pleasure. At noon they had a turkey dinner, and the afternoon was devoted to the hearty enjoyment of the numerous pastimes provided for the occasion by the officers of the institution. At the House of Reception of the New-York Juvenile Asylum, situated at No. 51 West Thirteenth street, the day was observed with festivities similar to those which were enjoyed at the asylum at High Bridge. The same grand turkey dinner was served to the 160 little inmates, and when it was eaten they passed the remainder of the day and evening in playing games and otherwise enjoying themselves.

A QUIET DAY IN BROOKLYN.

Yesterday being the Feast of the Communion, was commemorated in the Roman Catholic churches as Sunday is observed. The time-honored custom of making New-Year's calls was considered by many "more honored in the breach than the observance," judging from the large number of card baskets hung on the bell pulls. Receptions, terminating early in the day, were held by Mayor Schroeder, Controller Burrill, County Clerk Palmer, Sheriff Pegnet, and Keeper Tormey, of the City Hall. A gratifying feature of the day was the almost entire absence of intoxicated people from the streets.

ENTERTAINMENT OF THE PRISONERS AT SING SING.

According to the custom of former years, the convicts confined in Sing Sing Prison celebrated New-Year's Day with an entertainment, for which preparations have been in progress for the past three months. The programme was arranged by the prisoners, and the management of the affair was left solely to them. Immediately after breakfast, at 8 o'clock, the prisoners were marched from the mess-room to the chapel, where a temporary stage had been erected, on which those assuming an active part in the exercises took their places. In addition to the attaches of the institution, there were also present a large number of the friends and relatives of the convicts and residents of the village. The entertainment consumed about two hours. The programme embraced comic singing, recitations, and a performance on the flying trapeze. At the conclusion of the festivities the prisoners proceeded to the mess-room and obtained their dinner, the fare being the same as allowed on ordinary days, no extra having been provided. They were then locked up for the day.

THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.

NUMBER OF FIRES, THEIR CAUSES AND ORIGIN, DURING THE YEAR 1876—PRECAUTIONS AGAINST THEATRE ACCIDENTS.

The number of fires during the year 1876 was 1,344; as compared with 1,373 in 1875, a slight decrease in number, but the losses during the past year amounted to $2,717,996, as compared with $2,340,600 in 1875. The excess—$377,396—was more than reached in one fire, that of Feb. 8, on Broadway, which resulted in damage to the extent of more than $2,000,000. The insurances on property burned in 1876 were $11,926,109, while property valued at $86,903 was uninsured. The insured loss in 1875 was $375,000. The fire of Feb. 8, which broke out in No. 444 Broadway, destroyed that building and Nos. 448 and 450, considerably injured the building No. 127 Grand street, and slightly injured the buildings Nos. 123, 129, and 131 Grand street, and No. 134 Howard street, causing a loss of $2,325,067. On July 9, Castle Garden was burned, the damage amounting to $56,724. The cigar factory of Straiton & Storm, No. 178 Pearl street, was damaged by fire on May 2; loss, $68,965. The causes of fire during the year are given as follows:

Accidental, 12; broken glass falling on matches, 1; bursting of kiln, 1; carelessness of occupants, 321; children playing with matches, 65; Christmas tree, 1; clothes igniting from stove, 7; defective flues, 41; escaped gas igniting, 22; foul chimneys, 130; gasoline stoves and lamps, 3; fat and meat falling into the fire, 13; friction of belting and machinery, 3; hot tyre in cooler, 2; hot coals from stove, 3; igniting oily rags from contact with steam-pipe, 1; incendiary and supposed incendiary, 18; explosion or upsetting kerosene lamps, 86; liquid gas explosion, 2; malicious mischief, 28; not ascertained, 85; overheated stoves, 40; rats and mice gnawing matches, 6; spontaneous combustion, 23; sparks from previous fire, 7; sparks from stove-pipes and chimneys, 43; tar and pitch boiling over, 36; upsetting stove, 7; window-curtains, clothing, and goods taking fire from lamps and gas-lights, 51; fireworks, transparencies, &c., 106; obnoxious ignition, 2; furnace and stove-pipes, 9; improper management of stove-pipes, 9; improper construction of brick furnaces, 3; sugar and wax boiling over, 4.

Among the accidents at fires were the following: Hugh McCabe, aged 6 years, was run over on Jan. 4 by Hook and Ladder Company No. 3, at No. 512 East Seventeenth street. At the fire of Feb. 8, David Cline and David Muldrow, of Engine Company No. 30, were killed by falling walls while on duty in front of No. 446 Broadway, and Thomas J. Corliass, of the same company, was severely injured. On Feb. 22, Mrs. Ogden was badly burned at No. 108 East Eleventh street, and died before the arrival of an ambulance. At No. 507 East Fifteenth street, on March 17, Mary Wray and child were fatally burned, and on March 19, at No. 415 Pearl street, Catharine Hoolihan was burned to death. Jacob Greenwall, aged 4 years, was burned to death on March 20 at No. 51 Suffolk street, and on April 17 Bridget McIntyre was burned to death while lighting a fire with kerosene-oil at Third avenue and Sixty-seventh street. Joseph Hinderlet was burned to death at No. 1,512 Broadway by the fire on Oct. 5. Five men were suffocated in the hold of the bark Europa, on the 7th of October, while at work in the vessel, and one man broke his arm while escaping. On the 23d of December Terence McGowan was suffocated at the fire at No. 79 Ann street.

The department has recently prescented a strict examination of all places of public resort, and secured better means of egress for the crowds attending theatres. Two picked firemen have been assigned to each theatre, one of whom is to keep watch in the auditorium and the other to have charge of the fire apparatus in the house. The regular force will thus be reduced, and an effort is to be made to secure an appropriation to increase the force by filling the vacancies caused by the assignment of these men to special duty.

THE SALT NUISANCE.

OPEN VIOLATION OF THE LAW IN REGARD TO SALTING THE TRACKS BY STREET RAILROAD COMPANIES.

Under the present provisions of the law relating to the regulation and management of the horse-railroad tracks in this City, the companies are permitted to use salt on all curves, switches, and crossings, in order to rid them of snow, and to prevent the formation of ice. This privilege, even if confined rigidly to the places indicated, is productive of much discomfort to all who have to pass over them on foot, but when it is abused, as it was on Sunday last, it brings back all the horrible features of former years, when the indiscriminate use of salt was permitted. On Sunday a TIMES reporter rode over several of the lines of the horse railroads of the City, and saw that salt had been liberally applied along their whole length, in utter violation of the law. Among these lines may be mentioned the Broadway and Seventh Avenue, the Seventh Avenue, the Sixth Avenue, the Eighth Avenue, the Ninth Avenue, and the Central Cross-town Line. The same complaint was made in regard to many of the lines on the east side of the City. In many places where two or more tracks come together, and where there were several switches and curves in close proximity, the condition of the streets and sidewalks was simply horrible. Ever since the last snow-fall, the triangular space in front of the Post Office, bounded by Broadway and Park row, has been covered with a black, black paste, composed of filth, half-melted snow, and salt, interspersed with small pools of water. The sidewalks are little better than the street, and are covered with a sticky, slimy mud. Every one who has to pass along this portion of the street inevitably gets his shoes wet with this mixture, which has the peculiar property of never getting dry. The crossings at Broadway and Canal street are in the same filthy condition. In fact, all the crossings and curves in the City where salt is used are more or less wet and dirty, and the cause of much discomfort to all who have to walk over them. Apart from all other considerations, the question of the bad effect of this lavish distribution of salt on the public health is a very serious one, many eminent physicians of this City having condemned it time and again.

THE TWEED AND SWEENY SUITS.

Judge Westbrook will open an adjourned term of Supreme Court, Circuit, Part II., to-day for the purpose of taking up the $7,000,000 suit against Sweeny and the $1,000,000 Tweed suit. The struck juries in both cases will be in attendance, but their services will probably not be required. As has been stated in THE TIMES, the Sweeny suit will probably be adjourned until next month, when ex-Chamberlain Bimself will put in an appearance. After the fixing of the adjournment the Tweed case will probably be called. The counsel for Tweed will ask for a delay on account of Judge Westbrook's promise that this case should not be taken up before the Sweeny suit has been tried. Tweed's counsel have not made any preparations for a trial, and will certainly ask for a short adjournment, even if the counsel for the people express themselves anxious to prosecute the case. Neither case will be proceeded with at once. It is possible also that David Dudley Field's venture in the political line will have the effect of retarding the suit against Tweed, in which he is senior counsel.

ATTEMPTED HIGHWAY ROBBERY.

Justice Duffy presided at the Tombs Police Court yesterday, and spent the forenoon in disposing of about half a hundred individuals, who in taking farewell of the "Centennial" year had entered too enthusiastically into the spirit of the occasion, and had imbibed a trifle too much of the "flowing bowl." The only criminal case disposed of was that of one Mortimer Shea, a lad of 20 years, residing at No. 15 Roosevelt street, who had attempted to rob Mr. Michael Hamill, of No. 435 East Twelfth street. The latter, while changing a bill in a liquor store, was noticed by Shea, who followed him into the street and demanded the money from him. Hamill refused to accede to this request at first, but when Shea drew an iron wrench from his pocket and threatened to strike him, he allowed his pockets to be searched. Shea, after searching his person, discovered that the money was in Hamill's hand. He was about to seize it, when a policeman approached, and, noticing Shea in the act of taking the money, promptly arrested him. The prisoner, who claimed that he was a watchman, and denied that he had attempted to rob the complainant, was committed for trial in default of $1,000 bail.

A COMPLICATED CASE.

Joseph Kellner, of No. 1,488 Second avenue, appeared at the Fifty-seventh Street Police Court last Sunday, and preferred a charge against Simon Lanigan of robbing him of a gold watch and some clothing. The prisoner was committed and the plaintiff left the court-room, but had hardly reached the street when he was arrested on the complaint of Max Hoppe, of No. 77 Elisabeth street. The latter complained that Kellner occupied a room with him a few days ago, and carried off the plaintiff's clothing and watch, valued in all at $40. The prisoner was committed for examination yesterday by Justice Murray, at the Fifty-seventh Street Police Court.

THE STREET BOYS' NEW YEAR'S.

The homeless boys of the East Side had a happy time last night at the Rivington Street Lodging-house of the Children's Aid Society. An attractive supper was served to the boys at 6 o'clock, and they performed a varied programme in the reception room. National flags and a profusion of plants and flowers adorned the hall. The boys sang Irish and other songs in character, danced clog dances, and delivered comic speeches. At the close of the boys' programme the Superintendent presented a number of destitute fellows with comfortable shoes and stockings, the gift of a few friends.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

The fines collected during the month of December in the Fifty-seventh Street Police Court amounted to $775.

An unknown boy, aged about 14, was found insensible last night at Eighth street and First avenue, and was sent to Bellevue Hospital.

While riding on a Grand and Forty-second street car last night, H. Eggirs, of No. 513 Eighth avenue, had his pocket picked of a valuable gold watch.

Judge Gildersleeve formally opened the January term of the Court of General Sessions yesterday, and immediately adjourned it until to-day without transacting any business.

Patrolman Lefferts, of the Fifteenth Precinct, reported yesterday that an attempt was made on the preceding night to break into Vanderburg's clothing store, No. 20 Fourth avenue, by unscrewing the lock.

During an altercation last evening between Timothy O'Neill, of No. 336 East Forty-ninth street, and Patrick Green, at No. 857 Second avenue, O'Neill fell and had his collar-bone and one of his hips dislocated. Green was locked up in the Nineteenth Precinct Station.

James Monaghan, of No. 323 East Thirty-fifth street, quarreled with his brother-in-law. Michael Culligan, last Sunday, when he attempted to eject from his residence, and whom, thereupon, stabbed Monaghan in the hand and wrist, with a pocket-knife. In the Fifty-seventh Street Police Court, yesterday, Justice Murray committed Culligan for trial.

Phazer Huff, a colored man, of No. 123 West Twenty-fifth street, was stabbed in the left breast with a pocket-knife last night by George H. Peterson, of No. 15 Marion street. The men were visiting mutual friends at No. 342 West street, and while there quarreled about some trivial matter. Huff, whose wound is a severe one, was attended by Dr. Wade, and left for home. Peterson was arrested and locked up in the Sixteenth Precinct.

George Brouberg, residing at No. 325 East Fifty-fifth street, was arraigned at the Fifty-seventh Street Police Court yesterday upon a charge preferred by his father, that he had robbed him of over $200 worth of wearing apparel, and who said he strongly suspected his son of taking $3,000 worth of diamonds, which had mysteriously disappeared some time since. The prisoner has been leading a fast life lately. Justice Murray, at the Fifty-seventh Street Police Court, remanded the prisoner for examination.

A youth named Samuel Simon, residing at No. 252 Avenue A, on Sunday discovered James Brady prying open the door of his father's shoe-store, and gave an alarm. Brady turned suddenly and knocked the boy down, and ran away with a lot of shoes. Officer Schenck, of the Eighteenth Precinct, arrested the thief on Seventeenth street, after a struggle with a number of roughs, who endeavored to rescue the prisoner, and in doing so struck the officer several times in the face. The prisoner was committed for trial at the Fifty-seventh Street Police Court yesterday.

BROOKLYN.

The clothing store No. 241 Fourth street, was entered by thieves yesterday morning, and $150 worth of property was carried off.

Thomas Clark, for picking the pocket of Mrs. W. Harrold, of No. 150 Fourteenth street, was sentenced to four months in the Penitentiary yesterday by Justice Riley.

William Walsh, of No. 247 Plymouth street, was arrested yesterday on a charge of biting a piece out of his wife's face and beating her in a shocking manner.

Mitchell Roberts, a cigar maker, died yesterday from the effects of a fall received while he was intoxicated, at his residence, No. 220 Grand street, on Sunday evening.

The Charity Commissioners met yesterday at their office on Willoughby street, and reorganized for the year by re-electing Dr. Norris as President, and electing Commissioner Midas as Treasurer.

A fire occurred at the residence of Mr. Gabriel Nicholson at No. 87 Park place, yesterday morning, which occasioned damage to the furniture and building amounting to $1,000. The loss is covered by insurance in the Jefferson Insurance Company.

Catherine Drugan, of No. 63 Amity street, stabbed Officer Fitzsimmons, of the Eleventh Precinct, in the arm with a table-knife while the latter was attempting to arrest her for being drunk and disorderly. The woman's son struck the officer in the face and tore his uniform. Both mother and son were locked up.

A man, of low stature, wearing a black moustache, entered the apartments of Mrs. Schaunberg, No. 171 Johnson street, and demanded $5, threatening personal violence if he did not receive it. The money was given to him, after which the ruffian seized an axe and broke a large part of the furniture. The man fled before he could be arrested.

THE STATE CAPITAL.

ORGANIZATION OF BOTH HOUSES.

ADDRESSES OF MR. DORSHEIMER AND MR. SLOAN—THE QUESTION OF APPORTIONMENT REFERRED BY THE SENATE TO A SPECIAL COMMITTEE OF SEVEN—THE GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE READ—SPINOLA ACHIEVES DISTINCTION—DRAWING FOR SEATS IN THE HOUSE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 2.—The Legislature of 1877 organized this morning with the usual formalities. The Senate met at 11 o'clock. Nineteen members responded to their names, and Mr. Robertson stated that he had received a telegram stating that Senators Baaden, Prince, and Wagner were on a snowed-in train, and would probably not reach Albany till evening. The two new Senators—Wagstaff of the Fifth, and Sprague of the Thirty-first—appeared and were sworn. Lieut.-Gov. Dorsheimer delivered the following address:

"I have again been charged with the duty of presiding over your deliberations. In assuming the office, I may believe that my past experience will enable me to be more useful to you, and I am sure that I may expect a continuance of the generous indulgence which I have already received at your hands. It is not necessary that I should endeavor to impress upon you the importance of the relations you hold to the Government of the State. New-York State enters upon the second century of our national existence with nearly twice the population which the Colonies had when independence was declared. According to the ratio of European growth during the last century the second Centennial will find here not less than 20,000,000 of people, the descendants of all European races, and presenting an unusual diversity and variety of interests and pursuits. I venture to remind you that you act not for yourselves, nor for this time alone, but what you do here will have an influence upon all the great future of New-York."

After the usual routine business had been disposed of, Senator Woodin offered a resolution, which was adopted, that a special committee of seven Senators be appointed, to which shall be referred the subject of appointment of members of the Legislature under the last enumeration, with instructions to report by bill. The Chair appointed Messrs. Woodin, Sprague, Harris, Moore, Jacobs, Gerard, and Starbuck as such committee. This practically concluded the business of the session, and the Senate adjourned. The Assembly was called to order by Mr. Johnson, the Clerk of the last House. The members were sworn in by the Secretary of State and the election of Speaker took place, the Republicans voting for Mr. Sloan, and the Democrats for Mr. Cozzans. Mr. Sloan's address, on taking the chair, was as follows:

SPEAKER SLOAN'S SPEECH.

GENTLEMEN OF THE ASSEMBLY: I am deeply sensible of the honor conferred upon me by the vote just announced which designates me as your presiding officer. While offering you my grateful acknowledgments for this expression of your confidence, I may well observe that you have honored me not only beyond my deserts, but beyond any aspirations I have ever felt at liberty to entertain; and I may also add that when I call to mind the delicate and oftentimes trying duties of the position, and the signal ability displayed in the same relation by my immediate predecessor, as well as by other gentlemen whose accomplishments have graced the office on former occasions, it is not easy to escape a sense of oppression which burdens me even now as I enter upon the task you have given me to perform. I might well shrink from assuming these responsibilities were I not encouraged by circumstances which lead me to attempt their fulfillment. I recognize many members of this body largely experienced in public affairs, among whom are gentlemen who have served with distinction in this branch of the Legislature, but those whose names are honorably written in the journal of the Senate as well; and to such I believe I may confidently turn for that advice and counsel of which I shall so stand in need. Others there are of whom, it may be said, though yet unused to the work of legislation, they are nevertheless strong in the knowledge of practical affairs, who are ready and willing to join their efforts in producing those salutary results which I have reason to think are desired by every member of this House; and persuaded as I am that all are animated by a common purpose to uphold the honor and dignity of this State, I anticipate such wise and judicious action as shall occasion no feeling of regret that we have had a part in its accomplishment. We meet at a time of universal solicitude and interest; a time when the public attention is anxiously directed to the extraordinary circumstances attending the late Presidential election. The different opinions as to the methods to be employed in solving the question are entertained by gentlemen of distinction in the two political parties, and it may naturally be supposed that these opinions are influenced to a greater or less extent by the predilections of the individuals themselves. But, however this may be, there is a pronounced determination of the people for a just and peaceful settlement of the matters in controversy, that violent or unconciliatory counsels are regarded by thoughtful, right-minded men of either party as little less than vagaries, not worthy of serious consideration. It may be assumed that patriotic effort united with patriotic and calm deliberation, having the support of an assuring public sentiment looking to the welfare of the country as above and beyond all partisan considerations, will be found effectual in arriving at such results in the Constitutional mode as shall allay existing irritations and be acquiesced in by the people generally as just and equitable to all parties concerned.

Turning from the broader field of national affairs to glance at what may be regarded more legitimately within the province of our own duty, we find promise of labor not incapable of being reasonable expansion of the people. The desire evinced in all parts of the State for rigid economy in every department of the public service is one likely to overshadow demands that might other wise be made upon us. It is therefore a satisfaction to know that the present condition of the finances and the actual public debt are elements exceedingly favorable in adjusting the rate of taxation to correspond with the prevailing depression in all departments of commercial and industrial pursuits. So far reduced are the financial obligations of the State that the requirements for the payment of principal and interest are comparatively trifling. We have, therefore, only to exercise moderate prudence in appropriating for the other purposes of the Government to render the burden of taxation so light as to be in no degree oppressive. It will be a part of your duty to consider the question of reapportioning the Senate and Assembly districts of the State in conformity with the provision of the Constitution which demands such supplemental action after each enumeration of the inhabitants is made. Another subject of moment will also engage your attention in the form of legislation required to give effect to the amendments to the Constitution approved by two successive Legislatures, and ratified by the people at the last election. I refer to the amendments changing the system of the management of the canals and the State Prisons. It is not necessary for me to urge the desirability of early and painstaking consideration of these measures, also you fully understand and appreciate their importance; but may I not in this connection take the liberty of suggesting the great advantage to be gained by promptly acting on all matters that may be brought to your attention. Close and earnest application by the various committees of the House to the work in hand during the early part of the session will render practicable that necessary attendance upon the Senate under other circumstances are apt to be imperfectly prepared and much too hastily enacted. By early action in the direction indicated it may also be assumed the bills of doubtful utility will be more likely to be defeated than if allowed to linger on your files until the hurry of the closing days of the session shall lend facility to their passage. Other suggestions might be made did I deem them needful, but I believe my duty in that regard is already more than discharged. Your intelligence, your experience, and your full understanding of the requirements of the situation afford of themselves the amplest guarantees that all will be wisely done. It only remains for me, therefore, to give assurance of my desire to co-operate with you in every practicable manner to secure the best result in whatever we may undertake as members of this body, and to further add that, however conspicuous may be my position, I shall not, in the face of intentional injustice to any member on this floor will not be found among them."

Following Mr. Sloan's address, the formal election of Clerk and other officers was gone through with, and the other regular routine business of organization being disposed of, the Governor's Message was presented to the House and read. Mr. Nachtmann offered a resolution that the Message be translated into German, and that 10,000 copies be printed for the use of the House and 1,000 for the Governor, which was referred. Mr. Lang offered a resolution relative to an adjournment from to-morrow until Tuesday morning next, which was laid over under the rule.

The special incident of the session was the "splurge," for that is the best term for it, made by the belligerent Spinola, who took the earliest opportunity to show that he was going to be a general nuisance. He offered an impracticable resolution about printing the daily journal of proceeding, and urged it in so offensive a style that both Mr. Alvord and Mr. Husted, either of whom could snatch the scalp off a dozen Spinolas in parliamentary debate, took him in hand, and gave the gentleman to understand that the majority in the Assembly intended to rule it. The other New-York Democratic members kept quiet. Spinola, in the interests of "reform and honest government," introduced a concurrent resolution, amending section 9 of article 8 of the Constitution, by adding a clause providing that the bonded debt of the City and County of New-York shall, at all times, be kept within the sum of $150,000,000, and all bonds or stock, issued by the City and County, which would increase said debt beyond that limit, shall be void in law and equity, and it shall be a felony, punishable as such, for any person to issue any bonds or stock in the name of said City and County which would increase said debt beyond the limit above named. The resolution was laid over under the rule.

A session was held in the afternoon for the drawing of seats. A resolution was offered that Mr. Alvord, Mr. Husted, and Judge Hogeboom be permitted to choose their seats, but the latter declined to have any privileges asked for him, and the resolution was finally laid on the table. The members, however, generously refused to take the well-known seats of Mr. Alvord and Mr. Husted, and these gentlemen occupy the same places they have had in eight previous Legislatures.

THE ROBINSON-TILDEN MESSAGE.

THE AUTHORSHIP OF THE ESSAY ON THE PRESIDENCY PRETTY DIRECTLY TRACED TO MR. TILDEN—MR. ROBINSON MERELY A MOUTHPIECE FOR THE MOCK REFORMER.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 2.—It was rumored here on Sunday night that Gov. Robinson would discuss the Presidential problem in his Message in a brief and mild way. It was at once said that if the Message contained anything on the subject it would be only Tilden speaking in Robinson's name, but, except by a few, the rumor was discredited, and Gov. Robinson himself was of course quite silent in regard to the matter. To-day it has come out that the actual Message of Gov. Robinson, which ends at page 30 of the printed pamphlet, was written and printed before the political supplement of nine pages, which is added to the original document, had been put into the printer's hands. It appears that Mr. Tilden brought the manuscript of his essay with him when he came up from New-York. If anything were needed to confirm this, it would appear in the fact that these pages are tacked on at the end, and may be cut away, still leaving the original document as printed entire. The opinion of everyone here is as fixed upon the question of joint authorship as if Gov. Robinson's name were signed at the bottom of page 30 of the pamphlet and Mr. Tilden's at the end of page 39. It is pointed out also that the literary style of the political supplement is totally different from that of the main body of the Message. The latter is a plain businesslike statement of State and local affairs. In fact, it reads in every sentence just as Gov. Robinson talks. The other is an elaborately-written essay on the Presidential question from Mr. Tilden's point of view, full of flowing sentences, carefully-rounded periods, and sounding phrases. It may be mentioned, also, that Gov. Robinson has been so busily engaged up to the last moment in attending to his legitimate duties as State Controller, and also in preparing his Message as Governor of New-York, that he has had no leisure for the elaboration of long special pleas on national affairs. This portion of the Message, therefore, must be regarded as fresh from Mr. Tilden's pen.

In respect to State affairs, as stated by Gov. Robinson, his position on the common-school question is regarded by some leading Republicans here as most dangerous. There has scarcely been time, however, for a thorough discussion of the message.

THE CANAL DEPARTMENT REPORT.

THE SURPLUS RECEIPTS FOR THE YEAR $338,138—THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT LIMITING EXPENDITURES—EFFECT OF THE RAILROAD COMPETITION—FREIGHTS CARRIED BELOW THE COST OF CANAL TRANSPORTATION, AND LESS THAN HALF RAILROAD CARRIAGE—HEAVY LOSS TO THE RAILROADS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 2.—The report of the Auditor of the Canal Department has been issued. The total receipts of the canals for the past fiscal year are $1,477,331; payments for ordinary repairs, $1,149,194, leaving a surplus revenue of $338,138, which has been appropriated and set apart as the Constitution directs.

The financial condition of the canals for the last fiscal year is as follows: Balance in the Treasury and invested Oct. 1, 1875, $3,887,906 03; received from all sources during the fiscal year ending Sept. 30, 1876, $2,842,771 16; total, $6,730,677 19; paid during the same period, $2,896,584 06; leaving a balance Sept. 30, 1876, of $3,834,093 13.

The unpaid and outstanding canal debt on the 30th of September, 1876, and for which certificates of stock have been issued, is $10,081,660. The rate of interest on this debt is 6 per cent.

The Auditor discusses the effect of the constitutional amendment adopted in 1874, limiting the expenditures on the canals to the amount of their gross receipts for the previous year, and concludes that its adoption was exceedingly unfortunate, in view of the present diminished and diminishing revenues. The use of steam on the canals is considered at some length, and the concluding pages of the report are devoted to a discussion of the effects of railroad competition on the revenues and tonnage of the canals. On this question the Auditor says:

"For the last two years the surplus revenues of the canals have not been sufficient to pay in full the interest, at 6 per cent., on a small debt of $9,165,000, and have totally failed to contribute anything to the sinking fund for the redemption of the debt, on the credit of which loans were obtained. The statement shows a falling off in the toll receipts of the last fiscal year, as compared with those of 1875, of $438,662 74, a decrease in payments of $265,262 33, and a loss in net receipts of $120,541 40. The deficiency for the fiscal year ending 30th September, 1875, was made good by a diversion of funds which previously had been raised by tax and appropriated for the improvement of the canals, but the deficiency of the last fiscal year, ending 30th of September, 1876, will require the imposition of a tax to meet it. These deficiencies are the result of two causes—reduced tolls and reduced tonnage. The greatest loss in tonnage seems to have followed the greatest reduction in tolls, when precisely the opposite result was predicted by those who advocated the reduction. This loss of tonnage is attributed to the fact that the two main railway companies of this State have been transporting freight at rates which made it impossible for a large portion of the canal carriers to run their boats. From the second week in June to the second week in October, 1876, the railroads carried wheat from Buffalo to New-York at an average of 6 cents per bushel, which was below the actual cost by the average of canal boats, and about one-half the actual cost by rail, as appears by the sworn returns of the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company for the fiscal year ending Sept. 30, 1875, and on file in the office of the State Engineer and Surveyor. This ruinous competition with the water route was not confined to Buffalo, but rates of freight were equally depressed at the principal shipping points at the West, the tendency of which was to lessen shipments by lake and increase through shipments by rail. It is not within the power of the State to aid the canals by any further reduction in the rates of toll. The revenue derived from the present rates, the last fiscal year, was but slightly in excess of the cost of maintenance, and, if the past policy of the roads shall be continued the coming season it is certain that the revenues for the fiscal year which commenced Oct. 1, 1876, will fall short of the sum needed for collection and repairs.

The pending campaign against the water route is, unquestionably, causing great loss to the roads. Of this fact we only know what the officers of the roads choose to make public. For the fiscal year ending Sept. 30, 1869, the year preceding the reduction in canal tolls, the gross earnings of the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company exceeded the payments, other than for construction, $1,137,767 65. From 1870 to 1874, both years included, the annual average surplus was only $80,413, and for 1875 the payments, other than for construction, exceeded the gross earnings $1,581,654 29. But if the effect of this competition shall be to destroy the canals and the lake interests as well, the roads will have abundant opportunities in the future to make good all their losses, and reap substantial gains. This constituency of the railroads, although for the time being protected by the present enormous relative rates of transportation, causes no diversion from the trade of rival States, and threatens the impoverishment of thousands of individuals by rendering worthless the vast equipments of lakes and canals.

It is asserted, and undoubtedly in truth, that within the last three years New-York's proportion of the whole grain trade has fallen 12 per cent. We know that the canals have lost heavily in tonnage, and the railroads have gained in a corresponding degree. The evidence is conclusive that the gains of the railroads are simply diversions from the canals. The State of New-York made valuable concessions to the various roads which now form its main trunk lines, to which they were not entitled under their original charters. If these concessions are being abused and are likely to prove the destruction of our canal system and the source of onerous taxes, public policy and the public interest would seem to justify their revocation.

The Auditor with this brief recital submits the subject to the earnest consideration of the Legislature, fully impressed that its importance demands immediate action and the most searching investigation. He believes that our canals have reached the darkest period of their existence, and that a crisis is impending which will require great sagacity and fearless legislation to extricate them from their peril.

COAL MINES ON FIRE.

THE DEEP WORKINGS OF SEVERAL COLLIERIES IN DANGER—TEN MILES OF SUBTERRANEAN GALLERIES—EIGHTY-SIX MULES SUFFOCATED—THE LOSS ON OTHER PROPERTY NOT YET KNOWN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

POTTSVILLE, Jan. 2.—Yesterday afternoon a fire, which threatens to be even more serious in its consequences than is usual with colliery fires, broke out in the deep workings of the Lykens Valley mines, at Wiconisco, 30 miles west of this place. There are four collieries—the Short Mountain, Lykens Valley, Big Lick and Summit Branch—all worked by one company, all connected by underground passages, and all drained by the same set of pumps. Together their workings form one of the longest subterranean galleries in the world, having a continuous communication of about ten miles in a straight line. They produce the well-known Lyken's Valley coal, a soft semi-anthracite, which burns readily, a quality to which the rapid spread of the fire is doubtless owing. As nearly as can be ascertained, the fire broke out in the pumping way near the bottom of the principal slope, which is nearly 500 yards in depth. Its origin is unknown, but in less than 12 hours it had made its way along the slopes and gangways to the surface, where it burned the pumping-house containing a powerful "Bull" or Cornish engine. Reports from the mines say nothing about the loss of human life, and it is probable that all the miners escaped, as the numerous openings enabled them to do so without trouble. But 86 head of mules were suffocated by the smoke and gases. The latest dispatches say that Bear Creek, which runs over part of the workings, had been turned into them, and that the fire was thought to be under control; but this is doubted here. A large portion of the combined collieries is above water level, and if the fire has gained a firm hold on the upper workings it will be almost impossible to extinguish it. Nor could the lower workings have been filled as quickly as the dispatch referred to would indicate. Even should the fire be under control, however, the destruction of the main pumping engine will necessitate the closing of nearly all the workings for several weeks, thus throwing about 500 persons out of employment. No estimate of the loss is given.

ADVANCE IN PASSENGER RATES FROM CHICAGO.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 2.—An advance in passenger rates between Chicago and the seaboard is expected soon. The lines running east from here have already agreed on an advance. The figures they fix upon are: Chicago to New-York, $18; Chicago to Boston, $19. The rate to other seaboard points are to be made upon this basis.

A change of passenger rates to the West, on the New-York Central, Erie, and Pennsylvania Railroads, will go into effect to-day. There will be no increase in the rate to Buffalo, the present rate to that station being $7, with a drawback of $1. Following is the new schedule:

	Old Rate.	New Rate.
New-York to Cleveland, Ohio	$8	$11 00
Toledo, Ohio	10	13 50
Detroit, Mich	10	12 00
Chicago, Ill	13	18 00
St. Louis, Mo	17	23 00
Indianapolis, Ind	12	17 00
Louisville, Ky	15	20 00
Cincinnati, Ohio	11	16 00

DANGEROUS EXPLOSIVES BY RAIL.

PITTSFIELD, Jan. 2.—Isaac J. Wooden has been held in $18,000 bail, by the District Court, to answer the charge of shipping giant powder over the Boston and Albany Railway. This is the first case under the State law, passed in 1871, prohibiting the shipping of nitro-glycerine or similar explosives by rail. The defense claim that giant powder is not such an explosive.

RIOTOUS VOTERS IN CANADA.

OTTAWA, Jan. 2.—At the Gloucester election yesterday a riot occurred at one of the polls which resulted in 10 or 12 men being seriously injured. The Returning Officer found it necessary to close the hall, and the voting, which was necessarily postponed, is progressing to-day.

A LAND COMPANY'S MORTGAGE.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 2.—In order to secure funds to complete the railroad to its coal mines in the Shenandoah Valley, the Royal Land Company of Virginia has mortgaged its property to the Fidelity Insurance, Trust, and Safe Deposit Company, of Philadelphia, for $3,500,000.

THE ASHTABULA DISASTER.

FURTHER DETAILS OF THE ACCIDENT

CLEARING AWAY THE DEBRIS—A FEW REMNANTS OF HUMAN BEINGS FOUND—THREE MORE BODIES IDENTIFIED—THE NUMBER OF PASSENGERS ON THE TRAIN—TWO IMPORTANT QUESTIONS—THE CORONER'S INQUEST—EXTRACT FROM A STATE LAW.

By Telegraph from Our Special Correspondent.

ASHTABULA, Jan. 2.—The work of clearing away the débris of the wrecked train was carried on so actively to-day, in spite of the heavy snow-storm, that nothing now lies in the creek except the engine and the broken-up bridge, and the work of removing these will be begun to-morrow. All vestiges of the cars have been removed. The ice was gradually broken back to 50 feet from the line of the bridge, and 10 feet from the line where any car lay. Two hands, four pieces of thoroughly calcined bone, and several small pieces of charred flesh were all the human remains that were recovered. No bodies are left where the three last cars came crashing one over the other, and the railroad authorities now admit that everybody in these three cars must have been utterly consumed, and the ashes washed away in the stream probably 50 in all. No entire body could have been washed away, since the iron work of the bridge acted as a dam. Several articles of clothing, numerous pieces of ladies' dresses and underwear, may lead to identification. A large shawl bound with a strap had inside the bundle two linen shirts with the name of "G. W. Hubbard" marked on them in ink. Mr. Hubbard was known to be on the train, but his body has not been found. A coat with side pocket was found, which contains a telegram, ordering some dry goods, addressed to "J. W. Smith, Toronto, Canada." A pincushion, too, was found, with a mirror on one side, and an advertisement of the boot and shoe business of Joseph H. Aldrich, of DesMoines, Iowa, on the other. Mr. Aldrich had carried this pincushion for three years. He was known to be on the train. Three bodies have been identified to-day: that of Martha Tabita Volk, of Rochester, identified by a dress; that of Charles Vorel, of Albany, identified by watch chain and portions of underclothing made for him by his wife; there was only an arm and a leg left; and that of Boyd L. Russell, of Auburn, identified by the initials "B. L. R." marked on the shirt-cuff button, and still hanging to his wrist. Mr. Russell's is the only body which has yet been taken away. I went to the Post Office to-day. The Postmaster says there were three tons of mail on the train. A large portion of the letters have been recovered. Nearly all the heavy portion of the mail is destroyed. Some of the letters are very badly burned and soaked, but I should think, from their appearance, that the greater part of them can be forwarded after having been carefully dried.

The two great questions which now agitate the community here are the vexed one of the number of passengers on the train and the very serious question as to where lies the responsibility for not putting out the fire. The Coroner and his jury, backed up by the towns-people, seem determined to sift the latter dispute to the bottom. With regard to the number of passengers, it is evident that the conductor's sworn estimate of 131 is far below the mark. In the first place Mr. Porter swore that he overheard the conductor say, in answer to a question, that there were 160 passengers on board. The train was so crowded that at Erie they put on another car, and Mr. White swears that on going into the smoking car, between Erie and Ashtabula, he had to look about for a vacant seat, and that there were only three unoccupied seats in the car. Now, it is easy to make some estimate of the number from the various witnesses. Mr. Jones says that there were at least 45 persons in the first coach in which he rode. Mr. White says the second coach was nearly as full as the smoking car, say 45 more, and that the smoking car only lacked three of its full complement, or 49. The full complement of a passenger coach averages 50; of a smoking car only 52. The drawing-room car is supposed to have had eight passengers. Capt. Tyler in his testimony swore that he knew there were 19 passengers in the Palatine sleeping car. Mr. White puts the number in the City of Buffalo at 22. The third sleeping car is admitted to have had about 20 passengers, and the fourth about 12. There were also 12 employes of the company and a newsboy on the train. This gives the total number of persons on the train at 225. The official list of killed, and of those who have died from their injuries, gives the number as 55. The list of injured and saved shows 71. Add to these the number 54 supposed by the company to have been totally destroyed in the last two cars, and according to the company's own showing, there were 180 people on the train. My own impression is that there were, in all probability, about 200 persons in all.

The question about the responsibility for not putting out the fire is becoming very serious. I have talked the matter over with all the persons involved, and I have come to the conclusion that though the company's officers did not forbid throwing water on the fire, they effectually discouraged the department from doing so by repeatedly telling them that it would be of no avail. Still, the firemen are very reprehensible for being thus dissuaded from fulfilling an obvious duty. Even if they had not saved a life, they could have prevented the burning of the bodies beyond recognition, which has so aggravated the distress of the relatives of those who perished. This matter has given an excited interest to the inquest which it would not otherwise have evoked, and has drawn very marked attention to the proceedings of the Coroner's jury. The jury will take this phase of the inquest in hand to-morrow or the next day. All the officers and firemen have been subpœnaed, and they will have to submit to a rigid cross-examination by the Coroner's counsel.

The proceedings at the inquest to-day brought out some strong testimony on some of the issues involved in these questions. I am bound to state here that there is a marked difference in the testimony of the witnesses in the employ of the company and that of the passengers. Strange to say, the employes, who were naturally not laboring under the same excitement as the passengers, seem totally unable to furnish anything like such direct and convincing testimony as to time and incidents as the passengers are. That is, after the occurrence of the accident. Mr. McIntyre, a conductor on the line, who was at the scene of the wreck with Mr. Porter, within two or three minutes, could give no definite evidence about the fire and its varied incidents, or the number of persons who arrived at the wreck during the first half hour. He thought there might have been twenty-five or thirty. Mr. Porter, the keeper of the restaurant in the Culver House, opposite the depot, who was with Mr. McIntyre, only stayed fifteen minutes, and yet he swears that 200 citizens were present when he left. Mr. Porter also testified that the fire was not general when he left, and that it could have been easily extinguished by a stream of water from a fire-engine. He saw neither buckets nor pails. He also swore to hearing the conductor say that he had 160 passengers. Mr. White elaborated the story I telegraphed last night. He said that he was asleep, and was aroused by a jarring motion, chuck, chuck, as though the train were off the track before they began to go down. This gives possibly a new clue to the cause of the accident, especially as on yesterday Engineer Manning testified that he noticed an unusual and alarming sound the moment the first engine struck the bridge. Mr. White also gave statistics of the number of the people in all the cars but two, and expressed his conviction that nearer 300 than 200 persons were on the train.

Daniel McGuire, the driver of the engine Socrates, the one which escaped destruction, testified that he was within about two car-lengths of being over the bridge when he heard a loud snap behind him, like the report of a fog torpedo. He turned his head and saw the bridge sinking. He says that it gave way first about the centre, his engine running off the last 80 feet of the bridge as though going up an incline. He returned at once to the wreck. He swears, however, that he can say nothing about its position, how long he remained there, or anything about the fire or what he did. Mr. Manning, the water-works engineer, was recalled. He swore that he tried the coupling of the hose of the fire company on his plug last night; that the new hose would not fit at all, and that the threads of the screws were so different in the old hose that it was not of much use. This afternoon I measured the threads of the plug-cap and the hose-coupling with a Brown & Sharpe gauge. The threads of both the male and female screws were exactly right to the inch, and precisely similar. Here, then, within 150 yards of the accident, lay 500 feet of hose, the coupling of which exactly fitted a plug within pistol-shot of the fire, the plug being connected with a powerful pumping apparatus, and there being 60 pounds of steam in the pump boiler. The hose could have been pouring a stream on the fire within five minutes but for somebody's fault or stupidity. With regard to the company's responsibility for the burning of the cars, the following section of the laws of the State of Ohio is of importance. It was passed in 1869, and is still in force:

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio. That each railroad company in this State shall, when necessary to heat any of its cars, do so by a heating apparatus so constructed that the fire in it will be immediately extinguished whenever the cars are thrown from the track and overturned; and it shall be unlawful for any railroad company in this State to allow any other railroad company, or person or persons, to run any cars upon its roads unless the heating apparatus in such cars conforms to the requirements herein prescribed.

Among the unidentified bodies of the victims is that of a man weighing about 200 pounds, of light complexion, auburn hair, dressed in a coat of dark cloth; trousers of dark cassimere; undershirt and drawers of small check pattern, all wool; home-knit woolen socks; fine check leggings buttoned closely over the drawers, and reaching above the knee; sewed shoes of calfskin with morocco uppers, and a drab scarf of knitted wool. The buttons of the underclothing are of brass, and stamped "Excelsior." In one of the pockets of the clothing was found a black rubber pocket comb.

THE INJURED PASSENGERS AT CLEVELAND.

CLEVELAND, Jan. 2.—The victims of the disaster who were brought to this city to be cared for are all doing well; the injuries of most of them are not as serious as at first supposed. The following-named persons, who are in the Huron Street Hospital, will leave for their homes to-morrow morning: Mr. Patterson, of New-York; Mr. Hayes, drover, of Kentucky; Mr. Lalor, freight agent, of Chicago, and Mr. Burnham, of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad. The other patients will all probably be able to go to their homes within a week or ten days.

PERSONAL EXPERIENCES.

NARRATIVE OF ONE OF THE PASSENGERS AND OF A SLEEPING-CAR PORTER.

From the Chicago Tribune, Dec. 31.

Mr. J. E. Burchell, partner of B. F. Jacobs, of this city, who was on the unfortunate train, left the wreck at about 9 o'clock yesterday morning, and arrived in Chicago about midnight. His story is full of horror. He says:

"The first thing I heard was a cracking in the front part of the car, and then the same cracking in the rear. Then came another cracking in the front louder than the first, and then came a sickening oscillation and a sudden sinking, and I was thrown stunned from my seat. I heard the cracking, and splintering, and smashing around me. The iron work bent and twisted like snakes, and everything took horrid shapes. I heard a lady scream in anguish.

Oh! help me!' Then I heard the cry of fire. Some one broke a window, and I pushed the lady out who had screamed. I think her name was Miss Bingham. The train lay in the valley in the water, our car a little on its side, both ends broken in. The rest of the train lay in every direction, some on end, some on the side, crushed and broken—a terrible, but picturesque sight. Below were the water and broken ice; 70 feet above was the broken bridge. Miss Bingham sank down in the snow and I went back after my coat. Securing that, I went to her and carried her, with a dozen stumbles and falls, up the bank. The snow in the valley was nearly to my waist, and I could only move with difficulty. The wreck was then on fire. The wind was blowing from the east, and whirling curling masses of snow over the terrible ruin. The crackling of the flames, the whistling wind, the screaming of the hurt, made a pandemonium of that little valley, and the water of the freezing creek was red with blood or black with the flying cinders. I did not then know that any lives had been lost. I had escaped alive, though all were bruised or injured. The fire stole swiftly along the wreck, and in a few moments the cars were all in flames. The ruins covered the whole space between the two piers, the cars jammed in or locked together. One engine lay in the creek, smashed to pieces, the ruins breathing steam and fire. I carried Miss Bingham up the bank, and found her by, and which appeared to be an engine-house. I was completely exhausted, and remained there 45 minutes, when the injured began to arrive. I think there were 52 brought in alive, but one or two died after their removal to the town, where they were subsequently taken. The town was about a quarter of a mile distant. I did did not go back to the wreck, but from the engine-house door I could see into the ravine, and the fearful scene it presented. The sight was sickening. The whole wreck was then on fire, and from out the frozen valley came great bursts of flame. There were cowers of men there, but the fire beat them back, and they could do nothing. The wounded were lying around in the snow, or were laid on stretchers, or taken on the backs of men and carried up the bluff. The speedier was frightful, but those who had gone to assist worked steadily and well in spite of the intense heat. They carried away all who could be rescued, and then waited mournfully for the flames to subside, so that bodies might be taken out. As fast as the injured were secured they were taken to the hotel. That was some time before anything could be done, for in 30 minutes after the fall it was impossible to get near it for the fire. I think it likely that a great many were buried under the cars, and lost in that way. The hotel was about a quarter of a mile from the creek, and as the long line of stretchers and stout men bore the sufferers along, the stormy air was filled with moanings of anguish. In the case of the wounded were kindly cared for. Physicians and surgeons were early on hand, and every effort was made to relieve the sufferers. One lady, whose foot had been crushed, was carried shrieking in labor pains to the little hotel, and during the night she gave birth to a child. From the top of the bluff to the water's edge it is, I should think, from 70 to 80 feet, and along that bluff there ranged lines of excited men looking down on the burning, helpless agony below. The mangled, bleeding bodies writhed in the terrible tortures around them. Some died with prayer and some with shrieking curses on their lips. Some were brought in the iron and woodwork, and held white the flames crept upon them and burned them in the very sight of cool, rippling water. As they died they fixed their bloodshot eyes longingly upon the snow that beat pitilessly down, and lay white and beautiful on their smoke-blackened faces. The fire crept steadily on through the snow flakes, leaping from one mass of ruins to another, licking up the blood as it passed along, and crushing out human lives as remorselessly as it curled around the sunburn woodwork. When the train fell Mr. Bliss succeeded in crawling through a window, supposing he could pull his wife and children after him. But they were jammed fast, and every effort of his was unavailing. The car was all jammed up, and the lady and her children were caught in the ironwork of the seats. Finding that he could not save them he stayed there with them and died. Most all the passengers who escaped did so by way of the windows. There was no egress at the doors, for the stoves were there. One lady was pulled from a window and almost every stitch of clothing stripped from her, and when they were taking her out the rescuing party could hear the screams of women and children for aid, but could render them no assistance. Those who came from the wreck said they could see into the cars and could see the charred trunks of those who had been literary burned to death. They described them as wholly unrecognizable beyond identification, and presenting the most ghastly scene they had ever looked on. Some of the unfortunates were burned literally to ashes, and in some cases only calcined bones were left to tell that human beings had ever been there. Of the 52 taken from the wreck, all were more or less injured, and about 40 of them dangerously, if not fatally. I don't remember any names. I was badly shaken up and bruised, and I think there was only one man as little hurt as I was. There was a fire-engine there, but there was no hose. I think the fire lasted about an hour, and by that time all the cars were burned. I don't think any one was taken out alive after the fire. I am fearful that all who were not saved before the flames got headway perished in the general conflagration. At the hotel I heard some of the employes of the road say they had always been afraid of that bridge. One man said he went over it two hours before the accident, and thought then it was too light; I should say there were at the least reckoning 150 persons killed outright or burned to death, and this in spite of the fact that some of the officers claim that there were only 165 on the train; I don't know the name of a human being among the killed, except Mr. Bliss and his family, and I don't know the names of any of the injured; all along the road coming from the scene are anxious men fearful that friends or relatives were on the train and killed or injured; perhaps some of them may yet hear of deplorable losses, for the railroad officials admit that there were over 100 killed."

THE STORY OF A SLEEPER PORTER.

Mr. Jerry Stewart, who came in last night, was porter on the New-York sleeper "Palatine." He says:

"I was standing by the state-room at the front of the car when the accident occurred. The first thing I heard was the bell-cord snap, and then the forward trucks struck on the bridge and were knocked off the car, and the car came down on the bridge. My car was the first sleeper and the eighth car from the engine. As she struck the bridge it broke, and she went down through. The cars forward went down first, and the three sleepers followed together. My car struck on top of the parlor car, and the other sleepers followed right after. The parlor car fell on her side, and my car, crashing through it, killed every one in it. There is no trace of any one ever coming out of that parlor car. The sleepers behind me fell separately on their sides. In the rear car were a man and his wife and two children and two more passengers, the sleeping car conductor, Harry Wegner, of Syracuse, and the porter, Charley Kane, Cleveland. In my car there were 25 passengers. I don't know any of the names. After we struck, I sang out to my passengers, 'Get out of the upper windows.' They broke the windows, and all succeeded in getting out, so far as I knew. I got out of a window, and helped out an old gentleman and a lady with a broken leg. I then went up the bank. As I went up the bank I looked back at the train and it was then on fire. I turned back after helping the woman with the broken leg up. When I got back I helped out the old gentleman. The fire had caught in the rear part of my car, and the whole train was burning briskly. I did not see anybody crawling out, nor did I see any one lying around. All that were saved had been saved then. As fast as the passengers were taken out they were taken up the bank. From the time I helped the women out until I got back must have been about five minutes, and in that time the flames had run the length of the train, and the whole wreck was on fire. All who were not saved in fifteen minutes were never saved at all. The wind blew fiercely, and there was no hope of putting the fire out. It burned for an hour and a half or two hours—nearer two hours, I should think. No one could get near it because of the heat, and the crowd stood around on the bluff waiting for the fire to burn out. I think all the passengers in the coaches perished, for the sleepers fell on them and crushed them. The last sleeper was the Louisville car, the 'Osseo.' There were four or five people in it. I saw only one who got out. It was a lady, but I don't know her name. The next was the Boston car, 'the City of Buffalo.' She carried a large load. I can't say how many got out. I don't know how many passengers there were, nor how many were lost, but I think a large number. One engine remained on the bank. The other engine fell and turned completely around. Then came the baggage cars and the coaches, and the smoker, and the parlor and sleepers, all mixed in one undescribable mass, except the three last sleepers, which fell together. I saw no one crawling around, nor did I hear any screams. The porter of the 'Osseo' was named James Doyle, of New-York, and the porter of the 'City of Buffalo' was named Webb. Both were killed. I saw nearly all my passengers afterward up at the station, and one or two were fatally injured. The rest were badly, but I don't think dangerously, hurt."

CONDUCTOR HARRY WAGNER.

The Syracuse Standard of Monday says:

"The fearful holocaust at Asatanula, Ohio, has taken from among us one of our most esteemed young men—Harry Wagner. Harry was well known hereabouts, and his genial face will be missed by the traveling public who have made the New-York Central their thoroughfare, more than any man that could be mentioned. Mr. Wagner was a sleeping-car conductor. Until the recent change in the time table of the New-York Central Harry ran between Niagara Falls and New-York City, but with the change he ran clear through to Chicago. On the fatal night the last seen of the unfortunate man was by the conductor of the train. He was seated in his car near the stove just as the crash came. It is possible that he was among the first killed. Harry was a universal favorite wherever he was known. About eight years ago, while he was running as baggage man on the Middle Division of the Central Railroad, he met with a severe accident which disabled him from actual service for many months. He was in his baggage car attending to his duties when the train collided with another train near Auburn. After his recovery he accepted the position of mailing clerk in the Post Office in this city, which position he held until about three years ago. He resigned to take a position as sleeping car conductor on the Wagner line. He was a most affable, genial and polite gentleman, always ready and willing to put himself out for the usual amount of freight, at fair prices, the present rates of toll will doubtless be sufficient for all purposes, and with continued economy in expenses, they may probably be still further reduced. Since the close of navigation the railway companies have largely profited upon an increase of freights; but the past history of such agreements leaves it uncertain whether this one will be of long duration. It is perhaps unnecessary to add that any expenditures, under present circumstances, for enlargements or extraordinary repairs, should not receive encouragement from any source. The boat owners have suffered most severely by the loss of business upon the canals are the boatmen, and although it may not be in the power of the Legislature to relieve them, it is impossible to withhold from them our sympathy. The number of their boats is about 6,000. They are in one sense partners of the State. They do the work which produces the revenue to keep the canals in repair. Their labor is severe, and their exposure great. In many instances their families live upon the boats in order to reduce their expenses to the lowest point. No part of the plunder which others have received has ever gone to them; on the contrary, they have suffered from it by paying tolls which have been unjustly levied. But with all their labor and economy they have been unable during the past season to pay expenses. If any relief can be extended to them in the present depressed condition of trade, it must come from further saving in the cost of maintaining the canals, and a consequent further reduction in tolls. Even this will not probably be sufficient to carry them safely through another season of such competition as they have encountered during the last year.

THE LATERAL CANALS.

Whether any further appropriations should be made on account of such lateral canals as the Legislature has the right to dispose of can best be determined after receiving the report of the Commissioners appointed by an act of the last session to examine that subject. It will be seen by the results of the year's business, given above, that those canals are rapidly diminishing of themselves, and have already become of little value, even to the people living near them. I learn from the Commissioners that they have made the inspection and examination required by the act appointing them, and will soon be prepared to report. The act fixed their compensation and directed its payment, together with their expenses, but made no appropriation, and they have not been paid. The necessary appropriation should be made.

STATE PRISONS.

The State Prisons have kept on their way from bad to worse. The number of convicts in the three prisons Sept. 30, 1876, was as follows:

Auburn	1,281
Chuton	623
Sing Sing	1,605
Total	3,509

The excess of advances from the Treasury over receipts from earnings was $704.379 85. This deficiency is larger by more than $100.000 than was ever before known. It is due to the present Inspectors to state that they claim the increased deficiency to be largely owing to incumbrances which fell upon them from their predecessors. A commission was appointed by an act of the Legislature of 1876 to make a thorough investigation of the affairs of the prisons. The Commissioners have been actively engaged in the service during the whole Summer and Autumn. Their report will very soon be submitted to the Legislature, and will, I presume, cover the whole ground of prison management, discipline, and maintenance. I commend it to the attention of the Legislature without further comment at this time.

STATE REFORMATORY AT ELMIRA.

It is gratifying to be able to announce to the Legislature that a large portion of the Reformatory building has been finished and brought into use. With a reasonable appropriation, the entire structure will be completed within the present year. The Board of Managers, appointed by chapter 207, Laws of 1876, organized in accordance with the act, and succeeded in securing the services of a very competent and efficient Superintendent. Having completed and furnished the south wing, they received 170 convicts from the Auburn and Sing Sing Prisons, who were immediately put at work upon the north wing, the prison wall, and workshops, which have been advanced rapidly toward completion. The Superintendent estimates that, with an appropriation of $185,000, and with the privilege of using the prisoners without the interference of contractors, he can fully complete and furnish and bring into use all the buildings, including the prison wall, within the year, and support 300 persons during the progress of the work, and that then, with possibly a small appropriation for maintenance in 1878, the Reformatory will cease to be a burden upon the State Treasury. He is confident that it can be made entirely self-sustaining. In 1874, the Governor, in his annual Message, estimated the whole cost of the building at $2,000,000. Assuming the above estimate of the Superintendent to be correct, they will be completed for a little more than one-half of that sum. But for the ambitious style of architecture adopted at the outset, the cost would have been much less than $1,000,000. The design of the Reformatory was the reformation, as well as punishment, of young convicts who had become hardened in crime. With this object in view it was originally enacted that no convicts should be sentenced to it except such as were over 16 and under 30 years of age, and convicted of a first offense. It is a source of much regret to the friends of the institution that it should have been even temporarily diverted from its original purpose by the overcrowded condition of the other prisons, and the necessity of relieving them as far and as speedily as possible, led to the use for the time being, of the Reformatory for that purpose. The managers will require some further legislation to aid them in the discharge of their duties and to promote the objects of the institution. Their views and recommendations will in due time be laid before you.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS.

The people of the State, at the last election, adopted by an immense majority the Constitutional amendments which had been approved by two previous Legislatures, and which have thus become a part of the Constitution of the State. They provide for the appointment, by the Governor and Senate, of a Superintendent of State Prisons, with all the powers of the Board of Inspectors, and a Superintendent of Public Works, with all the powers of the Canal Commissioners. A radical change is thus made in the management both of the prisons and of the canals. In each case all power and responsibility are placed in the hands of one controlling executive officer. Wearied with the frauds, the wasteful and extravagant expenditures which often attend the management of irresponsible boards, the people have determined to make this great change, with the hope of better results. They undoubtedly desire that the amendments be carried into effect as speedily as possible. I recommend, therefore, that an act be passed with as little delay as may be proper, fixing the salaries of the respective Superintendents, and also the amount of security to be given by each. A brief act containing these simple provisions will be all that will be necessary before appointing the Superintendents, and enabling them to enter upon their important duties. If further legislation should then be found desirable, either in regard to the canals or the prisons, it could be perfected at the convenience of the Legislature, and with ample time for deliberation.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

One phase of the extravagance and folly, amounting almost to lunacy, caused by an inflated currency and inflated modes of life, developed itself in a passion for costly buildings. Of these the new Capitol takes the lead. Its cost was originally estimated at $4,500,000. There have been appropriated upon it over $7.500,000, and it will undoubtedly require as much more to complete it; and when completed it will be a vast pile of ornamental stone work, not at all in keeping with the tastes and good sense of plain, substantial people. In addition to this, it is discouraging to contemplate the completion in view of the enormous annual cost of heating, lighting, cleaning, and superintending it. Following in the wake of the Capitol are several Insane Asylums, the State Reformatory, houses for Normal Schools, High Schools, and other buildings upon which millions of the people's money have been wasted in useless ornamentation and luxurious arrangements. In behalf of these which are not yet completed—embracing nearly all of the most costly structures—the usual representation is made that unless we go forward and spend the further amounts required for their completion, we will lose all that we have expended. Whatever force there may be in this argument, I confess that in the present condition of financial affairs, the actual distress caused in many homes by the payment of their heavy taxes, I should prefer to have the expenditures cease, the tax-payers relieved, and the buildings left as they are, at least until the advent of better times. Liberally responding to demands of humanity in behalf of the unfortunate poor, I cannot see the propriety or the justice of reducing a large body of tax-payers to pauperism for the purpose of building gorgeous palaces in which other paupers are to be supported at the public expense.

STATE BOARD OF HEALTH.

Several medical gentlemen of great eminence in their profession have asked my attention to the subject of a State Board of Health. They believe that such an institution would render essential service in the prevention of sickness and the preservation of life and health. They claim that, in almost every case where local epidemics have prevailed with a severity and fatality which seemed mysterious, their origin can be traced to some neglect of sanitary precautions, or to some cause which a properly organized Board of Health would have discovered and removed. Important as this subject is, it has been impossible for me to find time for such an examination of it as would justify any specific recommendations. I can only ask very careful consideration for it, and the more it is considered the more it will be urged because I am assured that it is not intended that any expense shall be incurred by the State beyond a moderate salary for the Secretary of the proposed board.

COMMISSIONERS OF EMIGRATION.

The condition of the affairs of the Commission of Emigration is embarrassing, and demands prompt consideration. The commission is charged with the duty of watching over all emigrants landed in the City of New-York on their arrival, and, in the cases of any who fall into distress, for some years after, ward. Hospitals, under authority of the laws of this State, bonds have been required with conditions to indemnify the cities, counties, and towns of the State against these passengers becoming a public charge upon them. The practice has been to accept, in lieu of the bond, a certain sum in cash from each passenger, which money constituted the fund to issue or find the bonds. The amount out of which it came or found the several counties for any expenditures made in support of distressed emigrants within the period named. This revenue is now entirely cut off by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, declaring all such laws void. To raise this reimbursing fund was instituted on the first of March, 1876, since which time no commutations have been paid nor bonds given. Out of the moneys heretofore collected by the Commissioners of Emigration, as agents of the State, the public faith is pledged to provide for all emigrants—in behalf of whom contributions to the fund were made—who may need assistance within five years from the date of their arrival. There are 150 acres of land on Ward's Island upon which were erected hospitals, a refuge, an asylum for insane persons, and other buildings for the use of the commission. The lands were bought and the buildings erected out of the commutation moneys. The title to the property is in the State. The commission estimate its value as $2.000.000. It is subject to a mortgage of $200,000. The Legislature last year, on the recommendation of the Governor, appropriated $300,000 toward the current expenses from May 1, 1876, to May 1, 1877. Of this there had been expended, up to the 3d of November last, $109,000. I learn by a communication from the President of the commission dated Dec. 13, 1876, that the number of passengers from foreign ports landed at New-York from Jan. 1, 1876, to the above-mentioned date, was 109,-592. That of these the number which came under the immediate care of the board was 72,-326. The number admitted during the same period to the refuge and hospital was 1,953, of which number 1,769 remained in the institutions—331 being sick in the hospital, 141 insane in the lunatic asylum, 162 crippled or otherwise disabled in the refuge, and 53 children in the nursery. It seems necessary that some provision be made by which the public faith may be kept with the emigrants—at least until the relief which has been sought through a bill pending in Congress is obtained. The importance of the question as to how we are to deal with emigrants is shown by the fact that out of a little more than 8,000 000 reported as arriving since May, 1847, nearly 6,000 000 were landed at New-York. Further details will be found in the annual report of the commission.

SAVINGS BANKS.

Recent disasters among our savings banks admonish us of the necessity of rigid restraints against mismanagement. These institutions are created for a special purpose, to wit, to take charge of small savings; the savings of those who handle little money, are inexperienced in investments, and to whom the loss of any part of their limited capital is a serious calamity. Everything practicable should be done toward absolute security, and the money deposited by this class of persons should never be mixed up with that of others who handle large sums and are capable of taking care of it for themselves, nor should it be subjected to the risks which persons of greater means and large experience are accustomed to take. I recommend a re-examination of the general law passed in 1875, regulating these institutions. Section 34 of that act provides that for the purpose of ascertaining the surplus held by a savings bank, its interest-paying stocks and bonds shall be estimated at their market value. U suggest instead that such investments shall not be estimated above cost, nor above par, nor above market value. Any advance in cost is increased profit until the stocks are sold, and it may never be realized. If a premium above par has been paid, or is indicated by the current market value, this is sure to disappear if the stocks or bonds are held till maturity; it should not be counted as an asset, except when the bonds have been sold before maturity, and the premium is actually in hand. I suggest, also, that the privilege, granted by section 27, of leaving 10 per cent. of the aggregate deposits, and also the current cash daily balances, of savings banks, with an ordinary bank or trust company should be taken away. This is mingling the money of the poor with that of the more speculative and more watchful classes, and subjecting it to the same risks. It is inconsistent with the provision of section 30, which forbids a savings bank lending any part of its funds upon notes, bills of exchange, drafts, or any other personal security. Experience has proven that the very class of securities on which the ordinary business bank will risk the money of the savings bank, in common with that of its other customers. It is, no doubt, desirable that a certain portion of the means of a savings bank should be in such shape that it can be promptly realized; sufficient provision to this end is otherwise made by the same section 27, which now authorizes temporary loans directly by the savings bank itself, upon certain classes of stocks and bonds. I see no reason why a savings bank should not keep its cash means as other banks do, in its own custody, in its own vaults. An aggregate amount of deposits is now allowed to be made by one person up to $5,000. I suggest that it be reduced to $1,000, or at most $2,000; and this inclusive of accumulated interest. Persons of considerable means now put money into a savings bank in order to get better interest than elsewhere. The institutions are not meant for this class. The possession of considerable means implies the capacity to take care of money. Nor do I approve of the provision of section 22, allowing deposits to be received from corporations and societies. Every association must necessarily have a business head, capable of taking proper care of its funds. An association of any kind does not need the aid of a savings bank. Section 23 implies that savings banks may properly receive deposits of money paid into court or under the order of a Surrogate. A separate class of institutions—trust companies—have been provided for this special purpose, and such deposits are, for the most part, in large sums. All the creditors of a savings bank ought be of the same class, to wit, creditors for small sums. I am inclined to the opinion that the interest among savings banks are due, to some extent at least, to their having sought, of late years, after a class of business which formerly they never undertook, and for which they are not intended. Section 33 provides that dividends may be made of not exceeding 6 per cent. per annum. This limit, I think, should be reduced to 5 per cent. Rich interest and large profits do not always go together. Government bonds pay now only 4½ per cent. per annum, and savings banks ought not to be tempted, by efforts to pay high interest, into dealing in any but the very safest securities. Section 33 requires every savings bank, when it has acquired a surplus of 10 per cent., to divide all accumulations beyond that. A surplus of 10 per cent. is not sufficient guarantee against losses. In view of the great and sudden depreciation to which property of all kinds is sometimes liable, as we know by present experience, I am not sure that any limit should be put upon the accumulation of a surplus fund. Such a fund had better be too large than too small. It seems to me that the limit of 10 per cent. is, at all events, much too low. These suggestions are respectfully submitted to your consideration. The purpos I have in view is, that this class of institutions, so valuable to the welfare of the great mass of the community, shall be rigidly confined to the duty for which they were created. They are semi-charitable in their nature, and their profits should not be given to nor their benefits shared by those who need no help.

COMMON SCHOOL STATISTICS FOR THE YEAR ENDING SEPT. 30, 1876.

Total receipts, including balance on hand Sept. 30, 1876	$12.643.969 59
Total expenditures	11.410,288 71
Amount paid for teachers' wages	7,949,085 17
Amount paid for school-houses, repairs, furniture, &c.	1.779,124 19
Estimated value of school-houses and sites	31,817,904 00
Number of school-houses	11,671
Number of school districts, exclusive of cities	11,027
Number of teachers employed for the legal term of school	19,341
Number of teachers employed during any portion of the year	30,309
Number of children attending public schools	1,067,199
Number of persons attending normal schools	6,391
Number of child en of school age in private schools	134,404
Number of volumes in school district libraries	804,802
Number of persons in the State between the ages of five and 21 years	1,585,601

The foregoing statements should attract attention. Previous to the year 1856, the State appropriated $800.000 per year for the support of the common schools. The act of 1856 changed the practice by levying a three-quarter mill tax, which produced a little over $1,000,000 per year. In 1867, when the rate was raised to one and one-quarter mills, which produced over $2,000,000 and in consequence of the recent extraordinary increase of valuations, it now produces over $3,000,000. and for the next fiscal year it will be probably $3,500,000. Adding to this the amount raised by local taxation, for the same object, we have a grand total of over $12,000,000.

The amount paid for teachers' wages during the past year was $7,949,085 17. The whole number of children attending public schools was 1.067,199. The number attending normal schools, 6,391. The number of children of school age in private schools, 134,404. To all these we add the numbers of those who are instructed at home by private tutors, in academies, colleges, and other institutions, not reported, some idea may be formed of the immense amount of money drawn from the people of the State, voluntari y or by taxation, for school purposes. Without intending to intimate the least suspicion that any part of this large amount is unwisely or improperly expended, the subject is of such magnitude as to be worthy of careful examination and scrutiny.

The question whether the State can educate all the children within its limits better than they can be educated in schools organized, conducted, and paid for by the parents of the children themselves, has been decided in favor of the State, which is now conducting the experiment on a very large and expensive scale. It is of the utmost importance that the experiment should be successful, and that it should be so conducted as to merit the confidence and support of the entire community. To this end, if there are any errors in the mode of conducting it, they should be corrected before they lead to evils which it may be difficult, if not impossible, to remedy.

The only ground upon which citizens who have no children can justly be compelled to pay taxes for the education of the children of others is that it is necessary for the safety of the whole people under our form of government. Our institutions, by their very theory, carry with them the assumption of a certain grade of intelligence among the citizens. It seems, therefore, to be the duty of a State to see to it that each and every citizen, so far as practicable, shall be educated to such a degree as will enable him to read and understand the laws, the Constitution, and the ballot that he votes on election day. The schools in which education is given to this extent always carry their line of instruction far enough to embrace all the branches usually taught in our common schools. It seems to me to be a clear violation of personal rights for the State to go beyond this and levy taxes to support free academies, high schools, and colleges, in which the higher branches of literature and science are taught, and young men prepared for the learned professions. This should be left to individual effort, from which better results always come than from any amount of donations from the State.

It should also be remembered that the expenditure of such large amounts of public money has almost invariably led to great abuses, and there is no security against the same tendency in other local appropriations. The expenditures for school-houses, repairs, and furniture during the last ten years have amounted to $19,963,109 97. It is perhaps well to inquire whether this large amount has been wisely expended in the construction of plain, substantial, and comfortable school-houses, or whether it has been, to any extent, handled by fraudulent contractors, or devoted to the construction of costly and ornamental buildings for the benefit, possibly, of the owners of adjoining property.

I would also suggest an inquiry as to whether the normal schools are really worth to the system what they cost. I am informed that a very large portion of the pupils instructed in them never follow the profession of teaching for any length of time. There ought, also, to be found some remedy for the large annual expense arising from the number of new school-books, and the frequent changes made, for no good purpose, but simply to benefit the publishers and agents. It is undoubtedly true that inducements are frequently offered to school authorities and teachers to aid in the work of changing books and selling new ones. It would be strange if these temptations were always resisted. It seems to me clear that the Legislature should fix some limit to this evil. Finally, I would recommend a return to the former system of making an appropriation of a specific sum in each year from the State Treasury for the benefit of the common schools, and put into the tax-levy a sum sufficient to cover the amount—$2,500 000—which the utmost ought to be, and will be, amply sufficient, if proper care is taken in the use of it. These suggestions are made in a spirit of sincere friendship to our common school system, to the end that it many not be exposed to any just objection; that its administration may be characterized by a wise economy, and by a degree of purity which shall place it above suspicion and keep it in the future as it now is, strongly intrenched in the confidence of the people.

COLLEGES AND ACADEMIES.

The annual report of the Regents of the University, soon to be communicated to the Legislature, will fully exhibit the condition of the colleges and academies of the State. Notwithstanding the stringency of the times the aggregate attendance in the colleges is somewhat greater, and but little less in the academies, than during former years. Some institutions of either class are adequately endowed, and others are making vigorous efforts to secure such an amount of productive funds as will place them on a secure financial basis.

THE STATE LIBRARY AND MUSEUM OF NATURAL HISTORY.

The Regents of the University, as Trustees of the State Library and State Museum of Natural History, will report their condition in detail at an early day. Valuable additions to both have been made during the past year, the library having increased to more than 100,000 volumes. In the departments of law and American history it is unsurpassed by any other State library of the Union.

THE NATIONAL GUARD.

From the report of the Adjutant General, as well as from my own limited observation, I learn that the condition of the National Guard is entirely satisfactory. The appropriations made for its support and improvement have been carefully and judiciously expended. The organization, spirit, and discipline of the officers and men were never better. The improvements in rifle practice, to which special attention has been given during the past year, have been of a very gratifying character, and will be continued. As a comparatively small annual cost the National Guard is kept in such a condition of organization and discipline as to constitute a nucleus around which a large force could, if necessary, be gathered and made effective in a very short time. At the present time it consists of three divisions, six subdivisions, eighteen brigades, one regiment, and eleven separate troops of cavalry; one battalion and eleven separate batteries of artillery; twenty-five regiments, twelve battalions, and eighteen separate companies of infantry—in all comprising 1,546 commissioned officers, and 19,876 non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates, making an aggregate force of 21.424, showing an increase of 2,011 over the aggregate of last year.

REDUCTION OF TAXES.

In 1873 the State tax was	$14.800,903 38
In 1874 the State tax was	15,727.432 08
In 1875 the state tax was	14,206,880 61
In 1876 the State tax was	8,529,174 32

The large reduction of taxes for State purposes, shown by the above statement, is due in some measure to the reduced amount required for the bounty debt, but mainly to the stopping of expenditures for new works and extraordinary repairs upon the canals, and to other reforms and economies which have been inaugurated and enforced during the last two years. By a rigid adherence to this policy the taxes may be still further reduced during the present year. Unless the people permit a renewal of the wasteful expenditures of former years, they will hereafter have no cause of complaint against excessive State taxes. The load which oppresses them most heavily will be found at their own doors in their own town, county, and city taxes. When they have the courage to look these in the face, and insist upon their reduction within reasonable limits, they will obtain the full measure of relief to which they are entitled. The rate of taxation for the current fiscal year was fixed by the Legislature at its last session at three and eleven-twenty-fourths mills. For the next fiscal year it is estimated that two and three-quarters mills will be sufficient. But this estimate is based upon the assumption that the Legislature will decline to make appropriations which are not required for the legitimate expenses of government.

INCREASED VALUATIONS.

The State Assessors inform me that there will be a very large increase in the valuations, especially in the agricultural districts, carrying the total valuation of the whole State up to the probable amount of about $2,800,000,000. This extraordinary increase is of doubtful propriety. It seems to be an effort to follow upward the unnatural prices caused by the currency inflation, at a time when the inflation has produced its inevitable disasters, and when prices are rapidly falling nearer to actual values. The effect of the increased valuations is to render it necessary, that amount any specified rate will produce. In-tead, therefore, of levying specific rates for particular objects, which may produce too much or too little, it would be better to appropriate the amounts required and fix a rate sufficient to cover them, so that, if there be a surplus, it shall remain in the Treasury. The effect of these assessments is likely not so much to increase valuations as to produce a just and equitable distribution of the burdens of taxation among the people. When this point is gained it is of little importance whether the valuations are above or below what are called actual values. For many obvious reasons it would be better that they should be below rather than above. The true value of property is rarely known. It is not a matter of fact, but of opinion. Hence it is always estimated, and the tendency usually is to estimate too high.

EXEMPTING CHURCHES, &C.

It is proper to refer in this connection to propositions which are sometimes made to increase the valuation by changing the policy which has always prevailed in this State of exempting churches, schools, and hospitals from taxation. I cannot too strongly express my disapproval of any such change. Our people of all denominations of creeds have surrounded themselves with these institution of civilization, which are foremost in the influences that diminish the expense of government by lessening the infractions of law. They should not be discouraged by the imposition of burdens from which they have hitherto been exempt.

SURPLUS OF THE BANKS.

Taxing the whole surplus of the banks in addition to their capital is neither equal justice nor sound policy. Besides compelling them to pay more than their fair proportion, it induces them to divide their surplus among the stockholders, thereby diminishing the security which it gives to the public so long as it is held by the banks. In times like the present the exigencies of every day may diminish both surplus and security. The subject is submitted to your careful consideration and wise discretion.

LEGISLATION IN APPROPRIATION BILLS.

A very objectionable practice has grown up of inserting general legislation in appropriation bills. The effect of it is to conceal legislative provisions in places where they ought not to be and where the public generally do not think of looking for them. It also puts it beyond the power of the Governor to withhold his approval from such provisions unless he vetoes the whole appropriation bill in which they are contained. I trust that the practice will be discontinued altogether, and that the gues ion may not be presented as to whether such provisions shall become law or whether the appropriation bills containing them shall be returned disapproved.

THE STATE SURVEY.

Several instances of the pernicious mode of legislating above referred to will be found in the "supply bill" passed at the last session. The most conspicuous among them is the provision for instituting and organizing "an accurate trigonometric and topographical survey of the State." Without any application by the people, with no appreciable evil to remedy, the Superintendent of Public Works is required to pass upon the authenticity and validity of Electoral votes, but in no former instance has the election turned upon the questionable votes. In every former case the result has been determined by Electoral votes which were not in controversy. In the present instance one candidate for President and one candidate for Vice President have received 184 undisputed Electoral votes, as well as a popular majority exceeding a quarter of a million. Another candidate for President and another candidate for Vice President have received 165 undisputed Electoral votes. All the votes of three States—four in Florida, eight in Louisiana, and seven in South Carolina—making 19 in all, are still in dispute; also one of the three votes of Oregon. In all these cases two sets of returns have been "transmitted to the seat of government, directed to the President of the Senate," to await the action of the two houses of Congress, who are duly it is to verify, ascertain, and count the Electoral votes. In a situation involving such momentous results as the chief magistracy of this Republic all the baser as well as the better forces of society are naturally embattled to secure the prize. It is in such crises of history that the controlling force of sentimental principles is liable to be weakened, dangerous concessions to be made, perilous precedents established, sacred traditions violated, and the most important bulwarks of constitutional freedom rendered less secure.

In Louisiana we have seen a State Government imposed on the people by the military force of the Federal Executive, under color of a pretended order of a Federal Judge, which order in itself was void, and which led to the usurpation of the Judge who made it to escape impeachment. We have seen the Government thus imposed by military force condemned as illegal and a mere usurpation, by both houses of Congress, and the Electoral votes given under its auspices, rejected in the counting of the Presidential votes in 1873 by the concurrent judgment of the same tribunal. We have seen the Government so imposed create "a Returning Board" practically vested with absolute power to revise and, if they please, to reverse the results of the election by the people of the State, and thus organize a political mechanism under which an oligarchy in temporary possession of the legislative power of a State might perpetuate their ascendancy indefinitely. I pause here in this statement to interpose, in behalf of the people of this great Commonwealth, a solemn denial of the power of any correction of the bad habits into which we have been led, by a return, if need be, to the simplest industries, to a reduction of all unnecessary expenditures, and a rigid economy, both in public and in private life.

RAILROAD REPORTS.

Complaints are frequent among persons interested, both stockholders and bondholders, that the reports now rendered by railroad companies, including those operating street roads, are not in such form as to afford a clear and satisfactory view of their condition. These complaints being creatures of the State, endowed with great privileges, it is right that we should require from time to time from each one of them a full and clear exposition of its situation. Companies whose affairs are in a good condition will have no objection to this being made known, and it is due to the people that if any are unsound, their condition should be exposed as promptly as may be. Concealment of such a state of facts from all but a few principal managers will often enable those who are not to blame for waste and loss to shift the burden thereof upon the shoulders of innocent persons. A memorial has been sent to me, addressed to you and the Legislature of all the New-England States, recommending a certain form of returns, which has been agreed upon, after consultation with some prominent railroad companies, in a conference of the Commissioners of those States and the State Engineer and Deputy State Engineer of this State. The memorial is signed by all these officers. Its object is to secure uniformity in the returns, so that they may be compared by the public or by the proper officers. The memorial has been sent to me addressed to you and the Legislature, because all the New-England States, with the hope, no doubt, that this uniformity will be extended to those of the whole country. It is obvious that where the line of a railroad extends into two States, as is frequently the case, it must be more or less inconvenient to the company to make up its statements in two different forms, and that, moreover, there will be advantages to the public in having these returns uniform. I suggest to you an amendment of the general Railroad law, giving to the State Engineer the power to prescribe the form of the returns—the same power that is vested in the Railroad Commissioners of Massachusetts—and such other power pertaining in that State to Railroad Commissioners as may be necessary to insure and enforce a proper exposition of the actual condition of these companies. You will be able to judge of this matter better after an examination of the memorial, and the papers accompanying it, which I shall cause to be sent to you. The form upon whoh the memorialists agreed will be found in the possession of the State Engineer.

INSECURITY OF PLACES OF PUBLIC RESORT.

The recent calamity at the Brooklyn Theatre, said to be unequaled in horror by any like event heretofore, calls our attention most forcibly to the duty of providing by law, and by the severest penalties, against such disasters in the future. Those who seek to make money by gathering the people in crowds into their buildings, are bound to take every precaution to insure their absolute safety. The Legislature should enact regulations for all such buildings, so as to provide for the prompt suppression of fire and rapid egress for the crowd in case of alarm. In fact, the provision for safety and for exit should be so complete and so manifest that panic would not occur. The danger is not limited to theatres and places of public amusement; rooms used for lectures or for public meetings, our large school-houses and even churches are, for the most part, so constructed that in case of panic a large number of the crowd would be likely to be fatally injured in the fierce, natural struggle to escape. The buildings owned by the public are as faulty as those used for private purposes. We are familiar with one or more fa el disasters among the children who, in cities, are crowded into four-story school houses. Attention should, also, be given to the security of passengers in cases of collision upon steamboats and railway trains. Nothing more than this brief allusion to the topic can be necessary. Even without it, I am confident that you would promptly have given your attention to the subject.

MUNICIPAL REFORM.

The report of the commission appointed by my predecessor to consider the subject of the government of cities, has not yet been received. I hope that I shall be enabled to present it to you early in your present session. In some respects the Government of the City of New-York is in almost a chaotic condition: appropriations of money are regulated, not by the Common Council, but by a board of four persons, of whom only one is chosen by the people. The distribution of administrative and legislative powers is imperfect and uncertain. An outgoing Mayor has power to appoint, in some cases, subordinate administrative officers for a term exceeding that of his incoming successor. Of the enormous debt resting upon the City, as I learn from one of the Commissioners, the amount of $85,000,000 has been created by direct action of the State Legislature, without being asked for or approved by the Common Council of the City or the Board of Supervisors of the County, or by its taxpayers, and more than one fifth of these objectionable laws still in force, under which the full amount of debt authorized by them has not, as yet, been contracted. It would be well to examine into this matter at once, for the purpose of repealing such of these acts as, in your judgment, should not be left in force. In some of the acts the amount of indebtedness has no limit, but is required to be, on the simple requisition of a subordinate administrative department, bonds of the City may be issued, provided that they do not exceed a certain sum per annum. The number of years during which the acts may continue to apply is not defined. The laws reserved to are, in many instances, imperative requirements to do by the people, merely local purposes, but to incur indebtedness for such purposes. The duty of the Legislature in such matters is properly defined in article 8, section 9, of the Constitution, which says: "It shall be the duty of the Legislature to provide for the organization of cities and incorporated villages, and to restrict their power of taxation, contracting debts," &c. Whenever the Legislature undertakes to impose on a neighborhood local taxes or local indebtedness for local purposes, it assumes to have a knowledge of the case which none can have, except those who live in the neighborhood affected. It undertakes to discharge the functions of village Trustees, town officers, City Aldermen, or Supervisors of counties, for which functions the men selected especially for these places are better fitted. Whatever evils may occasionally appear in local government should be remedied by the people at home, upon whom the responsibility should rest.

CORRUPT USE OF MONEY IN ELECTIONS.

The Constitution and laws of this State contain many very stringent and excellent provisions for securing the purity of the ballot-box, and preventing the corrupt use of money in elections. The penalties which they inflict upon those criminals who violate them are very severe. It is, however, apparent that in every important election the laws upon this subject are grossly violated or evaded. I recommend a thorough re-examination and revision of them with a view of rendering convictions more certain, and with additional and severer penalties. So vitally important is the preservation of the purity of elections to the permanent existence of our form of government, that, in my opinion, any man who buys or sells a vote should be forever thereafter disfranchised, and subjected to such other penalties as will be most likely to prevent the commission of the crime.

BETTING UPON ELECTIONS.

Another gigantic evil, closely allied to the corrupt use of money in the practice of betting upon the results of elections. This practice has always existed to some extent; but it, and the evils resulting from it, have recently been developed to an alarming extent. It is unquestionably true that many millions of dollars were staked upon the result of the late election. Every person interested in such bets had a strong motive for corrupting and bribing voters, and there is no doubt that many yielded to the temptation. The heat and excitement of the contest were also greatly intensified by the same cause. I recommend the enactment of a law, with severe penalties, prohibiting all bets, direct or indirect, upon the result of any election.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS.

The recent Presidential election threatens to prove an epoch of solemn portent in our history. For the first time in the 22 elections which have been held for President and Vice President of the United States the result remains a subject of controversy after the canvass of the votes within the States has been made and announced. The two houses of Congress have been heretofore repeatedly required to pass upon the authenticity and validity of Electoral votes, but in no former instance has the election turned upon the questionable votes. In every former case the result has been determined by Electoral votes which were not in controversy. In the present instance one candidate for President and one candidate for Vice President have received 184 undisputed Electoral votes, as well as a popular majority exceeding a quarter of a million. Another candidate for President and another candidate for Vice President have received 165 undisputed Electoral votes. All the votes of three States—four in Florida, eight in Louisiana, and seven in South Carolina—making 19 in all, are still in dispute; also one of the three votes of Oregon. In all these cases two sets of returns have been "transmitted to the seat of government, directed to the President of the Senate," to await the action of the two houses of Congress, who are duly it is to verify, ascertain, and count the Electoral votes. In a situation involving such momentous results as the chief magistracy of this Republic all the baser as well as the better forces of society are naturally embattled to secure the prize. It is in such crises of history that the controlling force of sentimental principles is liable to be weakened, dangerous concessions to be made, perilous precedents established, sacred traditions violated, and the most important bulwarks of constitutional freedom rendered less secure.

In Louisiana we have seen a State Government imposed on the people by the military force of the Federal Executive, under color of a pretended order of a Federal Judge, which order in itself was void, and which led to the usurpation of the Judge who made it to escape impeachment. We have seen the Government thus imposed by military force condemned as illegal and a mere usurpation, by both houses of Congress, and the Electoral votes given under its auspices, rejected in the counting of the Presidential votes in 1873 by the concurrent judgment of the same tribunal. We have seen the Government so imposed create "a Returning Board" practically vested with absolute power to revise and, if they please, to reverse the results of the election by the people of the State, and thus organize a political mechanism under which an oligarchy in temporary possession of the legislative power of a State might perpetuate their ascendancy indefinitely. I pause here in this statement to interpose, in behalf of the people of this great Commonwealth, a solemn denial of the power of any State Government or of the Federal Government to vest such powers as are claimed by the Louisiana Returning Board in any Canvassing Board whatever. In the first place, such powers in respect to the choice of Presidential Electors are not warranted by, but are repugnant to the Constitution of the United States. The provision of section 1 of article 2 of that instrument, "that each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, its Presidential Electors," does not confer on the Legislature of the State an unlimited power over the subject. No one will pretend that a temporary majority in the Legislature of a State could, in such a case, by the mere form of a statute, arrogate to itself, or to a set of individuals, the power to appoint Presidential Electors; that it could make this grant for a period of years, or indefinitely, or to his or their heirs or assigns. What it cannot do in form it cannot do in substance; what it cannot do directly it cannot do indirectly. The choice which a Legislature is authorized to make of a mode of appointing Presidential Electors, is limited to a mere selection between certain known forms of action, recognized in the practice of popular government, and consistent with the nature of popular government. It is a choice of modes, but must not assume the character of the essential character of the thing itself. It is a choice of means, but not of ends. In this sentiment and purpose the State of New-York cordially concurs. Foremost among all our American commonwealths in population, in the variety and extent of her industries and interests, she has in every vicissitude of public affairs put forth all her strength, moral and physical, to maintain the existence and the just authorities of the Union, and she can never consent that the time-consecrated methods of Constitutional Government shall be supplanted or overthrown by revolutionary expedients.

L. ROBINSON.

UNITED STATES SENATE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2.—The Senate held a brief session, at which little of importance was done.

Mr. BOUTWELL, of Massachusetts, presented a petition of citizens of Newburyport, Mass., in favor of the passage of the House bill in regard to the unexpended balance of the Geneva award. Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Iowa, gave notice that on Thursday next, after the expiration of the morning hour, he would ask the indulgence of the Senate to submit some remarks upon the bill recently introduced by him in regard to the settlement of the contested election in the offices of President and Vice-President of the United States.

Mr. CHAFFEE, of Colorado, introduced a bill to extend the Act of July 2, 1862, to the State of Colorado. Referred to Committee on Public Lands. [It refers to the grant made by the act mentioned to each State of land equal to 30,000 acres for each of its Senators and Representatives in Congress, the proceeds of the land granted to Colorado to be used for teaching the theory and practice of mining, instead of mechanic arts and agriculture as in other states.]

Mr. INGALLS, of Kansas, introduced a bill to enable the Central Branch of the Union Pacific Railroad Company to submit its claims against the United States under the existing laws to the decision of the Supreme Court. He gave notice that he would offer the bill as a substitute for the bill which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Wright] gave notice he would call up to-morrow, declaring the true intent and meaning of the Union Pacific Railroad acts, &c.

Mr. EDMUNDS, of Vermont, said he doubted that a quorum was present, and he therefore objected to a second reading to-day of the bill submitted by Mr. Ingalls.

The question being on the second reading of the bill, the yeas and nays were demanded, and resulted in yeas, 26; nays, 3—no quorum voting; so the bill was laid over until to-morrow, and the Senate, at 12:35, adjourned.

portant, money and supplies of all kinds. Without France, freedom would not have been achieved even in six more years, if at all. Little gratitude, however, was due to France, since the Colonies were simply the instruments of her vengeance upon England. Thus, the capitulation of Saratoga was the pass-key to American victory. Schuyler forged and fitted the key, inserted it in the lock, and Gates was allowed to turn it; Schuyler to the last, forgetful of self and only mindful of his country, assisted Gates to open the door. A year afterward, Congress and a court-martial exonerated Schuyler from all blame, and within three years Ate's sleepless sleuth-hounds tore Gates down from his place of pride, and avenged Schuyler. Unfortunately, Ate could only punish; it was not her prerogative to reward. The speaker's duty to his native State and to his Knickerbocker blood was discharged; but New-York, untrue to herself in the present as in the past—as untrue to-day as in 1777—had set up no monument, either to Herkheimer, mortally wounded in body at Oriskany; or to Schuyler, crucified in spirit at Saratoga. Why? Was it necessary for the speaker to proclaim it? Because Schuyler was not an intriguer nor a politician, a speculator nor a peculator, but a Christian gentleman and a true soldier. Schuyler in arms never served again. He performed his duty to the letter to the United States and to New-York. He inaugurated the system which made this the 'Empire State,' and despite the fiercest life-long tortures of disease he did all that he could do to serve his fellow-citizens to the very last. He died, full of unfeigning affliction, years, and honors conceded too late, on the 18th of November, 1804, realizing that 'Perfection is the greatest fault the envious man can discover—the first he cannot reach, the last he cannot injure.'

'Grave precepts fleeting notions may impart,
But strict example best affects the heart;
Then look on Fabius, let his conduct show,
From active life what various blessings flow.
In him a just ambition stands confessed;
It warms, but not inflames his equal breast.
See him in Senates nor the laws disown part,
Truth on his lips, the public at his heart,
There neither fears can awe, nor hopes control
The honest purpose of his steady soul.
No mean attachments e'er seduced his tongue
To gild the cause his heart suspected wrong;
But, deaf to envy, faction, spleen, his voice
Joins here or there, as reason guides his choice.
To one great point his faithful labors tend,
And all his toil in "Freedom's" interest end.'

At the conclusion of the address, the speaker received a vote of thanks.

THE PILOT COMMISSIONERS.

ANNUAL REPORT TO THE LEGISLATURE—AN INQUIRY INTO THE CASES OF THE WRECKED VESSELS CIRCASSIAN AND RJUKAN.

A regular monthly meeting of the Board of Pilot Commissioners was held yesterday afternoon, all the Commissioners being present, and Commissioner Snow in the chair. The Light-house Board was requested to anchor a green spar-buoy over the wreck of an unknown sloop that now obstructs the South Channel. This sloop is supposed to have gone down early yesterday morning. Her wreck was struck by a ship that came in during the fog of the early morning, but no damage of account was done to the latter. It was decided by the Commissioners to inquire into the conduct of the pilots who were on board the ships Circassian and Rjukan when they went ashore—the former at Bridgehampton, Long Island, and the latter at Squan Beach, N. J. Pilot Eugene Sullivan was on the Circassian, but, it is understood, was not in charge of her. It is said that the spirit compass of the ship was rendered useless by the cold, the weather was thick, and neither Capt. Williams nor Pilot Sullivan had the least idea of the true position of the vessel when she struck. Pilot Phillips, who was on board the Norwegian ship Rjukan when she went ashore and was lost on Squan Beach, has informed the Commissioners that the disaster occurred through the carelessness of a mate of the vessel. That officer, he says, used the lead because the weather was thick, and reported 17 fathoms of water. This report satisfied Phillips that everything was safe, a few moments later, however, the mate cried out, "Oh, I made a mistake! There are only 11 fathoms." Alarmed by this Phillips tried to wear the ship around. Failing to do so he had her anchors dropped; but this did not save her, and she was quickly stranded on the beach. It is understood that the officers of the Rjukan will tell a very different story. Pilot Phillips has been sick from exposure ever since the wreck.

The Pilot Commissioners have completed their annual report and transmitted it to the Legislature. The document deals particularly with the matter of disposing of the garbage from the streets of this City. Its most important parts are as follows:

"The disposal of sweeping and garbage from the streets has become a question of magnitude and gravity, no place being found for the material on shore, or for filling in, as the sanitary authorities refuse permission, fearing injury to the health of the citizens. Large quantities have, during the past year, been deposited in the Atlantic Harbor limits, (under the pressure of necessity, as claimed,) by the Street-cleaning Department, to the injury of the channel and of the much-frequented shore of Long Island, the popular watering place of the City of Brooklyn. This board has urged upon the City authorities the necessity of making permanent provision for the use of this material at sea by the construction of steam hopper-scows of large capacity, which could go to sea at all times of tide and weather, and thus dispose of this troublesome material without injuriously affecting the channel-ways and shores, and it is believed that the plan meets the approval of the City authorities. It involves an initial expenditure by the Street-cleaning Department of from $200,000 to $250,000, but would thereafter be far more economical and effective than the present system of small scows and tug-boats. The board suggests that chapter 414 of the Laws of 1875 be amended, so to include within its provisions all refuse material from the streets of the cities, and that its prohibition be extended to a point three miles outside of the bar, instead of Sandy Hook. As now worded it allows deposits "on the bar." The Legislature is requested to appropriate $6,000 for the expenses of the board, and $5,000 for the compensation of its members. An officer of the Coast Survey is expected to visit the office of the Commissioners to-day, to confer with pilots as to the placing of the buoys on the Sandy Hook bar.

THE NEW-YORK HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY.

The annual meeting of the New-York Horticultural Society was held in Republican Hall, Thirty-third street, near Broadway, at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, the President, Mr. John Henderson, in the chair. The report of the Treasurer showed a balance on hand of $195. The roll of membership bears 278 names, five of which were added yesterday. It was also decided that in future the regular monthly meetings of the society should be made occasions for exhibiting to the public specimens of choice flowers and plants, and that suitable prizes should be offered to exhibitors. Some time during the latter part of June—probably about the 25th—an exhibition of strawberries and roses will be made. To this, also, the public will be invited. The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted in the choice of the following gentlemen: President, John Henderson; Vice Presidents, Peter Henderson, J. W. Paterson, R. B. Parsons, and S. B. Parsons; Corresponding Secretary, J. Y. Merkland; Recording Secretary, W. J. Davidson; Treasurer, Isaac H. Young.

The annual dinner of the society will take place some time during the present month.

A JUDGMENT AGAINST BOND FORGERS.

The General Term of the Superior Court rendered a decision yesterday in the case of the National Trust Company against Andrew L. Roberts, Valentine Gleason, Charles Ralston, and others. The defendants were charged with being members of the gang of bond forgers whose operations so startled commercial and financial circles three years ago. The present action was brought to recover $30,000 and interest, the amount of a loan made by the plaintiffs to Ralston on July 5, 1873, the latter depositing with the company as collateral security 42 forged bonds of the Buffalo, New-York and Erie Railroad Company. The jury at Trial Term found a verdict for the plaintiffs for $33,685 50. The defendants appealed to the General Term on various grounds, among them being the one that the deposition of "Spence" Pettis was improperly admitted in evidence. Pettis being now in a Massachusetts prison serving out a term for forgery. On this point the General Term holds that a felon, to be debarred from giving testimony in the State courts, must have been convicted of a felony by the courts of this State. The judgment in favor of the plaintiffs is affirmed. Arnold, Elliott, and Whitney appeared for the plaintiffs; A. Oakey Hall for the defendants.

THE MUNICIPAL COMMISSION.

The commission of which Hon. William M. Evarts is Chairman, which was appointed to prepare and report a plan to the Legislature for the better government of the municipalities of this State, is now completing its report. Major Sidney De Kay, Secretary of the commission, said yesterday that the report would be long and interesting, but that, in conformity with an understanding among the members of the commission, nothing relative to the proceedings of that body or to the nature of the report would be given to the public previous to the presentation of the report to the Legislature. Mr. Simon Sterne, a member of the commission, said that the reports relative to a disagreement among the members of the commission were sensational and subtantially unfounded, as were also published statements in reference to the proceedings of the commission. Mr. Evarts said the report would be presented to the Legislature early in the session; and, when asked whether there had been, as reported, any disagreement in the commission, and whether there was likely to be more than one report made, replied, smiling, "Other people disagree, why shouldn't we? There will be but one report, however."

AN UNDUTIFUL SON-IN-LAW.

On New Year's Day an old man named Patrick Reddy became engaged in a dispute with his son-in-law, Lawrence Connolly, alias "Larry the Horse," at Sing Sing, during the course of which the latter seized a butcher-knife and cut the former about the wrist and arm, inflicting two serious wounds.

LAW REPORTS.

THE SWEENY AND TWEED SUITS.

WHY THE EX-CHAMBERLAIN WAS GRANTED IMMUNITY AS STATED BY MR. PECKHAM — BOTH CASES ADJOURNED TO APRIL.

The adjourned January Term of 1876 of Supreme Court, Circuit, Part II., was opened by Judge Westbrook in the General Term room of the court yesterday for the purpose of disposing of the $7,000,000 suit against Peter B. Sweeny and the $1,000,000 suit against Tweed. The stronk jurors in the suits had evidently learned from the newspapers that neither case would be taken up for trial, and they gave token of the knowledge in not appearing in court. Only a few jurors in the Sweeny case answered to their names when called. The counsel for Tweed also failed to put in an appearance. Mr. Peckham was in court on behalf of the prosecution, and Sweeny was represented by John McKeon and William A. Beach.

Mr. Peckham, addressing the court, said: "If your Honor please, in the case of the People against Sweeny, more than a year ago the prosecution thought it desirable that the defendant should have an opportunity to take such part in the trial as he might think fit, and to that end an offer or suggestion was made that his bail would be reduced to such point that he could conveniently give bail if it were demanded. Negotiations were had with the other side with regard to the amount, but they were not carried out. The prosecution, however, thought the defendant should not be trammeled by the question of bail at all, if he desired to be present, quite as much for the convenience of the prosecution as for his convenience, and the prosecution have offered Mr. Sweeny that they would not arrest him, either on a civil or criminal process, if he chose to be present. We have given such a stipulation, and it has been accepted by the defendant; but this was so recently done that he could not be present. To carry out the stipulation it is suggested that the case should be adjourned to some future day. Counsel on the other side have proposed what seems a remote day as the only one practicable for them. Of course the court will fix such a day as will be desirable all round."

Mr. McKeon said: "This arrangement, with regard to Mr. Sweeny's coming here, was not consummated until Dec. 20, and I suggested to Mr. Peckham that the time was so short between the acceptance of the proposition and the day named for the trial that there ought to be a postponement, and that it was an inclement if not dangerous season for Mr. Sweeny to cross the Atlantic. But Mr. Peckham differs from me. I think April 8 would be a proper day."

Judge Westbrook remarked: "I recognize the propriety of the arrangement by which Mr. Sweeny could be present at the trial if he saw fit, and I therefore concur with counsel in the need of an adjournment. The arrangement having been consummated only in December, it would be impossible for him to be present at an early day."

Mr. Beach, taking up the discussion, said: "Allow me to add that when this suggestion was made on the part of the people and communicated to Mr. Sweeny, we received a telegram from him acquiescing in the arrangement, but next day we received a telegram from his wife that he had been taken suddenly ill. We think, under these circumstances, to ask Mr. Sweeny to cross the ocean in enfeebled health is somewhat unaccomodating and oppressive, and this is the reason why we ask with earnestness for the appointment of some day in April that suits your Honor's convenience and that of counsel."

Mr. Peckham in reply said: "I only wish that a day could be fixed upon when we could be ready to go on."

Judge Westbrook said: "I will have no difficulty in arranging for the first Monday in April, with reference to my own engagements, which are as important, perhaps, to my district as this case is to this district; and, as has been suggested, this is an inclement season of the year, and Mr. Sweeny would need to be at home for a week or so to consult with counsel before the trial. I am inclined to fix the first Monday of April as the time of trial. It is only a month or two from the time fixed, and unless there is something in the ends of justice that require I should appoint an earlier day, I shall fix upon that time."

Mr. Peckham said he knew of no special reason for an earlier day. His only reason was a general desire to push matters forward as rapidly as possible.

Judge Westbrook then said: "Now, as Sweeny is not here, and we have to fix upon a time for trial, in which I have to consult my own convenience, the first Monday in April is most convenient for me. I, therefore, fix that day at 10 o'clock."

The Tweed case was then called, but no counsel for the defense having put in an appearance, it went over to the same day as the Sweeny suit.

COURT NOTES.

Part II. of the Court of General Sessions has been adjourned by Judge Sutherland until Monday next.

James Blake, the lad who shot Marshal Walsh, during a street affray on New Year's Day, was yesterday arraigned at the Washington Place Police Court, and committed to await the result of the wounded man's injuries.

James Connolly, on New Year's Day, robbed Thomas Hanley, of Nineteenth street and Third avenue, of two coats worth $50, for which act Justice Murray, in the Fifty-seventh Street Police Court, yesterday, committed him to answer.

Charles McLaughlin, of No. 218 Mulberry street, charged with an atrocious assault on a child of seven years, pleaded guilty yesterday in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions, and Judge Gildersleeve sentenced him to three years in the Penitentiary.

Peter Delaney and George Lewis were yesterday arraigned at the Essex Market Police Court, and committed to await the result of injuries which they had inflicted on John Miller, while attempting to rob him of a valuable gold watch on New Year's.

On the night of Dec. 3, the wine saloon of Adolph Stahl, at No. 799 First avenue, was broken into by Charles Dail, of No. 548 Second avenue, with intent to steal. In Part I. of the Court of General Sessions yesterday Dail pleaded guilty, and Judge Gildersleeve sentenced him to two years in the Penitentiary.

On New Year's Day William Murphy, Cornelius Harman, and John Guinney were arrested by Detective Tooker, of the Nineteenth Precinct, on a charge of entering the saloon of August Koerner, of No. 1,145 First avenue, and stealing $80 worth of jewelry and apparel. The prisoners were committed for trial yesterday in the Fifty-seventh Street Police Court.

While attempting to alight from a Second avenue car, on Monday last, John J. Kirwin, of No. 525 Second avenue, was thrown beneath the wheels, which passed over his foot, crushing it badly. He was carried in an ambulance to St. Luke's Hospital. The driver of the car, William John, was committed as the Fifty-seventh Street Police Court, yesterday, to await the result of Kirwin's injuries.

Timothy O'Neil, of No. 336 East Forty-ninth street, was ejected from the saloon of Patrick Green, No. 857 Second avenue, on New Year's Day, by the proprietor, causing a fracture of O'Neil's collar bone, dislocation of hip, and serious internal injuries. Green was arrested after a struggle by Officer Davis, of the Nineteenth Precinct, and on being arraigned at the Fifty-seventh Street Police Court yesterday, was held to await the result of the wounded man's injuries.

While Andrew Smolinski, of No. 203 Avenue A, was passing through East Eleventh street on New Year's night, he was suddenly attacked by John Woods, of No. 424 East Eleventh street, who knocked him down, and robbed him of a valuable gold watch and chain and a silk scarf. Woods was arrested by Officer Farley, of the Seventeenth Precinct, before he could escape with the stolen property, and upon being arraigned at the Essex Market Police Court, was committed for trial in default of $2,000 bail.

While John Kennedy, of No. 418 West Forty-fourth street, was in the act of paying a New Year's call in Eighteenth street, near Tenth avenue, James Byrnes, of No. 456 West Eighteenth street, and a confederate, took possession of the horse and sleigh, which he had left standing in front of his friend's residence, and drove rapidly away. He gave an alarm, and caused the arrest of Byrnes, but his confederate escaped. At the Washington Place Police Court the prisoner was committed for trial in default of $500 bail.

Judge Gildersleeve opened the January term of the Court of General Sessions, yesterday. Courtlandt De P. Field, merchant, of No. 127 Water street, was appointed foreman of the Grand Jury. In his charge to the Grand Jury Judge Gildersleeve said that notwithstanding the hard times, crime had not decreased, and their labors would therefore, not be unusually heavy. While petty crimes had increased, the more serious offenses against the law, such as affrays resulting from drunken carousals, had not increased, and such crimes were not numerous.

Michael Carroll, a resident of the First Ward, was placed on trial before Judge Gildersleeve yesterday in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions, charged with felonious assault. The complainant, a First Ward politician, named John J. Hogan, living at No. 5 Morris street, testified that a woman, in company with Carroll, addressed an insulting remark to him, and on his protesting, Carroll rushed at him and stabbed him in the face with a knife. Officer Golden, of the Twenty-seventh Precinct, swore that he knew the woman to be a disreputable character, and had her sent to the Island. The defense showed that she was the prisoner's sister, and a reputable woman, and that Hogan had deliberately insulted her previous to the stabbing. The jury acquitted Carroll.

A SUICIDE'S ESTATE.

Judge Van Brunt, of the Court of Common Pleas, having been assigned to duty in the Supreme Court by Gov. Robinson, began his duties in the latter court by presiding in Part II., Circuit, yesterday. The old suit of John Charles Gardiner against the Mayor, &c., was brought on for trial in this part. In this action the plaintiff is the brother of George A. Gardiner, deceased. The latter committed suicide in 1854, having been convicted of obtaining about $130,000 on a trumped-up mining claim from the commission appointed under the Guadaloupe-Hidalgo treaty. The money thus obtained was attached by the Government. After Gardiner's death, Peter B. Sweeny, then Public Administrator, became the Administrator of Gardiner's estate. Sweeny was succeeded in office by Thomas C. Fields, during whose official term the Government compromised the difficulty by taking the principal sum and allowing Fields to retain the interest, amounting to over $37,000, for the benefit of Gardiner's estate. Of the latter amount $90,000 were distributed among next of kin, and the remainder was paid out as expenses to the Public Administrator and the counsel in the case. The plaintiff in the present action sues, in his own behalf and for his sister, to recover two-fifths of the $17,000. He claims the expenses were excessive. The case is still on.

Louisiana still enjoys the luxury of a pretending Legislature. The body meets in St. Patrick's Hall, New-Orleans. It contains seventeen Senators, as to whose title to their places there is no dispute, nine of them holding over from last year and eight of them having credentials from the Returning Board. There are, besides, four gentlemen who claim to have been elected. The House which meets in St. Patrick's Hall has forty members certified by the Returning Board and twenty-two claimants. The regular Legislature, on the other hand, has nineteen Senators and sixty-eight members of the House with credentials from the board. Of these, four Senators and twenty-two members of the House have their seats contested, or would have, if it lay in the minds of Louisiana Democrats to conduct themselves in any ordinary and sensible manner. As it is, the contestants have gone off in a body by themselves, and yesterday sent to Gov. KELLOGG the inevitable "solemn protest" against the regular Government. The facts concerning the composition of the rival Legislatures may be of interest by and by.

It is generally conceded, in Washington, by the firmest Democrats, that Florida, like South Carolina, is removed from the list of States in dispute. The action of the Supreme Court in that State has had sole reference to the Governorship, and the Hayes Electoral vote is not directly or indirectly attacked. This being the case, public attention will be concentrated on Louisiana, where both branches of Congress have committees at work. Their reports will be awaited with interest. The objection has been made in the Democratic papers that the Senate Committee does not receive its testimony publicly. But it must be remembered that this does not in any degree argue partiality in the proceedings, because the Democrats are well represented by Senators who have it quite in their power to cross-examine witnesses, as well as to secure the introduction of counter-evidence. On the other hand, witnesses have frequently declared on previous occasions that it is exceedingly dangerous to testify in public to the truth in Louisiana. We have no doubt that the Senate Committee will make a fair investigation, and we trust that the House Committee will succeed in doing the same.

DAVID DUDLEY FIELD, Esq., moralist, was yesterday elected to Congress. The World says he consented to go for the purpose of helping in the Presidential muddle. Doubtless this is true, and the country can judge of the case by the counselor called to assist in it. Mr. FIELD is widely known in New-York as a man who preaches extremely well and practices very poorly—"preaches cream," as the old saying is, "and practices skimmed milk." He is adroit and shifty, but we never knew of any one who labored under the delusion that he was honest. His work for the Barons of Erie was in no sense that which an honorable lawyer could undertake. It was devoted, not to maintaining his clients' rights under the law—something which may properly be done for the most hardened criminals—but to perverting the law into an instrument of plunder and oppression. That is precisely what TILDEN wishes to see done now in the matter of the Presidency, and FIELD is as fit a tool as he could employ. But he will find him useless. The facts are too well known, and the law too clear for even FISK'S and TWEED'S lawyer to misrepresent them. If the case were to be argued before BARNARD or CARDOZO, and FIELD had only to furnish a plausible excuse for villainy already determined on, he might stand some chance. But the case is not to be so argued. It is before the American people, a tribunal which long since consigned FIELD to the category of detected rogues.

We perceive that Mr. NACHTMANN is anxious to have a large number of copies of the Governor's Message printed in German. This is, we are sorry to say, only following a practice which has, of late, become too common. There is no good reason why our public documents should be printed in German. Those who cannot read them in English, should make haste to learn to do so. It is certainly a very slight requirement that our foreign-born fellow-citizens, if they wish to exercise the powers of citizens, should be able to read the language of their adopted country, and, as a matter of fact, the number of those who cannot do so is very small. It would bother even Mr. NACHTMANN to send his share of 10,000 copies of the Message in German to voters who can read it only in that form. The proposal is one of barefaced demagogism, intended to tickle the fancy and prejudice of a part of our people. We may be sure that if Gov. ROBINSON had not accepted the loan of Mr. TILDEN'S views on the Presidential crisis, and tacked them to his own much more sensible ones on State affairs, we should never have heard of this proposal.

Mr. SLOAN'S remarks on taking the Speaker's chair, yesterday, were conceived in excellent spirit, and contained some pertinent suggestions. He pointed out that the duty of economy in appropriations was this year a simple one, directed attention to the reapportionment of the State from the census of 1875, and to the legislation necessary to carry out the new provisions of the Constitution, and urged upon the House promptness and industry. His address showed the practical man of affairs, and promised well for his efficiency. His reference to national affairs was appropriate, and, in its moderation, in strong contrast to the fustian which public men on the other side of the House seem compelled to utter whenever they open their lips on the subject.

The inquest at Ashtabula has not developed any points which materially bear upon the cause of the late disaster on the Lake Shore Railroad. There is much local excitement concerning the charge that the flames of the burning cars were not extinguished because the railroad company were interested in burning up the killed. This is a frightful allegation; and, now, that it has been made, the company will, of course, insist upon the fullest and most exhaustive examination of that part of the case. It is strange that, while there were water and hose near at hand, no stream was played on the wreck in which people were actually burned alive. As to the number of the lost, there is still much animated discussion. The accounts and estimates vary greatly. Our correspondent makes out a very good case for those who claim that there were at least two hundred on the train. But, as the number known to be killed is only fifty-five, there remains a large discrepancy in the total account. The theory at first was that many bodies were swept away by the stream. This is shown to have been impossible, as the fallen bridge prevented it by its position in the creek. The theory that some of the bodies were consumed to ashes, and were so dissolved, is also quite untenable. It is likely that all of the passengers are or will be accounted for.

BLIND LEADERS OF THE BLIND.

The blind partisanship of the average Democrat, however mischievous, is intelligible and consistent. Having been told by his leaders that TILDEN and HENDRICKS have been elected, and that a conspiracy has been organized to deprive them of the fruits of victory, he listens approvingly to incendiary counsels and vows that, come what may, TILDEN shall be inaugurated. If the courage of the Democrat of this class was equal to his bluster, there might be some reason for apprehending a fulfillment of the wild threats that have been uttered in various parts of the country. The consolation is that his valor exhausts itself in talk, and that, with a great deal of recklessness, he is not wholly destitute of prudence. He does not particularly object to civil war, but he is resolved that somebody else shall do the fighting.

The reasonable certainty that Democratic recklessness will not, after all, assume dangerous proportions does not lessen the culpability of the leaders, who are doing their utmost to prevent an amicable settlement of the points in dispute. One can understand the vulgar demagogue, to whom truth and moderation are incomprehensible virtues, and whose sole object is to foster the excitement by which he lives. Being unincumbered by conscience or responsibility, he raves and roars without regard to cause or consequences. A man occupying a Governor's chair ought to be made of different stuff. The Democratic Party is not above elevating to high office charlatans and cheats of every degree. Still, there is a natural reluctance to believe that each succeeding Democratic Governor of New-York must be as arrant a demagogue or as unscrupulous a partisan as his predecessor. Mr. LUCIUS ROBINSON seems determined to convince us that this generous construction of probabilities is not warranted by facts. Although in his Message he administers a rebuke to the prolixity of his predecessor, and his tendency to inflict upon the Legislature wearisome essays upon subjects with which they have no direct concern, Gov. ROBINSON has been unable to resist the temptation to partisan discussion which the Presidential imbroglio affords. The result is, that about one-fourth of his Message is occupied with a statement of the questions to be settled at Washington, so one-sided and untrue in its character as to show that Mr. ROBINSON has an inadequate conception of the dignity of his office, or of the respect due to truth, and so mean and malignant in its tone that Tammany must feel ashamed of its resistance to his nomination.

It is not surprising that Democratic newspapers have concealed from their readers the fact that the House Committee sent to South Carolina have formally announced that the success of the Republican Electoral ticket in that State can no longer be doubted. The Democratic editor rates so low the intelligence of his readers that in his opinion the obligation to print news is confined to the news that may seem favorable to the interests of his party. But the Governor of the Empire State should look at things from a different point of view. If he refers to national politics at all, it should be for the purpose of stating great issues, and of contributing to their discussion in a broad, patriotic spirit. Gov. ROBINSON chooses, rather, the level of the demagogue. He assumes that his audience are all as blind as the rabble who gave him his majority in this City. Thus, in the face of the testimony of the Congressional Committee, he speaks of the votes of South Carolina as "still in dispute;" he says the same of the Electoral votes of Florida, which are untouched by the proceedings that give to DREW the Governship; and, continuing his blundering or his mendacity, he misstates the matter in controversy in the case of Oregon. In a bar-room politician, these might be trivial departures from propriety. In the Governor of New-York they are indications of a partisanship which, if persisted in, will forfeit all his claims to confidence or respect. The same inaccuracy of statement, the same bitterness of temper, the same disposition to pander to the prejudices of a mob, are apparent in the whole of the Governor's treatment of national affairs. He takes up, one after another, the details of the Tilden case, presents them in the distorted shape which partisanship has given them, and dogmatically pronounces judgment upon them in support of the pretensions which are in dispute. The offense is made none the less rank by the pretense of solemnity which attends it. A Governor who admits that "momentous results" are involved in the controversy, and then proceeds to take for granted positions that are denied, to suppress considerations that are essential to the truth, to encourage resistance to law, and to inflame the public mind, already sensitive enough, may be a very good partisan, as Democratic partisanship goes, but he is certainly unworthy of the office whose duties he is required to fulfill. An ordinary sense of decency, if nothing else, should have prevented an exhibition of passionate devotion to party claims, which shows how incapable its author is of comprehending his proper relations to the people of the State.

From ROBINSON to VANCE might at one time have seemed an impossible jump. The transition is now quite easy. VANCE does not attempt to argue out the Presidential question after the manner of ROBINSON, but the two Governors are agreed in support of the conclusion that TILDEN must and shall be inaugurated. ROBINSON pledges the State of New-York to sustain the pretensions of TILDEN, as urged by HEWITT, methodized by CLARKSON N. POTTER, and accepted by the pugnacious patriots of Illinois and Indiana. VANCE, with equal positiveness, commits North Carolina to the cause, though he is shrewd enough to suggest that this time the Northern Democrats must do most of the fighting. VANCE and his legions decline to bear the brunt of the battle. He does not hesitate, however, to stimulate the mischievous spirit which Gov. ROBINSON encourages, and which is the only real obstacle to the adjustment of controverted points.

This unwillingness to see both sides of the question is the most marked characteristic even of the better class of Democrats now in Washington. That Senator EATON or Mr. HEWITT refuses to admit of the existence of doubt as to the greater power of the House, compared with the Senate, or the utter powerlessness of the President of the Senate, when the time for counting comes, is not to be wondered at. Their thick-and-thin partisanship unfits them for a dispassionate estimate of the situation. Senators BAYARD and KERNAN are men of a different stamp. From them, at least, something like fairness might be expected. They do, indeed, express themselves guardedly up to a certain state of the case, and their general tone suggests moderation, not to say conciliation, in the arrangement of preliminaries. But their version of right, if resistance be offered to the extravagant pretensions which the House is asked to set up, is hardly less mischievous than that of their most violent associates. All of them are groping for excuses in behalf of the scheme upon whose success Mr. TILDEN'S last chance is staked, and in the absence of reasons which appeal to the intelligence of the country, they exert themselves, with varying degrees of skill, to embitter and mislead the worst elements of their party.

THE GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.

To the blind and reckless partisanship which characterizes the references of Gov. ROBINSON to national affairs we have already referred. That portion of his Message which relates to the business of the State, is, in the main, distinguished by good sense and good taste. His allusions to the administration of his predecessor are pitched in too low a key to be quite satisfactory to the eminent pretender to the Presidency, and while he fails to give due credit to the Republican Administration which re-established the credit of the State and provided for the extinction of its debt, he at least refrains from echoing the impudent claims of Mr. TILDEN to have performed that work unaided. This is better than the tone of Gov. ROBINSON'S inaugural speech gave us any reason to expect, and for even that amount of reticence he deserves thanks. Had he imitated it all through the Message, we might have believed him capable of speaking on behalf of the people, instead of in the interest of a mischievous section of an unscrupulous party.

The Governor shows that the State debt has been reduced to a net amount of a little over nine millions; that the State tax for last year was eight and a half millions, against about fourteen and a quarter millions in 1875; that the bounty debt maturing in April next can be met out of the sinking fund and the special interest tax of this year; that the canal debt remains a charge upon the tax-payers, instead of being provided for out of canal revenues; that with the exception of the Erie, the income from the canals of the State fall some $170,000 short of meeting the charges for collection and repairs; that even the Erie Canal shows but half a million of surplus during the past year; and that the wasteful management of the State Prisons has reached such a point that their expenditures have been seven hundred thousand dollars in excess of their income. Some very just reflections are made on the extravagance displayed in the construction of public buildings; some timely recommendations are offered on behalf of the Emigration Commission; and several points are indicated in our public school management which show the need of retrenchment and reform.

The most elaborate recommendations of the Message are directed to necessary improvements in the law affecting savings banks. The Governor says, very properly, that the investments of a savings bank should be valued, not with exclusive reference to their market value, which may not be realized at maturity, but on the basis of their purchase or par value, corrected by their market value, when the latter has fallen below the former figures. Depreciation of securities should, in fact, be taken into account, but not temporary appreciation. He would have savings banks retain their uninvested deposits in their own vaults, instead of intrusting any part of them to ordinary banks or trust companies; he suggests that the maximum of any single deposit should be reduced from $5,000 to, at most, $2,000; that no deposits should be received from corporations or societies; that the maximum of legal interest on deposits should be reduced from six to five per cent.; and that the existing check upon the accumulation of a large surplus should be removed.

Having said so much and said it so well on the subject of savings banks, it is a matter of surprise that Gov. ROBINSON should be silent on the equally pressing subject of the management of life insurance companies. He has a long and intimate acquaintance with that branch of business, and recent disasters in that line have been still less excusable and equally productive of distress with those of savings banks. Life insurance policy-holders certainly rely as implicitly on the protection afforded by State law and State inspection as the depositors of savings banks, and it is far more difficult to obtain a perfectly clear idea of the financial position of the one than of the other. If the investments of savings banks are "not to be estimated above cost, nor above par, nor above market value," is Gov. ROBINSON prepared to lay down the same rule in regard to insurance companies? If "rigid restraints against mismanagement" are urgently needed in the case of savings banks, has not recent experience shown that they are more glaringly absent in the case of insurance companies? We trust that the Legislature will heed the suggestions of the Governor in regard to savings banks; we trust that his remarkable silence in regard to insurance companies will not lead them to forget that the management of the latter institutions requires some careful and well-considered legislative restraints. It might be added that the Attorney General may need a hint that the prosecution of some recent offenders among insurance officers might, very fitly, be undertaken by the State.

It is difficult to perceive on what grounds Gov. ROBINSON objects to a large increase in the taxable valuations of real estate, "especially in the agricultural districts." So far from this being "an effort to follow upward the unnatural prices caused by the currency inflation," it is simply an effort to make the country bear some part of its share of State taxation, which it has hitherto succeeded in throwing upon New-York and Brooklyn. A very large proportion of the agricultural property of the State is not taxed at more than half the proportion of market value which obtains in these cities. It may or may not be of much importance "whether the valuations are above or below what are called actual values," but it is of the utmost importance that the proportion between valuation and value should be, as nearly as possible, uniform throughout the State. This rule has been grossly disregarded in the past, and any attempt to enforce it should be encouraged, not met by disapproval which smacks of demagogism.

The Governor wisely refuses to follow the example of his predecessor, in incorporating with his Message, a tedious essay on the currency, though he might have indicated in what way the banks of the State ought to prepare for the resumption of specie payments imposed on them by the law of 1875. As a politician, he might thus have reflected on the absurd demand of his own party for the repeal of the Resumption act; but he would have earned a claim to rank as something more than a cautious political trimmer. Gov. ROBINSON'S remarks in regard to the need of reform in the laws affecting the creation of municipal debt, and more particularly in regard to those affecting the expenditures and general government of the City of New-York are just and timely. They compare very favorably with the meaningless platitudes of Mayor ELY'S Message, and the Republican Legislature ought promptly to set about giving effect to the very sound recommendations of the Governor on the subject. Had he stopped there, the Message, with all its faults of omission, would have been an admirable one. It seems to be believed in Albany that he did stop there, and that the partisan tirade with which the Message closes was really the work of Gov. TILDEN. In that case, we trust that this is the last contribution to a State document and the last impress on State policy which the tricky and unscrupulous charlatan who has just quitted the Executive chair will ever be allowed to make.

PLAYING GOVERNOR.

Mr. WADE HAMPTON appears to be enjoying himself very much. Next to being a real Governor, we should suppose, is the pleasure of playing Governor. Of course, a make-believe Governor has to exercise his imagination a great deal. He must "make believe very hard," and the constant strain on WADE HAMPTON'S mind which this imaginative effort involves must be quite burdensome. There are many kindly people about him who help keep up the delusion. They call him "Governor," just as a harmless lunatic is sometimes soothed by being hailed as Emperor or Cæsar by those who know his weakness. But HAMPTON does all he can to convince himself that he is really Governor of South Carolina. His favorite attitude is that of a man who sits on a safety-valve to prevent an explosion. While thus posed before the American people, he frequently rattles off a letter, in which he assures the world that there is really no danger so long as he keeps down the eruption. It cannot have escaped the attention of the discerning reader that these letters are written in order that he may sign himself "WADE HAMPTON, Governor of South Carolina."

HAMPTON'S letter to Gov. HAYES and Gov. TILDEN was a good sample of this inexpensive form of literary amusement. We do not now recall any one of the letters usually printed in the Tribune as "Letters from the People" that was nearly as funny as this. Why HAMPTON should have written at all is easy of explanation. But why he should write to both of these gentlemen is a puzzle. Probably he fancies himself as cunning as the half-converted idolater, who, having paid his homage to the Deity, used to toss a prayer or two to "the other chap," because, as he said, there was no knowing into whose hands he might fall. In that circular letter to the late candidates for the Presidency, HAMPTON laid his hand upon his bosom and assured Messrs. HAYES and TILDEN that everything was quiet in South Carolina, notwithstanding he had been "inaugurated" and had actually written an inaugural address. The people of South Carolina, he went on to say, were constructed on a sanguinary, inflammatory, and destructive plan. If once let loose, they were able to "make Rome howl." But, while he was at the head of affairs, no harm should come near either HAYES or TILDEN. He, HAMPTON, was sitting on the volcano, engaged in suppressing a rebellion which seethed and surged beneath his ample person.

This letter was so successful that the Democratic papers clamored for Gov. HAYES to answer it. They overlooked the fact that Gov. TILDEN had not made any reply, and they never intimated that here was a chance for their late candidate to distinguish himself. The fact is that TILDEN'S letters have usually fired the Democratic Party like an iceberg. WADE HAMPTON is a much more picturesque writer; besides, his letters are usually short enough to enable the reader to see the end from the beginning—a virtue which TILDEN'S lucubrations have not. HAMPTON'S latest effort of genius is an address to the hard-ridden tax-payers of South Carolina. He calls upon the "faithful, law-abiding, and loyal citizens" to pay their taxes. The Legislature—that is to say, his private and personal Legislature—has authorized the collection of 25 per cent. of last year's taxes, a free and easy way of doing business which commands our admiration. But the "Governor," who is just now a little short of funds, is ready to let the tax-payers off at a liberal discount. He will worry along a little while if they will pay him 10 per cent. HAMPTON is always expressing his astonishment at his own moderation. He is amazed now to think that he contents himself with 10 per cent., when he might demand 25. Probably, too, he would find it just as easy to collect one as the other of these rates. He will send around the hat if the people will agree to drop their pennies. Or, as he euphemistically puts it, there will be an "agent for the collection of the contribution here called for." When people play Governor they do not trouble themselves about the forms of law.

The really amusing part of Mr. HAMPTON'S little address is his plea for money in the name of charity. The call for funds is made, he says, for "the inmates of charitable and penal institutions of the State." We knew that HAMPTON'S legion were amply qualified to become inmates of such institutions; it is news that they have really got into them at last. But they are there, it seems, for he says that "the immediate needs" of his Government can be supplied, if the tax-payers will only respond to his appeal, and he explicitly adds that the funds are required for the paupers and jail-birds. Then HAMPTON, having given notice that his agent is about to go out on a collecting tour, arises once more and "adjures the people to be steadfast, law-abiding, and peaceful." Let us imagine that he looks over his shoulder at the rest of the world as if he would say, "Do you see how I am keeping this thing under?" Therefore, we hope that Mr. HAMPTON will have a good time collecting his contribution.

SOLAR INSECURITY.

On the night of the 24th of November last a serious accident occurred in the constellation of the Swan. One of the smaller stars of the constellation caught fire from some unknown cause, and the flames had gained such headway before the astronomers were notified that all attempts to extinguish them were manifestly useless. The fire was first discovered by Prof. SCHMIDT, of Athens University, who promptly gave the alarm, and in a short time had all the available telescopes in Europe pointed at the star, although they produced no more effect than would have been produced by so many hot-house syringes. Fortunately, the conflagration gradually burned itself out without extending to any of the neighboring stars, and though its embers are still glowing, there is no reason that any further danger should be apprehended.

Although the destruction by fire of a valuable and uninsured star is always a matter to be regretted, the fire of the 24th of November was so remote that it attracted little attention from the public. Since that date, however, Prof. PROCTOR, an accomplished sidereal expert, has made an official investigation into the origin of the fire, and has arrived at results which are full of interest and importance to mankind. Prof. PROCTOR asserts that the star was covered—rather recklessly as it seems to prudent men—with an envelope of hydrogen gas, and that the latter caught fire, possibly from a match dropped by a vagrant comet, and blazed so fiercely as to wrap the whole star in flames. He does not say whether or not there were any means at hand for extinguishing the fire. That is a question which it is now to late too press. What we do know is that the moment the hydrogen caught fire the star was doomed, no matter how abundant the water-supply may have been or how efficient may have been the local fire department.

Having thus ascertained the proximate cause of the disaster, Prof. PROCTOR proceeds to call attention to the alarmingly unsafe condition of our sun. Not only is the sun entirely surrounded with an enormously thick covering of hydrogen, but on some occasions the latter has undoubtedly been on fire to a greater or less extent. Like the recently-destroyed star in the constellation of the Swan, the sun is rushing through space, dragging its train of planets with it, and evidently striving to reach some distant and unknown station situated far beyond the edge of the largest sidereal map. Neither Prof. PROCTOR nor any other astronomer has a copy of the celestial time-table, and hence we do not know whether the sun is running on schedule time or not. What does have a very suspicious look is the fact discovered last Summer by SECCHI, the Italian astronomer, that unusually large quantities of magnesium, a metal that develops intense heat when burning, were used as fuel in the solar furnace in July and August last. Now, when a Mississippi engineer feeds his furnaces with pitch and turpentine, it is because his boat is behind time or is engaged in racing. The sun may be traveling at its usual rate, but, on the other hand, it may be trying to make up lost time, or may be racing with Sirius, Arcturus, or some other fast star. In such case, we could easily understand the reason for the exceptional use of magnesium as fuel, and we should have abundant reason to dread an explosion or other terrible catastrophe. Even if the sun is quietly proceeding on its way without making any unusual effort, the danger that its hydrogen envelope will take fire and be partially or totally consumed is sufficiently great to excite in us the liveliest apprehensions. Prof. PROCTOR assures us that should such an accident occur, the heat would be so tremendous that not only vegetation, the Herald staff, and all other green things on the surface of the earth would perish, but that human life would be totally extinguished. In order to produce this terrible result it would not be necessary that the entire sun should be consumed, for a fire that should destroy, say a quarter of its hydrogen envelope, would roast the earth till its surface would be a mere blackened crisp.

As has been already remarked, this hydrogen has more than once caught fire, apparantly from causes existing in the sun itself. Prof. PROCTOR now points out an additional source of danger in the reckless conduct of irrepressible comets, which are constantly passing to and fro in the neighborhood of the sun. Any one of these celestial tramps may set the hydrogen on fire, either accidently or purposely, in circumstances which will insure a tremendous conflagration. If we can imagine a powder magazine with a large fire constantly burning in close proximity to the powder, and to which fire tramps are constantly coming to warm themselves and to light their pipes, we shall have a fair idea of the frightfully dangerous condition of the sun. And this state of things has existed, no man and no astronomer knows how long, and were it not that the accident in the Swan led Prof. PROCTOR to investigate the condition of the sun we should never have suspected the danger that menaces us.

Of course, our first duty is to inquire what measures of safety, if any, we ought to take. It is distressing to learn that Prof. PROCTOR, with all his experience, has nothing to suggest, and that no other astronomer is likely to give us any aid. There is no Department of Public Buildings which has any jurisdiction in the sun, by virtue of which it could make the usual recommendation that buckets of water should be kept constantly within reach, and that the means of exit should be increased. So far as can be seen, we must content ourselves with hoping that the hydrogen envelope will not be brought in contact with fire, and that comets will see the propriety of conducting themselves in an orderly manner while in the neighborhood of the sun. Unless Mr. PROCTOR has been grossly deceiving us, the sun is liable at any moment to burst into flames, and we are powerless to prevent the catastrophe. Our only possible expedient in such a contingency would be to paint ourselves with a solution of tungstate of soda, and when we remember that a grand solar conflagration would probably rage for five or six weeks before burning itself out, we can perceive how little confidence could be placed in tungstate of soda or any other incombustible preparation known to chemistry.

THE COLOSSAL STATUE OF LIBERTY.

In response to a call signed by William M. Evarts, Samuel D. Babcock, John Jay, William H. Wickham, and William H. Appleton, a number of gentlemen met last night at the Century Club to appoint a committee to superintend the raising of funds for the reception of the Colossal Statue of Liberty. There were present William M. Evarts, Joseph H. Choate, Frederick Coudert, John Jay, H. F. Spaulding, Samuel D. Babcock, James F. Dwight, Clark Bell, George Jones, Theodore Roosevelt, John A. Weeks, James W. Pinchat, J. Seaver Page, Richard Butler, Parke Godwin, Richard M. Street, Henry Hilton, Hon. Noah Davis, Algernon S. Sullivan, Rush C. Hawkins, Samuel P. Avery, W. L. Palmer, Alexander S. Webb, Edward Moran, and others. Mr. Evarts presided and Mr. Butler was the Secretary. Mr. Evarts stated that upon an honest estimate it was thought that $125,000 would have to be subscribed in this country for the proper reception of the statue. He spoke of the generous way in which 128 municipalities of France had responded to the call for money to build the statue itself, and said that he had no doubt that the American people would exhibit a similar spirit. He invited the attention of the gentlemen to a picture painted by Mr. Edward Moran, the title of which was "The Nations paying homage to Liberty." The painting was a large one, representing the commerce of the world floating in the harbor of New-York, with boat-loads of people visiting Bedloe's Island—each boat displaying its national colors—to do homage to the great statue. Mr. J. Seaver Page read a poem written by Mr. Julian Moran. Butler then stated that the intention in calling the meeting was to secure the appointment of a committee of 20 to superintend the subscription of the sum designated by Mr. Evarts. After short addresses had been made by Mr. Coudert, Mr. August Barthuldi—the designer of the statue—Mr. Hawkins, and Mr. Roosevelt, it was voted that the Chairman be authorized to appoint the committee of 20, himself to be its Chairman. Mr. Evarts will name the committee at some future time.

SUITS FOR DAMAGES.

RONDOUT, Jan. 2.—A large number of important cases will come before the Circuit Court which meets to-morrow, Judge Westbrook presiding. Among the civil suits is the cause of John B. G. Babcock against William Libby, surviving member of the firm of A. T. Stewart & Co., to recover $45,000 for an alleged breach of contract. W. W. Hayward sues the Citizens' Steam-boat Company for $5,000 damages for the loss of his mother by the sinking of the steam-boat Sunnyside, Dec. 1, 1875. Lena W. Bronson, another victim of the Sunnyside disaster, sues for $10,000 damages. W. A. Beach will defend the company. Michael McNierney sues the Newark City Ice Company for $10,000 damages by the breaking of an ice run, and Walter McDonald sues the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company for $10 000 damages by the falling of a coal-bucket. There are several other suits for damages for less amounts. The docket also contains a number of important criminal cases among them the case of Keyser, Conroy, and Mains for attempting to blow up the house of one Suppies. The court will hold an unusually long session.

WASHINGTON.

THE PUBLIC FINANCES.

LARGE DECREASE IN RECEIPTS FROM CUSTOMS AND INTERNAL REVENUE—INCREASE OF THE PUBLIC DEBT IN DECEMBER OF OVER $3,500,000—ANALYSIS OF THE CAUSES AND COMPARISON WITH LAST YEAR—CONDITION OF THE TREASURY—THE NEW LOAN IN THE DEBT STATEMENT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2.—The large falling off in Customs receipts for December has caused the liabilities of the Government to exceed the receipts for the month by $3,585,142, that being the amount added to the public debt since the November debt statement was issued. For the six months ending Dec. 31, the public debt has decreased $6,518,003, which is $2,338,428 less than the decrease for the corresponding six months of last year. The unfavorable showing for the six months just ended is entirely owing to the large falling off in receipts, and had it not been for the large reduction made in current expenditures during the present fiscal year, the exhibit would be several millions worse than it now is. For December the Customs receipts fell off nearly $2,000,000 as compared with November, and as compared with December, 1875, $2,316,177. There is also a large falling off in internal revenue receipts; but it is only when the receipts for the six months just ended are compared with the six months ended Dec. 31, 1875, that the extent of the falling off in the revenues of the Government can be fully realized. For the six months ended Dec. 31, 1875, the receipts were: From Customs, $76 501,558; from internal revenue, $57,457 93; total for six months, $133,959,351. For the six months just ended the receipts were: From Customs, $64,539,458; from internal revenue, $57,033,420; total for six months, $121,572,878. This shows a falling off in Customs receipts for the last six months of $11,962,099, and in internal revenue, of $424,372; a total from these two sources of over $12,000,000. The decrease in internal revenue receipts, as exhibited by the above figures, do not show the actual decline in that source of revenue, because a considerable portion of the spirits and tobacco assessed for tax in the six months of the preceding fiscal year, was assessed at the rates fixed prior to the passage of the act increasing the tax on these commodities.

The coin balance in the Treasury, after deducting coin certificates is $19,237,418, of which $1,442,722 is in subsidiary silver coins. Against this there are liabilities for accrued and due interest on the public debt to the amount of $42,127,012, leaving the actual cash gold in the Treasury, $5,667,684, exclusive of silver. The coin certificates outstanding aggregate $47,280,000, an increase of $10,000,000 as compared with November, and of over $16,000,000 as compared with December, 1875. The fact that the Treasury now holds nearly $50,000,000 in gold, on deposit subject to call, shows the extent to which the business of the country is depressed. The 4½ per cent. refunding loan makes its appearance for the first time on the debt statement for December. The amount of these bonds reported as placed is $33,000,600.

During the 12 months just ended, the amount of legal tenders outstanding has decreased $5,772,136, and fractional currency $17,798,866. Since April last there has been issued nearly $26,000,000 in subsidiary silver coin, which more than compensates for the aggregate contraction during the 12 months in legal tenders and fractional currency.

There is now outstanding only $26,000,000 in fractional currency. Of this amount at least $12,000,000 have been lost and will never be presented for redemption. An examination of the redemptions of fractional currency for the past 12 months shows that of the $10,500,000 of the first three issues outstanding Jan. 1, 1 76, only $32,000 have been redeemed. It is reasonably certain, therefore, that very little of those three issues are now in existence. Of the fourth issue there was redeemed $4,500,000, and of the fifth issue $13,250,000.

The Treasurer now holds $18,114,801 in legal tenders for the redemption of the circulating notes of national banks, which includes surrendered circulation and the notes of banks in liquidation and insolvency.

CONGRESS TO MEET TO-DAY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2.—Both houses of Congress meet to-morrow, and there will be an attempt at a renewal of the business of the session. The Senate will have a quorum probably, but the House, by reason of the storm, may not be able to gather enough members to act upon the first business presented, which will be the case of Barnes, under arrest for a refusal to produce telegrams before the committee in New-Orleans.

THE VICE PRESIDENT ELECT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2.—The announcement is made that Hon. William A. Wheeler, Vice President elect, will make a visit to Gov. Hayes this week or next, and remain with him some time.

THE STRIKE ON THE GRAND TRUNK ROAD.

TORONTO, Jan. 2.—All is quiet on the Grand Trunk road to-day. Knots of men are still gathered at Union Station and at different points of the line, but no misconduct has been reported. At 10 o'clock this morning two engines with a plow were dispatched westward to open up the road, and a little over an hour afterward a passenger train was started to run as near to Stratford as possible. A dozen or two of passengers were on board, and some mails and newspapers. A pilot engine was sent east with a number of trackmen at 9 o'clock, and at noon a train left Union Station, carrying 200 of the Queen's Own volunteers bound for Belleville, to restore order in that town with a view to allow trains for Montreal to pass through. A train which has been at Belleville for the past two days will be brought back to-morrow. No trains will be run at night for the present.

MONTREAL, Jan. 2.—A portion of the Grand Trunk Railroad engine drivers' general committee had another interview with Manager Hickson at midnight. Suggestions were made on both sides, but no result was arrived at. Mr. Hickson still waiting to see the committee in a body. No tickets were sold yesterday to points west of Prescott. The express left this morning as usual with a large number of passengers. The committee demanded of Mr. Hickson that all engine drivers who have been arrested should be unconditionally liberated.

Mails for the West were dispatched this evening by way of Albany and Suspension Bridge. They will go by way of the United States until the Grand Trunk Railway is again in running order. The situation here remains unchanged. The local Committee of Engineers is in almost constant session, but has made no arrangement with the Central Committee will indorse. Wallis, the Mechanical Superintendent of the road, has issued orders to the effect that all engineers and firemen who have committed no deeds of violence may resume work at the former rate of compensation on application to him.

CONTRACTS WITH A MERCANTILE AGENCY.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 2.—A suit of considerable interest to the business community was decided in the Court of Common Pleas to-day, by Judge Force. The action was brought by W. and J. B. Gibson against the mercantile agency of R. G. Dun & Co., to recover $900 upon the ground that the agency of the defendants had been guilty of negligence in not reporting the amount and number of mortgages upon the property of a party about whom plaintiffs inquired. Judge Force held that under the contract of defendants they are not liable unless the inquiry is especially made and agreed to between both parties, and gave verdict for defendants.

THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

VIEWS OF THE SITUATION AT THE CAPITAL—DEMOCRATIC RESISTANCE NARROWED DOWN TO LOUISIANA—THE OREGON INVESTIGATION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2.—The result of the judicial proceedings in Florida is such as most Republicans have looked for, and it confirms the vote of that State to Hayes. The contest is now narrowed down to a dispute about Louisiana, unless Oregon is still to be subject to a Democratic contest. The case is much simplified, the points which will be of practical importance in the discussion and in determining the dispute being reduced to a very few, which can be easily understood by the people. One of the gentlemen who was in Louisiana says that the testimony before the Senate Committee, as it has been reported, and as he has heard privately, is sustaining well the position taken in the report made to the President and printed by the Senate. It is not now believed that any issue will be raised except as to the Louisiana vote, and, therefore, the facts in respect to the election there will be eagerly sought and carefully studied.

The examination of the witnesses in the Oregon case will be resumed to-morrow by Senator Morton's committee. An attempt will be made to further connect New-York parties with the conspiracy. The committee is much restricted in the Oregon investigation by the distance which witnesses have to come and the time required, as well as the expense, which will prevent the calling of some witnesses, important but not absolutely essential to the inquiry. Senator Kelly is not a member of the committee making the investigation, as seems to be generally supposed.

THE SENATE AND HOUSE COMMITTEES—NO ARRANGEMENT YET MADE FOR A JOINT MEETING — DISCUSSING COLLATERAL QUESTIONS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2.—The Committee of the Senate on the Electoral vote had a short meeting to-day; but two members were absent and little progress was made. The committee has no arrangement yet for a meeting with the House Committee on the same subject. The latter committee is not yet organized, but is expected to meet to-morrow. The two committees are to confer together and discuss jointly propositions presented, but are to act separately, and it is yet uncertain whether there will be an informal conference before action by either committee, or whether the first conference will not take place till one committee has something definite to propose to the other. There can be but little more delay before the rugged difficulties must be squarely met, but there has yet been nothing more than a discussion of collateral questions, with a view to narrow as much as possible the real issues which must be considered when the committees come together.

YESTERDAY'S CABINET MEETING.

THE LOUISIANA REQUEST FOR PROTECTION—THE GENERAL POLITICAL SITUATION—MEXICO.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2.—The Cabinet session to-day, the first for nearly two weeks, was attended by all the members, and lasted nearly three hours. Cabinet officers, who have been visited this evening, say that while there was considerable to talk about Louisiana at the session, there was nothing of momentous importance. The resolutions of the Louisiana Legislature asking for protection by the Government against violence, were referred to, a telegraphic copy of them having been forwarded to the President and received by him to-day, but no action was taken. The Government has not changed its former opinion, that the troops already in that State are fully able to cope with any difficulties that may arise and which would properly demand military interference. The general political situation was talked over at the session to-day, more for the reason that it has been some time since there was an opportunity for a general Cabinet consultation upon that subject than because of any official information demanding especial attention.

There was but little discussion upon topics growing out of the disturbed condition of affairs in Mexico. Secretary Fish has received communications from American merchants in that country, detailing their fears of violence to American interests in Mexico, but there was nothing absolutely new in that particular. The State Department will pursue whatever course is necessary. The War and Navy Departments heretofore gave proper and necessary instructions to meet all emergencies as they arise; so additional directions, therefore, are thought to be immediately necessary. So far as the orders to the military authorities in the South are concerned, the decision of the Cabinet to-day was that there should be no change.

THE FLORIDA INVESTIGATIONS.

TESTIMONY TAKEN BY THE SENATE COMMITTEE—FRAUD AND INTIMIDATION BY DEMOCRATS—INSULTING TREATMENT OF NORTHERN CAPITALISTS AND BUSINESS MEN, WHO MAKE ALL THE PROSPERITY OF THE STATE—EXPERIENCE OF THE DEMOCRATIC COMMITTEE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

JACKSONVILLE, Jan. 2.—The Sheriff of Baker County was before the Senate Committee to-day, and he testified to the fact that a local Democrat offered him $125 to sign the bogus returns by which the Democrats are claiming a majority for Tilden on the face of the returns. The agent of the Democrats who selected a party to bribe him in the first instance, failed, and a second attempt to do the dirty work of Tilden and "reform" was made upon him by one Hartridge, a lawyer of this place, who went to Baker County specially commissioned by the agents of Tilden and Drew for this purpose. Additional evidence in regard to the election in Columbia County was taken. It was proved that the Democratic Sheriff of the county appeared on election day armed with a large number of warrants for the arrest of colored men on frivolous charges. These charges were made by Democrats, and many were arrested and kept in custody until the next day, and were then allowed to make their escape, the purpose of the arrest—prevention from voting—being answered. This and every other conceivable trick has been resorted to in this State to cheat colored men out of their votes, or to compel them to vote the Democratic ticket.

Considerable testimony was taken showing the bitter hostility existing in this city against Northern men who, although they never run for office, announce their Republican principles and make themselves prominent about election time. These Northern men have made Jacksonville what it is, the most prosperous city of the South, and by their capital and enterprise are building up the eastern portion of the State, and to such an extent is this the case, that if Northern men here were to withdraw their capital there would be nothing left but utter desolation. Yet they are contemptuously called carpet-baggers, Yankees, &c., and all because they don't join the Democratic Party. One gentleman named Abbot had a small Union flag hanging over his door, which was torn down and disgustingly besmeared, together with his house, because he rode in a carriage in a Republican procession. It was shown also that the Democrats withdrew their deposits from the First National Bank of this city because one of its officers appeared in a Republican procession. Another gentleman testified to the opprobrious language to which Northern men were subjected, to attempts to involve them in personal difficulties, which they avoided by ignoring the insults.

A list of 90 alleged Republican repeaters, in Duval County, was sworn to before the State Board by Democrats. The committee have had this list carefully compared with several poll-lists and find most of the persons named on it did not vote more than once, and the remainder not even once. The list has proved to be a pure invention, and yet it was the text for a fierce denunciation and impeachment of the vote of one of the stanchest Republican counties in the State, in which everything pertaining to the election, on the part of Republicans, was as fair and regular as it was possible to be.

The Sub-committee of the House, which went to Jackson County, arrived here last night, and the Democratic members admit they put their foot in it in going there. The idea of a Democratic committee going to investigate a county in which it was admitted on all sides that nothing but Democratic frauds were committed is somewhat ludicrous. The consequence was that every precinct they sat down to investigate revealed nothing but Democratic rascality. It was proved by Democratic witnesses at Friendship Church that the Republicans were swindled out of 143 votes. The Republican member of the committee asserts that at two precincts the Republicans were cheated out of a sufficient number of votes to have given a majority on the face of the returns for the whole State ticket, and yet Drew has been inaugurated Governor, thanks to the whitewash of the Supreme Court.

The other portion of the House Committee, which went to Alachua County, will return to-night, and it is supposed will start for Washington in a day or two. The Senate Committee will probably conclude its labors at this point to-morrow.

LOUISIANA AFFAIRS.

THE LEGISLATURE COUNTING THE VOTES FOR GOVERNOR—PACKARD'S MAJORITY 3,426—RIDICULOUS FARCE OF THE BOGUS BODY—COUNTING A STATEMENT BY THE DEMOCRATIC COMMITTEE AS RETURNS—EXTRACTS FROM GOV. KELLOGG'S MESSAGE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 2.—The excitement about the Statehouse yesterday has given place to quiet to-day. Both branches of the Legislature have been in session, with a quorum in each. Representative Brown, of Vernon Parish, a Democrat, presented himself this morning, and took his seat in the House. But little important business was done, except to announce the vote for Governor and Lieutenant Governor, in accordance with a clause in the State Constitution, which says: "The returns of every election shall be sealed up, and transmitted by the proper Returning Officer to the Secretary of State, who shall deliver them to the Speaker of the House of Representatives on the second day of the session of the General Assembly then to be holden, and that the members of the General Assembly shall meet in the House of Representatives to examine and count the votes." Acting upon this, the House and Senate proceeded to count and announce the vote as follows:

FOR GOVERNOR.

S. B. Packard	74,624
F. T. Nicholls	71,198

FOR LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR.

C. C. Antoine	74,669
L. A. Wiltz	71,093

Mr. Packard will be installed as Governor next Monday.

The crowd of seceding members and others meeting at St. Patrick's Hall, and calling themselves a Legislature, realized their ridiculous position to-day when they came to count the votes for a Governor. The large hall, which is a ball-room, capable of holding 3,000 people, is called the House, and the little ante-room is called the Senate Chamber. A Mr. Jonas said to the people in the big hall that he had just applied to the Secretary of State of the Kellogg Government, and that officer had refused to surrender the election returns in his possession to the Speaker of this House. Upon that Col. Bush, Chairman of the meeting, announced that he had in his possession the returns made by the Secretary of State of the de jure Government, Gov. McEnery's. Anything was good enough, and the St. Patrick's Hall assembly proceeded to canvass a statement of votes made up by the Democratic State Central Committee, and announce that Nicholls and Wiltz had been elected Governor and Lieutenant Governor of Louisiana. And so they go on; yesterday, reconizing Gov. Kellogg as the lawful Governor and notifying him by committee that they were ready for business as a Legislature, and to-day, they claim to recognize Mr. McEnery and his invisible Secretary of State long enough to cover a count of votes. How long this farce will continue Heaven and the Democrats only know.

The Senate to-day adopted a resolution requesting the Governor to transmit immediately to Senators and Representatives in Congress these portions of his Message which referred to the political condition of the State. In that portion of his Message Gov. Kellogg traced in detail the history of the State since its reconstruction, asserting that the New-Orleans July riots of 1866 are still justified and approved. The Judge who refused to charge the jury in regard to them had been re-elected to the same office ever since; that the Grant Parish massacre was still regarded as a justifiable assertion of white supremacy, and that the whole political history of the party opposed to Republican principles in this State was characterized by one aim—the vesting of all political control in the hands of an aristocratic oligarchy, irrespective of the will of a majority of the people, and the practical nullification of the constitutional measures which accord to emancipated slaves the rights of citizens. He adds, it is argued with apparent plausibility that the disorders admitted to prevail to some of the Southern States are the result of the inefficiency of the Republican State authorities, and their inability to enforce the laws and bring the guilty parties to justice. It is pointed out that in Georgia and Alabama and other Southern States which have been redeemed, as it is called, from Republican rule, peace prevails and political murders are comparatively unknown. The very statement of this proposition carries with it confession of guilt. It discloses the fact that disorders in the South are created by the opponents of Republicanism for the purpose of obtaining control of the Government and until they obtain possession of the offices, whether they have such a majority of the legal voters as would justly entitle them to these offices or not. Political turmoil will continue, and no local tribunal can prevent or punish political offenses, while the controlling public sentiment among the more influential citizens sanctions, or at least connives at, these disorders. There seems to be but three ways by which peace can be maintained and the laws of the State and of the United States can be enforced in Louisiana against political offenders: First, the surrender of the State Government to the minority who controlled its destinies before the emancipation of the slaves; second, the acceptance by that minority, in good faith, of the Constitution and amendments which embrace the issues decided by the war; and, third, the enactment by Congress of such appropriate and valid legislation as will secure the enforcement of those amendments against organized, insidious, and desperate hostility.

THE INVESTIGATIONS.

The Senate and House Committees continued their investigations to-day, the former taking the testimony of several witnesses, who testified to intimidation. Mr. Marr, a prominent Democratic politician, testified to the mode of conducting the campaign. He thought a property qualification for colored men should have been required. The House Sub-committee examined a number of witnesses relative to Livingston Parish. Sylvester Symmes, Tax Collector, testified that the election was peaceable and quiet, and that his affidavit appearing in Sherman's report was prepared in the Custom-house, and made him say things he knew nothing about; he never knew of any armed organization there.

Ernst Cliff, colored, detailed before the Senate Sub-committee the arrest of John Gair, a prominent Republican of Baton Rouge, by a Sheriff's posse, on the charge of having poisoned Dr. Saunders' family, and to seeing him shot to death on the road by a body of men. Witness gave the names of some eight persons connected with the shooting, and said that he, Paul Johnson and others buried the body, despite of a warning not to do so; that Johnson was afterward carried off by armed men and never seen again; and that men came to his (witness') house, drove his wife and children out barefooted, and burned it.

Mr. Tidwell, the employer of Henry Pinkston, on being cross-examined by Mr. Oglesby, of the Senate Committee, said that Pinkston was a Radical negro. Witness had seen Pinkston's actions at a Republican meeting.

THE REPUBLICANS OF ILLINOIS.

THE ELECTION OF GOV. HAYES—A RESOLUTION UNANIMOUSLY ADOPTED—THE LEGISLATURE TO MEET TO-DAY—THE SENATORIAL CONTEST.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SPRINGFIELD, Jan. 2.—At the Republican caucus of members of the Illinois Legislature, held this evening, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, Desperate attempts are being made by prominent Democrats, under the direction of Samuel J. Tilden, to create a public opinion favorable to his ambitious schemes, and to forestall the action of Congress in the matter of the recording of the votes of the Electoral College, which attempts constitute a further chapter in the history of the political campaign conducted by Mr. Tilden for the purpose of capturing the Presidency, a campaign remarkable for craft, cunning, deception, and fraud; and, whereas, having been fairly defeated at the polls, by 185 Electoral votes, the partisan majority of the House of Representatives—a majority largely repudiated by the people at the recent election, and which will expire on the 4th of March—is engaged in an attempt to deprive the people of three States of their right to participate in the election of the chief magistrate, and thus to incorporate into our political system intimidation, assassination, and fraud, as means for the control of the National Government, which action is in direct contradiction of the spirit of the following resolution, introduced by Hon. Scott Lord, a prominent Democrat, and passed by the House of Representatives on the 10th of August, when the necessities of the Democratic Party required that the fears of the people of the North should be lulled:

Resolved, by the House, That all attempts by force, terrorism, intimidation, or otherwise, to interfere with the rights of citizens is condemned, and the guilty parties should receive condign and effectual punishment; therefore

Resolved, That the votes of the Electors cast show clearly the election of Rutherford B. Hayes, and William A. Wheeler as President and Vice President of the United States, and we insist that they shall be peacefully inaugurated by the further authorities of the Government, and any attempt to inflame the public mind or to resist such peaceful inauguration by force or any unlawful means, should be earnestly opposed in all proper ways by all good people and the authorities of the Government.

The Legislature will meet at noon to-morrow. Six members of the House who have been claimed as Democrats have announced themselves as Independents, and will vote as such in the Senatorial contest. The Democrats are enraged at the secession, and some of them declare they will vote for Logan rather than for an Independent, in case they cannot get a straight Democrat. There are now twelve Independents who hold the balance of power. Logan's chances are decidedly the best now, and it looks as if he may be re-elected, but it is not at all certain.

THE OHIO DEMOCRACY.

AN ARTIFICIAL INDIGNATION BREWING—BUT OF SUCH MINUTE PROPORTIONS THAT EVEN THE TILDENITES ARE DISHEARTENED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

COLUMBUS, Jan. 2.—As the 8th of January approaches the indications multiply that the Democratic indignation which is to be emitted on that day will be of an artificial character entirely. Information from different parts of the State as to the local meetings to chose delegates to the State Indignation Convention shows that they have generally been exceedingly tame and meagerly attended, the masses of the Democracy, and especially the better classes of them, not aspiring to office, having apparently lost interest in Mr. Tilden. There has been, and will be, some loud and bitter talk by disappointed expectants, but if Ohio Democrats have any serious intentions of violent resistance to Gov. Hayes' inauguration, they have not yet manifested it.

WADE HAMPTON'S MESSAGE.

JUDGE MACKAY'S RECENT VISIT TO GOV. HAYES—HE BELIEVES THAT PEACE AND PROSPERITY WILL RESULT TO THE SOUTH UNDER PRESIDENT HAYES' ADMINISTRATION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 2.—Judge Mackay, of South Carolina, whose mission in the North has given rise to so many speculations and comments, started for his home to-night. In conversation to-day with the editor of a leading Republican paper here, he stated that his object now is to see the color-line of the South broken; to have the two sections of the Union firmly united, upon a basis of the Constitution as it stands, and to put out of sight and hearing the effects and memories of the war. He does not hesitate to say that this can best be done under the Administration of Gov. Hayes. Under Tilden's administration, which he would have, he does not believe that it could be accomplished. His visit to Gov. Hayes was made in the interest of peace and harmony. He sought no promises, and made none beyond what was contained in Wade Hampton's letter, which he bore. The visit of Judge Mackay, and the opinions which he has freely expressed, has given rise to some anxiety on the part of the Enquirer, and other Democratic journals in this vicinity.

THE SHAM GOVERNOR TRYING TO "RAISE THE WIND"—A DEMAND FOR 10 PER CENT. OF LAST YEAR'S TAXES MADE ON HIS SUPPORTERS.

COLUMBIA, Jan. 2.—The following address has been issued by Wade Hampton:

COLUMBIA, S. C., Jan. 1, 1877.

In accordance with, and under the authority given by the annexed resolutions of the House of Representatives, I hereby call upon the faithful, law-abiding, and loyal citizens of South Carolina who desire to maintain the Government of their choice to come forward promptly and pay 10 per cent. of the amount of the tax paid by them last year. Due notice will be given to the citizens of each county of the appointment of some proper agent for the collection of the contribution here called for. The resolution of the House of Representatives authorized a call for 25 per cent. of last year's taxes, but all the moderate wants of the legitimate Government of the State can be supplied if the people will respond generally to the call here made for 10 per cent. The inmates of the charitable and penal institutions of the State are now suffering for want of proper supplies, and it is to meet their needs, which appeal to us so strongly, that funds are now required. It is for the people of South Carolina now to determine whether they will support the Government they have installed, or the attempted usurpation, which is only upheld by the bayonets of the Federal troops. I am not the representative of the people of the State, and to their decision I shall bow with profound respect. As long as they choose to support me as their duly elected Governor I shall maintain that position, and, if supported by them, I feel safe in assuring them that their right will soon be firmly established and fully recognized. Our cause is just, and we have left it to the highest legal tribunal in the State and of the United States. I adjure our people, therefore, to be steadfast, law-abiding, and peaceful, and I pray that the new year will bring to them the blessings of peace and of prosperity.

WADE HAMPTON,
Governor of South Carolina.

STATE LEGISLATURES.

MEETING OF THE PENNSYLVANIA LEGISLATURE—BOTH HOUSES FULLY ORGANIZED WITH REPUBLICAN OFFICERS—THE OHIO GENERAL ASSEMBLY—GOV. HAYES' ANNUAL MESSAGE — OTHER LEGISLATURES IN SESSION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HARRISBURG, Jan. 2.—The Legislature of Pennsylvania met at 12 o'clock to-day, that being the time fixed by law for the beginning of the session. The Senate was organized by the election of Hon. J. C. Newmeyer, of Allegheny, as President pro tem., and Thomas B. Cochran, of Lancaster, as Chief Clerk. Senator Newmeyer encountered but little opposition. The contest in the Senate centered on the Chief Clerkship, Mr. Cochran's opponent up to a few days ago being ex-Senator E. W. Davis, of Philadelphia. When the latter gentleman discovered his chances were slim he withdrew, leaving his opponent a clear field. The contest for the Speakership of the House was sharp and bitter to the end. There were a number of candidates for this position. Philadelphia, of course, presented her candidate in the person of Mr. Harry Hubb, whose strongest opponent was Mr. E. R. Myer, of Bradford. Until quite recently Mr. Hubb's chances of election were excellent; but the press of Philadelphia, led by the Mayor and Councils of that city, sprung the question of the removal of the Capitol to Memorial Hall. This movement, which was both premature and ill-advised, proved the destruction of Mr. Hubb. Although that gentleman is on record as an opponent of the removal project, he was unable to withstand the storm of opposition the agitation of the question brought upon him, and he fell a victim to the folly of his friends. Mr. Myer was chosen Speaker of the House, while in the distribution of the subordinate offices Philadelphia received nothing in either house higher than a transcribing clerkship, and she was glad to get that. It has been the habit of her delegation to secure the lion's share of the spoils, but they sit in sackcloth and ashes to-day. Philadelphia has probably been too severely punished, but the capital removal project has received its quietus for this session at least. The Governor's Message will not be presented to the Legislature until to-morrow. It is expected the present session will be a brief one. With a majority of 12 in the Senate and 30 in the House, the Republicans are in a position to fulfil the letter and an infant are known to be lost, but a boat-load of passengers is missing. The Captain's boat and one other has arrived here. Steamers have gone out in search of the missing passengers. The mails were lost.

MARBLEHEAD, Jan. 2.—The schooner May Queen, of Gloucester, went ashore on Coney Ledge this morning, and will be a total loss. The schooner Caress, ashore at First Cove, was floated off to-day.

THE WEATHER.

INDICATIONS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3—1 A. M.—For the South Atlantic and Middle States, rising barometer, lower temperature than on Tuesday, and clear weather will prevail, with north-westerly winds in the former, and backing to westerly or south-westerly in the latter.

For New-England, rising barometer, diminishing north west and westerly winds, colder, and generally clear weather.

A CITIZEN OF LOWELL MISSING.

The Lowell (Mass.) Courier of Monday, 1st inst., says: "There seems to be but very little doubt that Mr. Jonathan Rice, of this City, was on the ill-fated train that broke through the bridge at Ashtabula. Mr. Rice left this City on Thursday afternoon by the Lowell and Framingham Road, and took the train for Chicago at South Framingham at 6 o'clock. He intended to visit Mr. Alfred Scott at Mendota, Ill., and expected to arrive there Saturday night. A telegram was sent to Mr. Scott, and he replied yesterday he had not arrived. Mr. Edward Hosmer, a partner of Mr. Rice, and Mr. George Cheney left Boston on the 5 o'clock train last evening for Ashtabula to learn the fate of Mr. Rice if possible. Mr. Rice was born in Sudbury, and was 58 years of age. He came to Lowell in 1839, and has been in the provision business ever since. For 29 years he has been in company with his brother, Mr. Henry M. Rice. He has a wife and two daughters, who are in great distress over his supposed fate. There is a possibility, however, that he may have been on another train, though failure to hear from him leads his friends to fear the worst."

THE WRECKED SHIP CIROASSIAN.

The bodies of the fourteen drowned men of the wrecked ship Circassian, found ashore near Montauk, opposite Ditch Plain, four miles east of Montauk Light, were taken in charge by the Coroner on Monday, and an inquest was held by Esquire Tuthill, of East Hampton. A verdict of accidental drowning was rendered. The men identified were Capt. Lewis, of the Coast Wrecking Company; Capt. Richard Williams, of the Circassian; Euan Johnston, third mate, and two of the apprentice boys of the Circassian. Among the other bodies not yet identified are five of the Shinnecock Indians. It was considered probable that two others were Luke Stillman and Philip Kearns. C. W. Nichols, of the Coast Wrecking Company, will go to Montauk to-day to identify the men of the Coast Wrecking Company and bring them to this City, where the company will see that all are accorded a proper burial.

CAUCUS NOMINATIONS AT HARTFORD.

HARTFORD, Jan. 2.—Republican caucuses to-night nominated W. P. Hanscom for Clerk of the House. After waiting until midnight for the arrival of members on snow-bound trains, the other nominations were postponed until 9 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The Democrats have nominated C. B. Bewers, of New-Haven, for President pro tem. of the Senate, and John Fenhsm, of Litchfield, for Clerk; also, H. B. Graves, of Litchfield, for Speaker of the House, and E. H. Barbour, of Norwalk, and J. D. Plunkett, of New-Haven, for Clerks.

TRAVEL BLOCKADED IN RHODE ISLAND.

PROVIDENCE, Jan. 2.—The drifting snow has seriously interrupted railroad travel. The New-York mail due here at 4 P. M. had not arrived at midnight. Four trains are blocked on the Stonington Railroad. The morning train from Hartford arrived here about 11 o'clock to-night. The Boston and Worcester roads are clear.

TERRIFIC GALE ON THE FRENCH COAST.

PARIS, Jan. 2.—A tremendous gale has been raging on the Atlantic coast of France. Two villages were threatened with destruction by high water. Several lives have been lost. One of the telegraph cables between France and England has parted.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

THE CONFERENCE AT CONSTANTINOPLE—THE FOURTH SITTING—AN ADJOURNMENT TILL THURSDAY.

LONDON, Jan. 2.—A dispatch to the Daily Telegraph from Pera states that Monday's sitting of the conference was very brief. The Turkish delegates declared they had no authority to discuss the questions of an International Commission and a gendarmerie. The conference adjourned until Thursday next. The Turkish Cabinet Council will meantime deliberate upon the Porte's definite answer to the propositions of the powers.

A dispatch from Constantinople dated Monday evening, says the fourth sitting of the plenary conference was held to-day. The Marquis of Salisbury expressed the views of the Plenipotentiaries upon the Turkish counter proposals. During the discussion the Turkish delegates enumerated the points upon which they did not consider they could negotiate. These were chiefly the organization of a local gendarmerie with foreign participation, the question of an international commission, and an extension of Servian territory. The Plenipotentiaries asked if this declaration was tantamount to absolute refusal. The Turkish delegates replied that they must refer to the Porte. The next sitting of the conference is fixed for Thursday, when the Porte will give a definitive reply. The Marquis of Salisbury visited Midhat Pasha, the Grand Vizier, after the conference.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 2.—The Turkish delegates to the conference have not only declared that they cannot discuss certain points of the proposals made by the powers, but their counter-proposals differ completely from the scheme agreed upon by the Plenipotentiaries. It is stated that Gen. Ignatieff, the Russian Plenipotentiary, has declared that he cannot discuss the Turkish proposals, and in this is supported by the other Plenipotentiaries. Thursday's sitting will probably be decisive.

THE POWERS AND TURKEY—A CRISIS IMPENDING.

LONDON, Jan. 2.—A dispatch from Constantinople, received to-night, says at Monday's sitting of the conference the Turks, in addition to the points already mentioned, refused to accept the proposal that the official language of each district should be that of the majority of the inhabitants thereof. The Marquis of Salisbury addressed the conference with warmth, condemning the obstinacy of the Porte. Although another sitting is appointed for Thursday but little hope of an understanding is entertained. The Plenipotentiaries have intimated their intention if the Porte persists in resisting the proposals of the powers, to quit Constantinople. Gen. Ignatieff has asked Safvet Pasha for authorization for a Russian man-of-war to enter the Bosphorus to convey him home. Safvet has granted the authorization, and if the efforts to effect an understanding fail Ignatieff will depart on Saturday.

Another dispatch dated Constantinople, Tuesday evening, states that at the interview between Lord Salisbury and Midhat Pasha after the sitting of the conference yesterday the conversation became very animated. In consequence of Salisbury's reproaches the Grand Vizier declared he was ready to resign, as he could not agree to conditions incompatible with the independence and integrity of Turkey. Lord Salisbury urged that it was to the interest of Turkey to accept the proposals of the powers. Midhat replied that the Porte might make concessions upon some points, but would reject all which were contrary to the dignity of the Empire. After this interview a Cabinet Council was held and Midhat Pasha visited all the Plenipotentiaries. Count Chaudordy was to have an audience with the Sultan to-day. A council of Turkish Ministers will be held to-morrow to decide upon the resolutions to be communicated to the conference on Thursday.

The reports are confirmed that Gen. Ignatieff and Lord Salisbury will quit Constantinople immediately if the Porte refuses the proposals of the powers. Military preparations are proceeding with activity. The Greek inhabitants of Philippopolis have commissioned their delegates in Constantinople to formally protest before the Plenipotentiaries against assimilation of the Greek population of Philippopolis with the Bulgarians.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—The Standard's dispatch from Belgrade reports that Gen. Nikitine on Monday dismissed the Russian and foreign officers whom he had engaged, and with Dandeville, the Czar's Adjutant, will soon return to Russia. The Russian soldiers who remain in Servia will be incorporated in the Servian Army. The Skuptschina will assemble immediately to vote the Budget of 1877. The question of concluding peace with Turkey will probably be raised at the same time.

The Standard's Berlin dispatch says it is reported from St. Petersburg that Gen. Ignatieff has already re-embarked the archives of the Embassy.

The Daily News' special from Constantinople says somebody is encouraging the Turks to resist. Some believe Austria is doing so secretly. A Vienna dispatch to the News states that Gen. Ignatieff voted for the prolongation of the armistice on the understanding that it should apply only to Servia and Montenegro, and that no hostilities carried on elsewhere, should be considered in violation of the engagement. A telegram from Pesth to the same journal reports that Gen. Nikitine has been recalled by order of the Czar, and that all the Russian volunteers must leave Servia before Jan. 15.

The Daily Telegraph's special from Pera gives additional details of what passed at the interview between Midhat Pasha and Lord Salisbury, showing that the language used was very emphatic. Midhat declared the Sultan would uphold his rights and put his trust in God.

The Times' correspondent at Paris, discussing the various rumors concerning the condition of the Russian Army, says the truth is, the Army continues to be organized with great rapidity. The men are neither so unhealthy nor so discouraged as they have been represented to be, and will be perfectly ready to take the field in two months, provided a capable General is placed at their head. The real complaint of the Grand Duke Nicholas is inefficiency. The moderation of Russia is not caused by military weakness, but by her desire to throw the blame of provoking war on Turkey.

SPECIAL REL

MONDAY NIGHT'S STORM.

ITS EFFECTS ON LAND AND SEA.

ONE OF THE SEVEREST AND MOST EXTENSIVE SNOW-STORMS FOR MANY YEARS—THE STREETS BLOCKADED AND CITY TRAVEL RETARDED—RAILROAD TRAINS HOURS BEHIND TIME — THE STORM IN BROOKLYN, ON LONG ISLAND AND IN NEW-JERSEY.

The storm of Monday night and yesterday morning was one of the severest and most extensive that has occurred for many years. Its effects upon travel have been felt far to the northward, eastward and westward, and to a very unusual distance south of Philadelphia, and up to a late hour last night the mails arriving at the Post Office in this City were coming in very much behind their schedule time. The snow fell till long past daybreak, but the wind continued all day long to whirl and whisk it about, so that it was carried in fleecy clouds along the streets and was swept in glistening particles over the heads of the pedestrians who floundered through the banks in the streets. In the side streets, where there was little traffic, the snow lay in clean, white sheets. Along the avenues it was soon converted by the snow-sweepers of the horse railroads and the liberal application of salt—when it could be applied without observation—into a mass of powdery brown dust or slush. Double teams were scarcely able to draw the overloaded cars, and for two or three hours there was vexatious delay, thousands of growling and grumbling passengers, profane language from drivers, and ineffectual attempts on the part of policemen to keep the obstructive cars in motion. It was difficult to learn exactly what depth of snow had fallen. In some places it was 15 inches deep, in others it was banked by the wind to the height of four or five feet. Prudent tenants who had sidewalks to clean marshaled their shoveling forces at an early hour, and found it easy to remove the fluffy snow. The sidewalks were in as bad a condition yesterday as they were on Monday for travelers afoot, the snow just hiding the treacherous hummocks of ice, and making it necessary for those unprovided with rubber shoes to exercise the utmost caution to preserve an upright position. The efforts of everybody to get rid of the snow that had fallen in their way resulted in some very funny scenes along the narrower streets, and in places where three or four railroad tracks ran side by side, the snow being thrown in the first instance from the sidewalks only to be hurled back by the snow-plow when it came along, and in the second instance it was tossed back and forth by the snow-plows from one track to another. No efforts were made by the railroad companies to cart it away, and should another storm of great severity occur soon it would, by adding to the present accumulation of snow in the streets, make them well-nigh impassible.

RAILROAD AND FERRY TRAVEL IMPEDED.

The snow caused delays to the trains on all railroads terminating in this and contiguous cities, the detentions being longest on those roads running to the North, west and South-west. The Pennsylvania Railroad was kept open all Monday night by the constant employment of engines and snow-plows, but when the snow drifted on Tuesday morning several delays occurred of from one half to three-quarters of an hour in length. Passengers over the road from the South report 15 inches of snow at Baltimore—an extraordinary fall for that neighborhood. The freight business was suspended until late yesterday, when the track was cleared, and the trains ran with their accustomed regularity, gangs of men having been at work all along the line with brooms, shovels, and picks. On the Central Railroad of New-Jersey traffic was impeded until 5 o'clock yesterday morning, when some plows were put to work all the way from Communipaw to Easton, and passenger trains ran nearly on time. The Morris and Essex local trains were delayed for two or three hours until noon, when the road was clear to Easton. The Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Road was blocked at Scranton, and the Midland Railroad trains were considerably delayed. The trains of the Erie Railroad between New-York, Paterson, and Suffern were delayed from half an hour to an hour. The Buffalo trains met with greater difficulty, and came in two hours or more late. The train leaving Buffalo at 5:15 A. M. did not reach the Eastern Division at Port Jervis until 1:50 P. M., but met with no farther detention this side of that point, arriving in Jersey City late in the evening. The most serious interruption seems to have occurred on the New-York Central Railroad, the mails from the West being delayed nine hours. The mails at the Post Office arrived with great irregularity. The mails from the South, over the Pennsylvania Railroad, due at 9:45 A. M., arrived at 3:15 P. M.; those from Philadelphia, due at 10:10 A. M., arrived at 12:50 P. M. The Western mail, due at 10:40 A. M., arrived at 7:20 P. M., and the Philadelphia mail, due at 11:50, did not get in until 6:35 P. M. The Erie Railway west mails due at 9:45 A. M. reached the Post Office at 12:45 P. M., those due at 11:07 P. M. came along at 1:50 P. M., and those usually arriving at 2:40 P. M. got in at 4:05 P. M. The Eastern mail on the New Jersey Central, due in the Post Office at 12:35, came in on time, and that due at 3:55 was an hour and 15 minutes late. No mails came over the Southern Railroad of New-Jersey, as no boats came up from Sandy Hook during the day. The New-Haven mail, due at 12:30, arrived at 1:35 P. M. On the Hudson River Railroad, the St. Louis mail, due at 10:30 A. M., arrived at the Post Office at 2:05 P. M.; that due at 11:10 came at 12:40 P. M., and that due at 3:45 P. M. did not arrive until 6:15 P. M. The Fall River mails came in at 2:40 P. M., instead of arriving early in the morning. The Eastern mail due at 6:30 A. M. arrived at 10:30 A. M., but did not bring the Shore Line mail, there being no connection. Toward night the delayed mails began arriving in masses, including the packages due early in the day, so that the Post Office authorities could scarcely tell exactly how much they had been delayed. It was thought, however, that it would take a day or two to restore the working of the department at this point to its usual order.

The first serious blockade of the East River with ice occurred yesterday morning, and served to increase the discomfort of travelers by the City cat lines in Brooklyn who were on their way to New-York. Fields of snow-covered ice, acres in extent, floated up the East River on the tide coming up in a solid mass that was avoided by the ferry-boats as too heavy and broad to be attacked. The delays occasioned by these floes varied in length from 15 minutes to half an hour. The Hunter's Point boats and the Roosevelt street boats were hemmed in until the steamer Galatea passed down through the field, crushing the barrier and making navigation comparatively easy for the ferry-boats. The turn of the tide carried the ice down stream again. For a time the scene was a very brilliant one on the East River. On the North River there was little delay on any of the ferries, but there were large cakes of floating ice that were carried by the tide in the way of the ferry-boats, driving them out of their way, and occasionally compelling them to wait until they had passed before proceeding on their way. As on the East River, the fields of ice were covered with a soft coating of snow, that glistened in the sun like a robe sprinkled with diamond dust.

THE STORM IN BROOKLYN AND ON LONG ISLAND.

In Brooklyn the street railroads were badly obstructed by the drifting snow, and the sidewalks were in many places rendered impassable. The Brooklyn Police Commissioners, fearing a sudden thaw that would overflow many basements and cellars, instructed Superintendent Campbell to order the Police to have the sidewalks and three feet of the gutters kept free of snow and ice. The President of the Fire Department recommended that a force of men be employed to clear away the snow from about the hydrants, nine out of ten of them being found so completely covered that it would be difficult to make connections with them in case of fire, and his suggestion was adopted by the Board of City Works. The Board of City Works ordered that the snow be removed from the neighborhood of the City Hall and Court-house, and that the sewer basins connected therewith be opened.

The snow blockade on Long Island was the worst that has been experienced for years. The snow fell to an average depth of from 18 inches to two feet all over the island. The through trains from Patchogue, Sag Harbor, Port Jefferson, and Greenport were delayed, especially the latter three. The Port Jefferson train was forced to cut through drifts from 10 to 15 feet deep; the Sag Harbor branch was entirely closed during the early part of the day, and the Greenport train, starting about four hours behind time, encountered immense drifts at Southold, and between Mattituck and Riverhead, and did not make Hunter's Point until late last evening. The 6:30 train from Locust Valley was four hours late, as was also the Port Jefferson train due at Hunter's Point at 9 o'clock. The Greenport Mail, on the Long Island Road, was coupled with the freight-train and drawn by two engines, and two engines were used on some of the other trains. The first train on the Brooklyn Central, from Jamaica for East New-York, succeeded in getting through considerably behind time, but in the return trip was stuck fast at Woodhaven.

NOTES OF THE STORM.

The storm did very little damage to shipping, so far as can be ascertained. Most of the vessels bound for this port were kept off from land by the fierce gales that have prevailed during the past week. When the snow began to fall on Monday afternoon there were only two or three craft in sight from Sandy Hook and the Highlands. These all got safely into the harbor. At 3 o'clock on the afternoon of New Year's Day the weather became so thick with the drifting snow that the lookouts at the Hook could discern nothing on the water, and a very little later could not even see the beach. Only one disaster was reported, which happened to an unknown sloop in the Lower Bay. She was discovered yesterday morning bottom upward in the south channel. It is not known at what time she was capsized, nor what became of the crew.

Throughout New-Jersey the storm was the severest known since 1859. Snow fell to the depth of a foot on a level. In many places along the Newark meadows it drifted heavily, and under the Orange Mountains, at Montrose, South Orange, Orange Valley, and Montclair, the drifts blockaded the roads to the depth of five or six feet, covering up fences and collecting in huge mounds against the sides of houses.

On Staten Island the snow fell in places nearly to the depth of two feet, drifting into banks so high that on many of the roads the mounds were six feet high, and travel was almost suspended. The trains on the Staten Island Railroad were delayed three hours. On the Shore Road the horse cars were taken off, and sleighs were substituted in their places.

The storm of Friday and the gale of Saturday morning were very severe in Jamaica Bay. A field of ice, which had covered the bay for several days, broke up and was driven with tremendous force by the wind, breaking everything with which it came in contact. The boat-houses of the Idlewild Club were set afloat and broken in pieces, the yachts washed ashore, and their rigging damaged. The club-house was almost completely wrecked, the ice piling up around it to the height of 15 feet. The keeper, his wife, and child escaped by a boat over the creek behind the boat-house, having nothing upon them but their night clothing, in which they were rowed two miles before reaching a dwelling. They were badly frost-bitten. The club-house of Col. Degraw, below Hassock Creek, was partly washed away and damaged to the extent of $2,000.

TWELVE INCHES OF SNOW IN WASHINGTON

— PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE CROWDED WITH CONVEYANCES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 2.—Washington has worn an unusual aspect to-day, by reason of the fall of snow yesterday and last night, which must have been near, or quite, 12 inches in depth. It is said that no such a fall of snow has taken place here since 1857.

The clearing of the sidewalks has caused the piling up of snow banks along the curb-stones from three to five feet deep. The street cars run in deep troughs that have been plowed out, and the city altogether looks as if it were in the latitude of Boston. The avenue is covered with a great variety of conveyances, called sleighs, which, in curious antiquity and oddity of form, would do credit to a Canadian village. Everything that can be dragged along is pressed into the service. Already the length of the sleighing season has been unprecedented.

SNOW-SLIDE AND LOSS OF LIFE—THE ROOF OF A LIVERY-STABLE BROKEN IN—

TRAINS ON MANY RAILROADS DELAYED.

SALT LAKE CITY, Jan. 2.—A snow-slide occurred near Alta on Dec. 28, which destroyed the Wellington Mine Boarding-house and buried the inmates. Their loss was not discovered till last evening. To-day two men were taken from the wreck in an exhausted condition. Four more persons were buried, and are supposed to have perished.

BOSTON, Jan. 2.—The roof of the carriage-house of A. Garcelon's livery stable, on Brimmer street, fell in to-day from the great weight of snow upon it. Twenty-five carriages and sleighs were demolished.

Total damage, $10,000; no insurance.

HARTFORD, Jan. 2.—Julius Nott, a well-known citizen of Bristol, while breaking paths this forenoon, was struck by an engine at the crossing of the Hartford, Providence, and Fishkill Railroad, and died this afternoon. He was about 60 years of age. Snow fell here to the depth of two feet. Trains between this city and Providence were delayed nine hours, the first train from Providence arriving at 8 o'clock to-night. On the Connecticut Valley Road, the Saybrook train due at 9 o'clock A. M., arrived at 2 P. M. The trains on the Connecticut Western Road were on time all day. On the New-York and Boston line, the first train from New-York arrived here two hours late. The first express from Boston and the second, united, arrived here six hours late, and are due in New-York about 11 o'clock. Delays were caused by a blockade on the Harlem Road, and an engine was off the track on the Boston and Albany Road at Charlton.

ST. ALBANS, Jan. 2.—The snow-storm has not ceased here yet; there are signs, however, that it is approaching.

RICHMOND, Jan. 2.—Snow fell throughout yesterday until midnight, reaching a depth of 10 inches. The trains due here last night and this morning were all delayed several hours. The weather to-day is clear and pleasant.

BOSTON, Jan. 2.—The greatest snow-fall of the season occurred in this region last night, and on every road trains are delayed. On several roads no inward trains had reached here at 10 o'clock this morning.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Jan. 2.—Another severe snow-storm prevailed all night along the Hudson, and all trains are delayed. The storm is heaviest south of here. Nearly a foot of snow has fallen.

RICHMOND, Jan. 2.—Advices from the western portions of Virginia state that the snow is from 18 to 20 inches deep. Fourteen freight trains are snow-bound between Lynchburg and Bristol, Tenn., on the Atlantic, Mississippi and Ohio Railroad. Trains on the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad are also blockaded. The storm is the heaviest known in Virginia for a number of years.

THE SLEIGHING SEASON.

The fine sleighing of the past week, which has filled St. Nicholas avenue and Harlem lane to overflowing with fast trotters and stylish equipages, was materially interfered with by the snow-storm of New Year's evening. Yesterday the "turn-out" was very slim. The fall of nearly a foot on Monday night effectually prevented any attempts at speed, and the sleighing was chiefly confined to family parties, with whom comfort was more of an object than show. At Lambert's Clubhouse, where on Saturday afternoon more than 200 sleighs were gathered at one time, hardly a single conveyance was to be seen, while the straggling cutters and sleighs plowing their way slowly along the avenue appeared indicative of anything but exhilaration on the part of their occupants. Among the few owners of fast horse-flesh who braved the discomforts of the road were the following: Mr. William H. Harbeck drove a spanking team, composed of his brown horse Windermere and his new black colt, name unknown. Mr. Jacob Reed drove a handsome Vanderbilt colt, a high bay, with stylish action and rapid pace. Mr. Sheppard F. Knapp, of Washington Heights, appeared behind a neat team of colts, a sorrel and a bay. Mr. William Johnson drove the fast bay mare Lady Bunker, which he is training for the turf next season. A few other fast teams appeared during the day, but not in sufficient numbers to elicit comment. The most experienced drivers say that it will take three or four days of constant travel to bring the sleighing back to the standard of Saturday and Sunday last. In case of a thaw to-day or to-morrow, and a subsequent "cold snap," the road will be in admirable condition.

DEATH IN A SNOW-BANK.

An officer of the Thirteenth Precinct yesterday morning found the dead body of a man almost buried beneath a bank of snow which had accumulated under a partially dismantled coupé at the corner of Corlears and Cherry streets. The coupé was labeled "No. 993," and an investigation proved that the dead man was Christopher Walker, a hackman, aged 45, who resided with his family, consisting of a wife and five children, at No. 251 First avenue. As the shaft of the coupe was not found attached to the vehicle, it is presumed that the horse disengaged it, and either ran or strayed away. Walker had been out throughout New Year's Day, driving a party of New Year's callers, and it is supposed that while returning to his home in an intoxicated condition he fell from his seat and died under the snow.

REMOVING SNOW FROM THE STREETS.

The Police Commissioners held a meeting yesterday forenoon, at which, in addition to the transaction of some routine business, the question of removing snow and ice from the streets was informally discussed. "Commissioner Nichols, Chairman of the Committee on Street-cleaning, stated, after the adjournment of the board, that no definite measures looking to the immediate removal of the present accumulations of snow in the streets were adopted, the Commissioners deeming it prudent to postpone action until they ascertained conclusively whether the appropriation for street-cleaning purposes will be sufficient to cover the additional expense. Small gangs of men from the Street-cleaning Bureau were yesterday engaged in cleaning the cross-walks on Broadway and a few other prominent thoroughfares.

A NEW PHASE OF THE SALT NUISANCE.

The Board of Health yesterday received a communication from Mr. N. Marc, complaining of the practice of cleaning out the cars of the Third Avenue Railroad with salt, for the purpose of removing the snow which accumulates in them during the day. This practice Mr. Marc says keeps the floors of the cars in an intolerably wet and cold condition.

STABBED IN THE HEAD.

Shortly after 1 o'clock yesterday morning, while Thomas Brown, of No. 341 West Thirty-second street, was on his way home, he was assaulted at Seventh avenue and Twenty-sixth street by a stranger, who knocked him down and stabbed him in the head with a pocket-knife, inflicting a very severe wound. Brown was taken home and his assailant escaped.

A. T. STEWART'S WILL.

A NEW SET OF CLAIMANTS APPEAR.

MR. STEWART'S RELATIVES IN IRELAND SUING TO HAVE THE CASE REOPENED —AFFIDAVITS BY FIRST COUSINS OF THE DEAD MILLIONAIRE—A MASS OF EVIDENCE OF AN IMPOSING CHARACTER.

Another complication has arisen regarding the will of the late A. T. Stewart, which most people supposed was settled, at least so far as any contestants were concerned. This time the papers come directly from Ireland, and the claimants set forth, in affidavits attached thereto, that they are first cousins to the late A. T. Stewart. The papers are in the hands of Mr. S. J. Kneeland, of the law firm of Kneeland & Carter, No. 320 Broadway, and have not yet been filed in court. They have no connection whatever with the claim of the Baileys, of Brooklyn, although the same branch of the Stewart family is represented. One of the affidavits in the case is as follows:

In the goods of Alexander Turney Stewart, late of New-York, in the United States of America, merchant, deceased. I, Thomas Begley, of Magheracal, near Lisburn, in the County of Antrim, Ireland, late national school teacher, make oath and say, as follows:

First—That I am aged 75 years and upward. I was acquainted with the late Alexander Turney Stewart, of New-York City, the deceased in this matter, and was intimately acquainted with him before he left this country on his youth to proceed to America. While in this country, and before settling in America, and in his youth, he resided for a considerable time with a farmer named Thomas Lamb, of Magheracal, aforesaid, several of whose relatives are still alive, and with whom the deceased frequently resided for brief intervals when on visits to this country.

Second—I say I was a first cousin of the full blood, and one of the heirs-at-law and next of kin of the said Alexander Turney Stewart, my mother, Jane Begley, being a lawful sister of Alexander Stewart, the father of the said deceased in this manner.

Third—I say that Thomas Stewart, formerly of Stoneyford, near Rock Chapel, County of Antrim, farmer, was my grandfather, and also grandfather of the said Alexander Turney Stewart, deceased. He died, leaving as his lawful children (1) John Stewart, (2) Alexander Stewart, father of the deceased in this matter, (3) Thomas Stewart, (4) William Stewart, (5) James Stewart, (6) Mary Stewart, (7) Jane Stewart, and (8) Ann Stewart.

Fourth—I say that John Stewart (No. 1 above named) married Rebecca Wilson, of Greerstown, by whom he had eight children, two at least of whom are still living, videlicet, Mary and Ann. Alexander Stewart (No. 2 above named) married Margaret Turney, of Magheracal, by whom he had an only child, videlicet, Alexander Turney Stewart, deceased, the deceased in this matter. Thomas Stewart (No. 3 above named) married a woman whose surname I do not now remember, but her Christian name was Betsy, (familiarly Betty,) by whom he had three children, all now deceased, who with their mother are interred in the burying-ground of the Society of Friends, at Hillsborough, in the County of Down. Their father is interred in the churchyard at Magheragal, William Stewart (No. 4 above named) I know little of, and William Stewart, further than that there were several children. James Stewart, (No. 5 above named,) I know had children, but cannot say what became of them. Mary Stewart, (No. 6 above named,) married James Bailey, by whom she had several children, but I only remember James and Ann. Jane Stewart, (No. 7 above named,) married William Begley, my father, by whom she had three children, videlicet, Thomas Begley, (myself,) William Begley, and Mary Begley. Ann Stewart, (No. 8 above named,) went to Scotland, and, I heard, got married there and had several children. This Ann Stewart was lame of one leg and blind of an eye, lost in small-pox.

Fifth—My mother, Jane Begley, otherwise Stewart, died during a visit of the late Alexander Turney Stewart to this country. My father, by whom she had three children, videlicet, Thomas Begley, (myself,) William Begley, and Mary Begley. Ann Stewart, (No. 8 above named,) went to Scotland, and, I heard, got married there and had several children. This Ann Stewart was lame of one leg and blind of an eye, lost in small-pox.

Sixth—I have four sons and three daughters living, videlicet, James William, George, Jacob, Benson, Mary Jane, Margaret Ann, and Georgina Rosina. My brother William is in Scotland. Robert Rosey and his children, Thomas, Alexander, William, and Mary Jane, who are still living. My sister married and went to Scotland years ago, and I know little of them.

Sworn before me at Ballycarickmaddy, in the County of Antrim, this Sixth day of July, 1876, a Justice of the Peace in and for the said County, and I know the deponent. W. T. B. LYONS, J. P.

County of Antrim.

Attached to the affidavit is the certificate of James M. Dunnan, United States Consul at Belfast, Ireland, certifying to the fact that Mr. W. T. B. Lyons is and was a regular Justice of the Peace of the County of Antrim, Ireland, and that the deponent is, to the best of his belief, the person whom he represents himself to be, and worthy of credit. This certificate is dated Nov. 8, 1876. There is also an accompanying affidavit made by Mary Begley, of Lisburn, in the County of Antrim, Ireland, in which she swears that she is 70 years old and upward; that she knew A. T. Stewart, deceased, when he lived with Thomas Lamb, farmer, at Magheragal, before coming to this country; that she is also first cousin to said A. T. Stewart, being the lawful daughter of John Stewart, brother of Alexander Stewart, the father of the said Alexander T. Stewart. The remainder of the affidavit is similar to the preceding one, and corroborates it in every particular, even to the statement that Alexander T. Stewart, deceased, several years ago attended the funeral of his (and her) aunt Jane, in Belfast, Ireland, and paid the expenses thereof. Among the papers are several letters, written by various persons in Ireland, indorsing the relationship of James Begley to the late A. T. Stewart, and the legitimacy of his claim of heirship to his estate. One of these is dated at Lisburn, Ireland, July 14, 1876, and signed J. McCall, in which the writer says that he had, some weeks before, in course of a letter to Judge Hilton, alluded very minutely to Thomas Begley, and indorsed him as one whom he had long known, and who had taken a high place in the ranks of public teachers, and also referred to his knowledge of his direct relationship to A. T. Stewart, and his belief that he is one of the few persons there who have really any legitimate claim on A. T. Stewart or Judge Hilton. Another letter is signed by John Smyth Brown, minister of the Presbyterian church of Marygall, and is dated Brookhill, Jan. 2, 1876, in which the writer states that he has known Thomas Begley intimately during the last 40 years; that he is a member of his [Mr. Brown's] church, has always borne an excellent character, and has always been recognized by all his old neighbors as a first cousin of the late Mr. Stewart, of New-York. Another letter is signed J. R. Leebody, M. A., the honorable Irish Society's Professor of Mathematics in Magee College, Londonderry, in which the writer states that he has known Mr. Thomas Begley from his childhood, and has always had the highest opinion of his ability and moral worth. He was also at one time a pupil of Mr. Begley, and gives him a high character as a teacher, &c. Another letter is from Mr. George Begley, a son of Thomas Begley, in which he states that Mrs. McCall was well known to Mr. Stewart, and, he believed, to Judge Hilton too. He was the gentleman who, in 1865, was so prominent a member of the committee to whom Mr. Stewart consigned the cargo of the bark Mary Edson, loaded with relief for the sufferers by the famine in Ireland. There is also a letter signed A. Lamb, whom George Begley states he thinks is a cousin of the farmer Lamb with whom Mr. Stewart is said to have resided before he came to America. Mr. Lamb is a member of the Society of Friends. He states that he has already written to Judge Hilton of the different relatives of A. T. Stewart, so far as he knew them, and that in the list he had included Thomas Begley's and his brother's families.

In answer to a question as to what he intended to do in the matter, Mr. Kneeland, who has been appointed attorney for the Irish heirs included in the proceedings in question, said yesterday that the said now pending in the General Term of the Supreme Court, in which the Baileys, of Brooklyn, were the claimants, had been instituted for the benefit of all the heirs of A. T. Stewart, and that consequently he was acting with Mr. Bartlett, the attorney for the Baileys. When that case comes up for hearing, on that appeal, which was an appeal from the decision of Surrogate Calvin in refusing to open the probate of the will and hear testimony on the claim of Mr. Bailey, Mr. Kneeland said that he would take such steps as he deemed necessary to protect the rights of his clients. He said that he was not at liberty to divulge the nature of the evidence by which he expected to establish the claim of his clients to a share of the dead millionaire's property, but that the case was a much stronger one than most people had heretofore supposed. He said that the real fight was between the lawful heirs of Mr. Stewart and Judge Hilton, and that there were circumstances connected with the position at present occupied by Judge Hilton, as a legatee of A. T. Stewart, which would surprise a great many people if he was even allowed to bring out the merits of the case, which he would do if ever the present suit was allowed to go to trial. So far as the heirs are concerned, however, he said that there was no disposition on the part of any one to molest her in any manner whatever.

TRIAL OF A POLICE SERGEANT.

Sergt. Augustus Miller, formerly of the Twenty-second Precinct, whose case has been so frequently mentioned in THE TIMES, appeared before the Police Commissioners yesterday for trial. He stands charged with having played cards with Roundsman Raynor and Patrolmen Leavy and Smith in the back room of a liquor store, at the corner of Sixtieth street and Eleventh avenue, on the evening of Feb. 3, 1875, when he should have been on patrol duty. After the accused had been sworn and admitted the service of the papers in the case, his counsel moved to dismiss the complaint, on the ground that the board had relinquished jurisdiction by the passage of a resolution on May 8, 1876, dismissing all charges against members of the force then pending before the board which had been preferred previous to Jan. 1, 1876, at which date the present board came into existence. The case against Sergt. Miller, the counsel contended, came under and was included in that resolution, and therefore the board had no jurisdiction. President Smith, after consulting with his colleagues, denied the motion and ordered the trial to proceed. Inspector McDermott was then sworn and testified that on the evening of Feb. 3, 1875, while on duty at the Central Office he was informed by a stranger that Sergt. Miller and several other officers were playing cards in the back room of Maher's liquor store on the southeast corner of Sixtieth street and Eleventh avenue. He immediately proceeded to the place indicated and entered there at 8:30 P. M. On entering the back room he saw Sergt. Miller and three patrolmen sitting around a table, each of the latter having one of their hats and coats and were playing cards. Owing to the absence of a witness for the prosecution, the trial was adjourned until Saturday next.

THE BATTLE OF PRINCETON.

THE ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE EVENT TO BE CELEBRATED TO-DAY—HISTORICAL REMINISCENCES OF THE ENGAGEMENT.

The one hundredth anniversary of the battle of Princeton, N. J., occurs to-day, and the event will be celebrated by a sham battle at Princeton. The final preparations for the combat were made by the National Guardsmen yesterday. The Continental troops on this occasion will be represented by Col. Allen's First Regiment of Newark, and Company C, (Phil Kearney Guards,) of the Third Regiment. Gen. J. Madison Drake, of Elizabeth, will command the Patriot Army, and the British and Hessian troops will be composed of three companies of militia from Princeton, and ten companies representing the N. J. S. N. G. The engagement will be opened at 11 o'clock this morning. The contending forces will occupy the same ground south of Princeton as on the day of battle, and the contest will terminate precisely at 1 o'clock. The victors and the vanquished will subsequently be entertained by the citizens of Princeton.

After the daring achievement of Washington at Trenton on the 26th of December, 1776, Cornwallis delayed his departure for England, whither he had intended going to announce that the American rebellion had been put down, and started into New-Jersey, taking with him a large number of fresh troops to form a junction with Count Donop, who was in command of the Hessians and British in the western part of that State. Having combined the two bodies of troops, he started toward Trenton, where Washinton was stationed with about 5,000 men. At Princeton, where Donop had thrown up earthworks, Cornwallis left a force of three regiments, and then pushed on toward Trenton. This was on Jan. 2. The British were met at Maidenhead by American skirmishers, who kept up a galling fire upon their foes. During their retreat Gen. Green, with 600 men and several field pieces, checked Cornwallis, and held him for some time, about a mile from Trenton. The British, however, forced their way, and Green's command retreated in good order, and, having joined in Trenton by Washington, passed beyond the bridge over the Assanpink Creek. On the further side of the bridge the American Army was drawn up in imposing array, its flank well guarded by artillery. Cornwallis made an attempt to cross the bridge, but was repulsed. After trying to flank the Americans on their left, and having tested their mettle, he determined, against the advice of some of his officers, to rest his men, and begin the battle anew on the morning of Jan. 3. That evening Washington determined to leave Trenton secretly and overcome, if possible, the British magazines at Brunswick. Accordingly he started his Army along the south side of the Assanpink toward Princeton. He had previously learned that no British troops were in the way. The march was begun soon after midnight, and at sunrise the Americans were in the south-eastern outskirts of Princeton. There Washington's detached wing, under Major Mawhood, threw down the bridge over Stony Brook, on the main road to Trenton. When Mercer was nearing the bridge he was observed by Mawhood, who commanded one of two regiments that Cornwallis had called from Princeton on the previous night, and which were on their way to Trenton. That officer wheeled his command, and after forming a junction with another body of British, attacked the patriots. Mawhood's Artillery and the light field pieces of the Americans were first engaged, and then the patriot riflemen climbed a fence, confronted their foes, and delivered a telling volley. The British returned the fire and then charged precipitately. The riflemen fled, leaving their field-pieces and a number of their gallant officers behind. The latter cried hard to recall their men, and recklessly exposed themselves to the enemy in order to inspire the men. They failed, however, and Col. Haslit, Neal, and Fleming were killed, and Gen. Mercer was fatally wounded while fighting bravely. When the panic of the patriots was at its height Washington arrived on the ground with reinforcements. He rode within 30 yards of the British and reined up between them and his forces. Both sides fired a volley while he was there, but he was not hurt. Hitchcock's brigade and Hand's riflemen now decided the fortunes of the day by flanking the British and driving them in a panic several miles beyond Stony Brook. Washington captured several field-pieces and many of Mawhood's men. The other British regiment was thrown by New-England troops, under Stark and others, into the Princeton College buildings. They were afterward dislodged, and in consusion fled to Brunswick. The British lost in the short but vigorous battle over 500 men killed and captured, while the American loss would have been trifling if the brave officers before mentioned had been spared.

Cornwallis was astounded in the early morning of Jan. 3 to discover the departure of Washington. He was still more alarmed when he heard the sounds of conflict coming from Princeton. Fearing the loss of the magazines at Brunswick, he moved rapidly toward Princeton, with his van, under Leslie, entered as the Americans were leaving the town. Washington was forced, owing to the exhausted condition of his men, to forego his plan of marching to Brunswick. That night the patriots, though they were cold and ragged, slept contentedly on the frozen ground in the woods at Somerset Court-house. Cornwallis, had he been energetic, could have captured the entire American force; but through his laxity the achievements of Washington had its full effect, and within a month the British were worsted in a dozen encounters. The country people regained their patriotic fervor, and most of them remained at it to the end of the war.

A SHIPWRECKED CREW RESCUED.

The Anchor Line steamship Olympia, Capt. Young, arrived from the Mediterranean yesterday. She left Genoa on Nov. 18, and called at Leghorn, Naples, and Gibraltar, leaving the latter port Dec. 12. Her voyage across the Atlantic was marked by a succession of gales, which she passed through without special difficulty. On Dec. 27 the Olympia fell in with the wreck of the brig Louisa, of Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, and took from it Mr. Sanderson, the owner of the vessel, a passenger, Capt. Bain, and the crew of eight persons. The brig sailed from Bridgewater, Nova Scotia, Dec. 22, with a load of lumber for Barbados, West Indies. On the second day out she sprung a leak, and the water gained rapidly over the efforts of the crew. While the brig was laboring, almost foundered, a strong gale struck her, and threw her over on her side. Her foremast was carried away by the sea, which broke over the disabled vessel, and her crew were unable to right her. For two days the gale continued. Once, in a lull, the long-boat of the brig was launched, and stocked with provisions and water; but while the distressed men were preparing to enter it, it was torn away from the wreck. On the fifth day out, and the third after the storm, the stern of the brig was carried away, and she was left in momentary danger of sinking. The vessel had now been driven into latitude 40° 50', longitude 59° 30', where the Olympia sighted her, and rescued the distressed seamen and passengers. They were in a pitiful state, suffering terribly from lack of water. It is believed by the officers of the Olympia that the wreck of the Louisa went to the bottom on the 28th inst., during the prevalance of a heavy storm.

DAVID DUDLEY FIELD ELECTED TO CONGRESS.

An election was held yesterday in the Seventh Congressional District, comprising the Eighth, Tenth, and Fourteenth Assembly Districts, for Congressman, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Smith Ely, Jr. There were four candidates in the field, namely, David Dudley Field, the Tammany nominee; Christian Goetz, Republican, and Andrew Watson, and ——— Smith, who ran on an Independent ticket. The following is the result of the election:

Assembly District.	Field.	Goetz.	Smith.	Watson.
Eighth	1,733	591	....	....
Tenth	2,351	578	....	....
Fourteenth	1,500	268	64	19
Total	4,584	1 435	64	19

Field's majority over Goetz, 3,449.

GOV. ROBINSON'S FIRST PARDON.

Morris Higgins, a hack driver, who was convicted in February, 1874, before Recorder Hackett, of committing a rape on the person of a woman named Mary O'Brien, and sentenced to 20 years' imprisonment in the State Prison at Sing Sing, was yesterday pardoned out by the Governor, it having been established that he was innocent of the charge. Since his conviction, the woman, who has gone under the aliases of Mary Russell and Mary Stewart, had a Police Sergeant in Jersey City dismissed on a similar charge, and recently she preferred the same complaint against a policeman named Gleason in this City. At present she is confined in the Tombs on a charge of perjury.

A ROMANTIC INCIDENT.

On Monday night Edward Marshall, a track-walker on the New-Jersey Central Railroad, found a basket at the Centreville station, which, on examination, was found to contain a female child. He took it home, and on removing the wrappings, a note was found pinned to the clothing, stating that the child's name was Martha Jenkins, and that the mother was unable to support it. On reading the name the Marshalls were very much excited, as about 15 years ago, when they lived in Liverpool, their only daughter eloped with a worthless fellow named Jenkins, and came to this country. They think this may be her child. The Bayonne Police are endeavoring to find some clue to the matter.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

No meeting of the Emigration Commissioners took place yesterday, the regular meeting day.

The 11 P. M. boat from Peck slip for New-Haven, and 10:15 A. M. boat from New-Haven, have been withdrawn on account of the ice.

The next regular meeting of the New-York Woman Suffrage Society will be held on Thursday evening next, Jan. 4, at No. 238 West Fourteenth street.

A regular monthly meeting of the Chamber of Commerce will be held on Thursday next, at 1 o'clock P. M., at the rooms of the Chamber, No. 63 William street.

Charles Berth, who is accused of shooting his wife, Catharine, at No. 221 Chrystie street, was yesterday released from custody on $3,000 bail, the condition of his wife being no longer regarded as dangerous.

The reception by the Wallack Club, No. 77 Madison avenue, announced for Thursday evening next, has been postponed until the following evening. Invitations issued for the 4th may be used for the following evening.

At 7 o'clock last evening a barrel of kerosene oil exploded in the store of Patrick Kehoe, No. 55 Oak street. Kehoe was slightly burned in the face. The windows of the building were blown out and the premises damaged to the extent of $100.

The man who was shot by James Blake, at the corner of Dominick and Varick streets, on Monday night, proves to be John McDonald, a truck driver. He is still unconscious at the Chambers Street Hospital, and is not expected to recover.

A match game of hand-ball was played at McQuade's Court yesterday, between six leading experts of the Sixth Ward, Nolan, Dougherty, and McGrown, against Ferry, Donnelly, and McCarthy. After a very exciting contest, the former won by the score of 69 to 68.

The cases at the Police Courts resulting from the too-frequent indulgence in intoxicating beverages on New Year's Day were quite numerous yesterday. At the Tombs Police Court, 73 prisoners were arraigned; at the Washington Place Court, 79; and at Essex Market Court, 76; most of whom were discharged with a warning.

The condition of Mary Kelly, the young woman who was shot by her lover, Eugene Christ, at Twentieth street and Tenth avenue, on Dec. 14, is so much improved that she is permitted to walk about the wards at Bellevue Hospital, and it is expected that she will be discharged in a few days. Christ is still locked up in the Tombs.

John Clark, alias Fitzgerald, broke open the rear door of the premises No. 253 Monroe street, on New Year's night, and, securing a quantity of cigars and other property, was about to take his departure with the "booty," when he was arrested by Officer McCarty, of the Thirteenth Precinct. At the Essex Market Police Court yesterday, the prisoner was committed to answer in default of $2,000 bail.

A dispatch from Bellevue Hospital to the Coroner's office yesterday morning announced that Thomas Dunn, of No. 313 East Forty-fourth street, who was shot in the right thigh by Charles Rose, of No. 416 East Forty-seventh street, on Saturday night at No. 418 East Forty-seventh street, had died at noon yesterday from exhaustion following the amputation of the wounded limb. Rose is imprisoned in the Tombs.

Joseph Dennie Meredith, of the firm of William T. Meredith & Co., bankers, No. 37 William street, died on Saturday last at St. Gabriel, Cal., a place he had visited with the hope of benefiting his health. He was a son of Philadelphia, where he was educated for the legal profession. Mr. Meredith was esteemed among his associates as a young man of much promise.

THE OREGON CASE.

SENATOR MORTON'S COMMITTEE—THE MAN CRONIN'S TESTIMONY—HOW HE SECURED A BRIBE OF $3,000—MOST OF THE MONEY SENT FROM THIS CITY—A CONTUMACIOUS TELEGRAPH OPERATOR—THE TESTIMONY IN FULL.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3.—The action of Senator Morton and his committee in presenting a telegraph operator to the Senate for contumacy in refusing to answer questions concerning dispatches is not taken because Senator Morton subscribes to the doctrine that telegraphic dispatches are the proper spoils of Congressional committees. The Senator, without personally desiring to press a contest with the telegraph company, thinks if the dispatches are to be called for, this is a proper occasion. The dispatches, if produced, will undoubtedly show the transfer of $8,000 to Oregon from New-York, near the day of the meeting of the Electoral College. There is testimony relating to this subject and the use of the money. The testimony of Cronin under cross-examination has pretty thoroughly disgusted those Democrats who were trying to support his fraud. It appears that of the $3,000 which he received all but about $200 was from the fund sent from New-York. The money was his bribe: for while he claims it for expenses, he will not spend much, if any, above $500 in bringing the vote here and returning, and the remainder is clear profit. He was entrapped into the confession, evidently supposing it had become known, and he wanted to put as good a face as possible on the transaction. The testimony taken altogether leaves no room for doubt that the Oregon fraud was organized and perfected by New-York money. The House will not deal with its contumacious witnesses till next Friday, and it looks as though the attempt to secure telegraph dispatches would be delayed and finally suffered to die away without action.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections to-day continued taking testimony in relation to the Oregon case. Mr. E. A. Cronin, of Portland, Oregon, the man who received the highest number of votes on the Democratic Electoral ticket, and to whom Gov. Grover issued a certificate of election, was the first witness called, Senator Kernan conducting the direct examination. Mr. Cronin testified that he is a lawyer, and has lived in Oregon since April, 1865. After giving a brief history of the late election in Oregon, Mr Cronin stated that he attended the meeting of the Electoral College; in answer to a knock he opened the door of the room in which the Electoral College met, and he received an envelope containing the certificates of the Electors from the hands of Secretary of State Chadwick. He put the envelope in his pocket because he was of the impression that an attempt might be made to take it from him. He stated that, after leaving the table at which the Republican Electors sat, he observed their proceedings, but could not say what they actually did. He does not think they took a ballot for President and Vice President. In answer to Mr. Morton, the witness stated that Gov. Grover had not informed him that his [Cronin's] name was on the Electoral certificate, or that it was to be put on. On the morning of the day on which the Electoral College met, the witness went to the Governor's room. He saw the Governor's private Secretary, who was then engaged in making out certificates for Electors. The witness looked over the shoulder of the Secretary and saw his name on the certificate. Upon hearing a knock at the door of the room in which the College met, he surmised who and what was there, but had no previous arrangement with any person or persons whereby the certificate should be handed to him. Mr. Chadwick did not call the witnesses' name when he handed in the envelope containing the certificate. Messrs. Laswell and Klippel were in the room where the College met, but not by previous arrangement. The witness understood they would be there, but did not tell them to come; he appointed Messrs. Miller and Parker Electors; he had previous understanding with them that they should be outside, ready to answer when called; they did not come into the room until he had read the certificate to and left the Republican Electors; he showed the certificates of Electors to Messrs. Miller and Parker; but don't know whether they read them or not. Witness told the Republican Electors that he took their silence as a refusal to act with him; they made him no answer which he heard; Mr. Parker was made Secretary of the College, and a ballot was taken, witness writing the ballots. Messrs. Parker and Miller are Democrats, and cast their vote for Hayes and Wheeler. The witness never saw Mr. Miller until the day of the meeting of the Electoral College; on the evening previous to the meeting of the college Mr. Klippel informed the witness that Messrs. Miller and Parker would act with him if he needed them; the witness read the certificate through in the presence of the Republican Electors; Mr. Cartwright could have read it also, as he stood only one pace from the witness at that time; witness said he did not feel bound to put the certificates on the table when the majority of the college so ordered; the question of right did not enter into that as much as the question of expediency; he had never advised with any lawyer in relation to his right to cast an Electoral vote; he had never had any conversation with Senator Kelly in regard to the course which he [Mr. Cronin] should pursue in the Electoral College; it was generally conceded by Republicans and Democrats, on the day previous to the meeting of the Electoral College, that witness was to receive a certificate of election as an Elector; all that Gov. Grover had said was that this was an important question, and he wanted to hear all that could be said on both sides; witness was at the table with Messrs. Parker and Miller in the room where the college met between 10 and 15 minutes; upon leaving there he went to the office of the State Treasurer, then into one of the rooms of the Executive office to prepare the Electoral returns; neither Gov. Grover or Secretary of State Chadwick were present; the returns were signed and sealed between 6 and 7 o'clock in the evening; witness was elected Messenger to bring the vote to Washington before he left the room in which the college met; no arrangement was made there to pay the expenses of the trip; in the evening the witness asked to be allowed to resign as Messenger, as he could not afford to make the trip; he had spent $1,500 during the campaign for election purposes; no promise has ever been made that the money thus spent shall be refunded; is not a rich man; spent the money with no idea of getting it back; he had a law practice worth from $5,000 to $6,000 a year; when witness stated that he could not afford to come to Washington there were several prominent Democrats present; they thought he ought to come and said that he would probably be subpœnaed to come; witness was asked what his expenses would be, and some of the gentlemen present expressed their willingness to help pay them; he estimates his expenses at $3,000; those present thought it too much, and he refused to come for less; he had a case to try in the Supreme Court of the State of Oregon, which interfered with his coming; he advised with his client in relation to his coming, and his client said, "You may as well go, for unless Tilden is elected the country is gone, and then the case won't amount to anything;" the matter of witness' expenses was fixed up at Portland; he was not sure of the money to pay his expenses until the day before he started for Washington; he actual expense of making the trip from Portland to Washington is about $200. Mr. Bellinger, Chairman of the Democratic Committee, informed witness the day before he started for Washington that he [Bellinger] had $2,800, and the additional $200 to make the $3,000 required was raised; a note signed by Bellinger and witness was deposited at the banking-house of Ladd & Tilton. Tilton is a New-Yorker, and his politics are unknown to witness; he does not know where the $2,800 came from which he received, but supposes it was raised among the Democrats of Oregon; witness knows a man named Patrick; met him in the office of Judge Strong, at Portland; Mr. Patrick lives at Omaha; Mr. Bellinger met witness on the street at Portland about 10 days previous to the meeting of the Electoral College, and informed him that a gentleman wished to see him [Cronin] at the office of Judge Strong; witness refused to go, and told Mr. Bellinger that whatever was done in this Electoral muddle must be done by others than himself; witness afterward went to Strong's office and there met Mr. Patrick, who said that he had heard that witness had said that if a certificate as Elector was issued to him he would not act; but witness informed Mr. Patrick that he had changed his mind, and Mr. Patrick said to witness, "If Tilden is President he will give you anything you want;" witness informed Mr. Patrick that if he [Patrick] was acquainted with Mr. Tilden he might tell him that he had nothing to give which he [Cronin] wanted; witness was a little angry at Mr. Patrick for talking in such a manner; Mr. Patrick informed witness that he supposed the reason he [Patrick] had been sent to Oregon was, that he was the furthest one West; witness did not know what Mr. Patrick meant by this remark; he had heard that Patrick is Superintendent of a mine in Colorado; Patrick said nothing about money in his interview with witness; witness never saw Patrick except on the one occasion above mentioned, and had no conversation with Bellinger about Patrick; witness had received no message from the East in relation to the Electoral muddle before seeing Patrick; witness knows of a man named Dimon in New-York; thinks he is a banker; after the Electoral College had met and adjourned witness saw a dispatch signed Bristow, which said, "It is important that the returns of Oregon should be properly made up and sent to their destination;" Ladd & Tilton have a banking-house at Portland; Ladd & Bush have one at Salem; A. E. & C. E. Tilton, of No. 115 Liberty street, New-York, are correspondents of the Oregon banking houses above mentioned; witness received draft for the money for his expenses between 4 and 5 o'clock P. M. on the 8th of December in Ladd & Tilton's bank from the manager, Mr. Quackenbush; there were three drafts; one on New-York and two on California banks; the $2,800 was not tendered witness in cash; Dimon's name is mentioned in the draft on New-York, which is for $2,100; witness did say at first that he would not act as an Elector if a certificate was given him, but changed his mind after looking up the law, and after hearing of the actions of the South Carolina, Florida, and Louisiana Returning Boards. In answer to Mr. Kernan, witness stated that he canvassed the State with Mr. Watts, and they closed the canvass together at Portland; Watts being a Postmaster, had been mentioned by both himself and witness in a jocose way at public meetings; witness knew Watts was ineligible as an Elector before the election, but said nothing about it.

William L. Turner, Manager of the Western Union Telegraph Office at Jacksonville, Oregon, was the next witness, and in answer to questions from Senator Morton, stated that he saw a man whom he supposed was Mr. Patrick pass through Jacksonville on the stage on the 20th of November; Mr. Klippel lives at Jacksonville, but witness did not know of Patrick and Klippel's meeting at Jacksonville.

Senator Morton then asked: Do you know of any despatches in relation to Mr. Patrick having passed over your wire? A.—I cannot divulge anything passing on the wire.

Q.—What do you know about $8,000 having been transmitted from New-York to Oregon by telegraph? A.—I know of nothing that I can divulge.

Q.—Did a dispatch in regard to Dimon pass over your wire? A.—I decline to answer.

Q.—Did not Dimon telegraph to Ladd & Tilton, of Portland, to draw $8,000 on him between Nov. 25 and the first Wednesday in December? A.—I decline to answer.

Q.—I ask if you know anything in regard to another sum of $1,700 telegraphed previously to the $8,000, and from A. E. & C. E. Tilton, of New-York, to this same firm at Portland? A.—I decline to answer.

The committee then adjourned.

AFFAIRS IN FLORIDA.

INAUGURATION OF THE DEMOCRATIC GOVERNOR—ORGANIZATION OF BOTH HOUSES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

TALLAHASSEE, Jan. 2.—The Canvassing Board this morning succeeded in the completion of their labors in a manner satisfactory to the Supreme Court, under whose direction they acted, and the necessary certificates were issued by Secretary of State McLin. The oath of office was administered to Gov. Drew and Lieut. Gov. Bull by Chief Justice Randall, at 12 M., on the eastern portico of the Capitol, in the presence of many enthusiastic Democrats and quite a number of sad-looking colored people. Both Houses of the Legislature were promptly organized, and G. M. McWhorter was elected Speaker of the Assembly by the unanimous vote of the Democrats, William H. Gleason receiving the solid Republican vote. After organizing, both Houses adjourned until 10 A. M. to-morrow, when it is expected the committees will be announced. Ex-Attorney Williams, Gen. Wallace, and Mr. Clancey left by the evening train for Jacksonville. Senator Conover is here studying the situation. Good order has prevailed throughout the day, and the city is quiet to-night.

Notice was served to-day on the late Canvassing Board by the Democrats pretending to be Presidential Electors that they will apply to the Supreme Court for a mandamus to compel them to recount the Electoral and Congressional votes. Application will be made on the 9th inst.

THE DEMOCRATS AND LOUISIANA.

TARDINESS IN SUBMITTING THE DEMOCRATIC TESTIMONY TAKEN BEFORE THE RETURNING BOARD FOR PUBLICATION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3.—The Democrats do not appear very anxious to have their side of the case, as presented before the Louisiana Returning Board, given to the public. They obtained permission when the President's Message transmitting the report of Senator Sherman and others was ordered printed by the Senate, to have a number of extra copies of the report printed with the report of the Democratic Committee and the evidence obtained or taken by them. Senator Sherman's report and evidence has been printed for some time, but the Democratic Committee have not yet furnished the copy of their evidence to the printer, and do not seem willing to do so. It is charged that they are keeping back their report purposely until the committees of the House sent South shall return and make their report.

THE "BANKERS AND MERCHANTS" AND THE BOGUS LEGISLATURE—PROGRESS OF THE CONGRESSIONAL INVESTIGATIONS.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 3.—Messrs. Crapo and Rose, of the sub-committee investigating Ouachita Parish, have returned to this city. Mr. McMahon has gone to Washington.

Gov. Kellogg, Lieut. Gov. Antoine, and United States Marshal Pitkin have been summoned before Morrison's committee.

A card has been published, signed by about 400 firms and business men, reciting that the liberties and welfare of Louisiana "depend upon the establishment and maintenance of the lawfully elected Government, of which Mr. Nichols is the executive head," and promising to pay five per centum of the taxes for the ensuing year in advance to support the same, and advising citizens throughout the State to do the same. Republicans say many who signed the call had already paid their taxes.

The bogus Legislature has rented Odd-fellows' Hall to hold their sessions there.

The Senate Committee examined Robert Wilson in reference to the character of Capts. Theobald and Phillips and Walter Logan, of Ouachita, charged with numerous acts of violence in Ouachita Parish. The witness said the characters of these men were as good as any in the parish.

A Burke, a member of the Democratic Central Committee, testified at length in reference to the registration and vote of the parish; said that the registration was 627 more in 1876 than it was in 1874, and five more votes were cast than registered.

Mr. Saulsbury announced that this closed the Democratic testimony for Ouachita.

The Senate sub-committee examined 10 witnesses, principally colored, who detailed numerous cases of violence and intimidation in East Baton Rouge, most of which have already been published, showing the reign of terror among the blacks there.

Esquire Isadore Herron stated that he had been captured by a band of armed men in the road, severely whipped and told he must resign his office. After the whipping they said they had made a mistake; that he was not the man they wanted, and they advised him to say nothing about the whipping. He had been threatened and shot at afterward by white men.

Burrell Johnson, aged 13, a bright and intelligent lad, gave the particulars of his father, Paul Johnson, being taken off with a rope around his neck, his story corroborating that of his mother of yesterday.

Sheriff Foreman gave a terrible account of intimidations practiced. He said that after the fight at Mount Pleasant the colored prisoners would have been killed but for him, assisted by Capt. McGrath's Company.

At the evening session of the Senate Committee, Justice Leonard, of the Supreme Court, testified that he found great alarm among the colored people in Ouachita Parish during the campaign. A Republican meeting was interrupted, and he was called "a liar" on the stand. Colored men told him they had to hide in the woods, like rabbits.

The House sub-committee from Baton Rouge having returned and made a quorum, the House committee, by a party vote, reported President Orton, of the Western Union Telegraph Company, to the House as in contempt for refusing to answer the second subpœna. The House committees are examining witnesses relative to the general character of the campaign. Nothing of importance has been elicited.

THE STATE CAPITAL.

BRIEF SESSIONS OF BOTH HOUSES.

RECESS TILL TUESDAY NEXT—THE NEW SPEAKER AND THE COMMITTEES—THE INTERESTS OF LEGISLATION ALONE TO BE CONSULTED—MR. ALVORD, MR. HUSTED AND THE WAYS AND MEANS—GOV. ROBINSON DISCLAIMS TILDEN'S POLITICAL ESSAY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 3.—The session of both branches of the Legislature, to-day, was short, and, beyond the introduction of a number of bills of no special importance, there was no business done which calls for extended comment. The customary adjournment for one week to allow the Speaker time to make up the committee list, was had. Various official reports were presented, including the annual pardon report of ex-Gov. Tilden; the reports of the Adjutant General, of the Auditor, of the Canal Department, of the State Controller, and of the Superintendent of Public Instruction. Mr. Cowdin, in the House, offered the following resolution, which was tabled:

Resolved, That the Committee on Cities, when appointed, be requested to report, by bill or otherwise, what measures may be adopted tending to retrenchment and reform in the Government of the City of New-York.

The usual attack on the Excise laws was commenced to-day, in the introduction of a repealing bill, by Mr. Nachtmann. The gentleman may as well give up this business. It will receive in the present House even less countenance than it did in the last.

There is some gossip about the make-up of the committees, but it is of a singularly mild character. For 20 years past, and may be for more, the formation of the committees has been a subject for endless intrigue, bargaining, and speculation, and the State Capital has been kept in a condition of feverish excitement until the list was announced. Rewards were given and grudges paid off in the distribution of places. To understand something of that healthy change in State politics which Mr. Sloan's elevation to the Speakership indicates, it is only necessary to compare the quiet frame of mind in which the large majority of the members appear to be, with the almost fierce excitement which has raged in every previous year, while this important matter was undecided. The best men on Mr. Sloan's side worked for that gentleman's elevation without much, if any, hope of reward. The best men who opposed him rest quiet in the conviction of his perfect fairness, and express a calm confidence that the committees will be made up with a single eye to the good of the Legislature. A rumor was circulating, to-day, that a list of men who had promised to vote for Mr. Sloan and had voted for Mr. Husted had been furnished by some one to the former gentleman. This is probably false, but if it were true it would be of little moment. It is not easy to imagine how any one who knows Mr. Sloan could suppose that that gentleman would do anything with such a list but threw it in the fire.

The assertions made in regard to Mr. Alvord, however, seem to have some basis of truth. It is said that Mr. Alvord has demanded of Mr. Sloan the place of Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, in fulfillment of an alleged bargain that if he [Alvord] would carry over his own and other votes to Sloan, the place should be given to him. It is further asserted that Mr. Sloan declared he had never heard of such a bargain, and explained to Mr. Alvord that he could not possibly violate the long established precedent of appointing the unsuccessful candidate for the Speakership to that position. On this subject, which, as will be readily seen, is rather a delicate matter to interrogate the principal parties upon, it may be said that if any too enthusiastic supporter of Mr. Sloan made such a bargain with Mr. Alvord, he did it on his own authority, and when Mr. Alvord ascented it he showed that too long acquaintance with the old methods of conducting political contests had made it impossible for him to understand the better order of things. If there was one thing more than another which was settled upon in this canvass it was that Mr. Sloan would not countenance any selling of committee places whatever. He would go into the Speaker's chair absolutely untrammeled or not at all. Some rumors being circulated on Monday that places were being promised in Mr. Sloan's interest, one of his most earnest supporters went to Mr. Sloan that afternoon and asked him if there was any truth in it. Mr. Sloan answered with emphasis, "Mr. Lang, it is not so. If any one has been making bargains for votes, I will not be a party to them." This occurred only a few hours before the caucus was held.

There is no reason to suppose that Mr. Husted will not be Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. It would be a violation of precedent, most extraordinary, if he were not. Furthermore, Mr. Sloan intimated more than a month ago that if he were elected to the Speakership he should follow the course which has been sanctioned by custom and usage in this matter. This, too, is to be said of Mr. Husted in regard to the late contest. Either the reports that he had, through business relations, a command of large means of corruption, have been grossly exaggerated, or, having these means at command, he declined to use them, notwithstanding his whole political future seemed staked on the issue of the contest. It is safe to say that Mr. Husted will have the Ways and Means Committee, which, however, is not so important as it was, since the business of auditing claims has been taken from the Legislature by the Constitutional amendment and lodged in a State Board of Audit.

Gov. Robinson's Message, it has been generally remarked, contains no allusion to the necessity for new legislation on the subject of insurance; but this matter will, nevertheless, be brought to the attention of the Legislature very speedily. Some new bills will shortly be introduced designed both to afford protection to insurance companies against a certain class of legal sharks who have long preyed upon them under certain forms of law, and also to create more stringent safeguards against the abuses of trusts by the officers of insurance companies themselves. Gov. Robinson's report as State Controller, which was presented to-day, has been anticipated in nearly all its essential points in his Message as Governor. That portion of the report dealing with the subject of State printing is new and especially worthy of note. He shows that the contract made last year for the legislative printing has worked well, saved about one-half of the usual cost of this work, and will save even more in the ensuing year. The contract was bitterly denounced at the time it was made, but the attacks came from a quarter which left no doubt about the motive which inspired them. The State Printing Ring has long been one of the scandals of the State Government. No matter which party was in power, it held its ground. The name was changed, but the thing itself remained untouched. It has now been demonstrated that the State can have all its necessary printing done for about $50,000 per year, instead of about $120,000, and whatever party should have control of the State Government in the future, they will not dare to allow a renewal of this stealing. It should not be forgotten that the same parties who have so long drained the State Treasury of over $100,000 a year for printing, are now doing the same work for less than $47,500, the contract for it having been sublet to them by the successful bidder. The profits under the old system were such as enabled the parties in interest to keep a lobby at work drumming up votes to order the printing of public documents by tens of thousands. It was natural that the cure should howl when this bone was snatched from them.

A sort of semi-official announcement is made through the columns of the local press that Gov. Robinson disclaims that portion of his Message referring to national affairs. He says it "expresses the views of Mr. Tilden."

The Senate held its first executive session to-day. It is understood that Gov. Robinson sent in the name of Capt. J. D. Wyly for Commissary General of Ordnance, vice Kilbourn Knox, whose term has expired. The nomination was referred to the Military Committee of the Senate.

THE CANAL BOARD.

ALBANY, Jan. 3.—At a meeting of the Canal Board to-day Commissioner Walrath moved that the Board recommend to the Legislature the toll-sheet of 1875 for the season of 1877 on the Erie, Champlain, Oswego, Seneca, and Cayuga Canals. Commissioner Thayer moved as an amendment that the toll on boats be one cent instead of two cents per mile. The matter was referred to the Committee on Commerce. Commissioner Walrath moved that the Crooked Lake Canal and the Chemung Canal and feeder be taken from the Middle and added to the Western Division. Adopted. A resolution offered by the State Engineer that $6,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, be set apart for the construction of two four-feet cast-iron pipes under the Erie canal at Utica, the work to be done under the State Engineer and Commissioner in charge, was adopted.

MASSACHUSETTS.

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY ORGANIZED—THE ELECTION SERMON—THE SENATORIAL CONTEST—THE CANDIDATES NAMED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 3.—The Legislature convened to-day and promptly organized by the choice of Senator Cogswell, of the Cape district, for President of the Senate by ballot, and the unanimous re-election of Speaker Long, Clerks Gifford and Marden, and Sergeant at Arms Mitchell, the Democrats concluding to make no show of party. In the preliminary business following the organization the members, with the Governor and escort of the cadets, marched to the new Old South Church in the Back Bay and listened to the election sermon, one of the old customs held to with tenacity. The preacher of the sermon this time was Rev. Mr. Hamilton, a Methodist clergyman of a good deal of local fame. To-morrow the Governor will be inaugurated, and will deliver his annual address. It is a long document, but treats almost entirely of State topics, the Centennial Exhibition and its fruits and lessons being the only topics of a general nature alluded to. Nothing, it is understood, will be said on the Presidential question. Among the first most important acts of the new Legislature will be the election of a United States Senator, Mr. Boutwell's term expiring in March. In the campaign, when general attention was directed to the Presidential question, a good deal of quiet canvassing went on in behalf of Senator Boutwell, and now a formidable number of members come up to the State-house pledged to vote for him. He has, it is asserted, over 100 of these pledges, and it is pretty certain that at least 100 are for him in Joint Convention. One hundred and forty-five votes are necessary to elect. The Butler men in the Legislature are generally understood to be for Boutwell, and the influence of the Collector of the Port of Boston is also understood to be for him. If it should be found that he cannot be elected this influence will be thrown, it is now said, for Gov. Rice. Collector Simmons himself is said to be not averse to being considered an available compromise candidate. The most formidable candidate, at this moment, against Mr. Boutwell is Congressman George F. Hoar, and his strength is believed to be not slight. The most influential of the Republican Party papers have already come out for him, and the best men in the party are indorsing him. The other interests are bitter against him, and it has more than once been threatened of late that rather than have him this influence would be thrown for Congressman Seelye, whom the Democrats talk of nominating and supporting. Other candidates spoken of are Judge Devens, ex-Gov. Bullock, and ex-Speaker Sanford, of Taunton. These last are all referred to as compromise candidates, and the race is likely to begin between Boutwell and Hoar, and Rice as the leading compromise. The Democratic leaders proposing Seelye are those who so successfully engineered through the nomination of Charles Francis Adams for Governor last September. They meet strong opposition, the old-liners believing, and expressing their belief with a good deal of vigor, in straight-out nominations. If they should succeed, either Gov. Gaston or Judge Abbott will be the candidate. The contest will be brought on very soon, and a hot canvass is expected.

One of the most notable of the local schemes to come before the Legislature is for a Metropolitan Police for all the cities controlled by Commissioners elected by the Governor. This is a pet scheme of the prohibitionists, and as they have a good deal of strength in the two houses, a strong fight will have to be made to defeat the bill.

OTHER STATE LEGISLATURES.

THE CONNECTICUT LEGISLATURE—GOV. HUBBARD'S MESSAGE—MUCH ADVERSE CRITICISM—THE FIRST TIME SUCH A DOCUMENT WAS EVER PREPARED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HARTFORD, Jan. 3.—Both houses of the State Legislature organized to-day by the election of Republican officers. Hon. Lynde Harrison, of Guilford, Speaker of the House, made an eloquent introductory address. The customary election parade was dispensed with because of the change in the time of the session from May to January, and Gov. Hubbard was escorted from his residence to the State-house by the Governor's Guard only. The Message causes much adverse criticism, even among Democrats, who did not believe Mr. Hubbard was capable of showing the extreme partisanship which is displayed in the opening and closing passages, and poor taste, to say the least, is attributed to him. The Republicans are, with good reason, offended over this severely partisan utterance, as they themselves had not only believed that Mr. Hubbard was disposed to be fair, but did not think it possible for him to drop to the level of the Tilden Bureau style of campaigning. Taking this occasion, in the presence of the Republican Assembly, to make a violent stump speech makes the Governor's position still more objectionable and offensive, and it opens the way for partisan retort, which had not been anticipated. No Governor in Connecticut, of either party, has ever before made such a one-sided political argument in an inaugural address.

MAINE.

AUGUSTA, Jan. 3.—The Senate organized to-day by the choice of Thomas W. Hyde, of Bath, as President, and Samuel W. Lane, of Augusta, as Secretary. The House organized by the choice of Edward B. Nealy, of Bangor, as Speaker, and Orammandel Smith, of Litchfield, as Clerk. The following are the members to whom certificates of election were issued: Randolph P. Thompson, of Jay; Daniel Deasy, of Gouldsboro'; B. L. Bates, of Orland; George H. Theobold, of Richmond, and E. H. Treat, of Enfield, were unseated; and Nathan B. Phinney, of Jay; Joseph H. West, of Franklin; Lucius Perkins, of Brooksville; Ambrose P. Jewett, of Richmond, and Thomas W. Porter, of Burlington, were seated instead. The certificates of election were issued to those parties on account of clerical errors in the returns.

The Committee on the Gubernatorial Vote will report to-morrow: Connor, 75,867; Talbot, 60,423; Gage, 520; scattering, 14. The following nominations were made this evening for State officers by the Republicans: Secretary of State, S. J. Chadbourne, of Dixmont; Adjutant General, J. P. Cilley, of Rockland; Attorney General, L. A. Emery, of Ellsworth; Treasurer, E. H. Banks, of Biddeford.

ILLINOIS.

SPRINGFIELD, Jan. 3.—The Senate met to-day, elected Mr. William R. Archer, of Pike County, temporary Chairman, and then adjourned until to-morrow. The House also organized to-day, and elected Mr. F. K. Granger, Republican, of McHenry County, temporary Speaker, over George W. Armstrong, Democrat, of Lasalle County.

MISSOURI.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 2.—The Missouri Legislature met in Jefferson City at noon to-day, and both houses, after some preliminary business, adjourned until to-morrow. In the House L. D. Walker was elected temporary Speaker, and M. V. Hobbs temporary Clerk. There will be both Senatorial and House caucuses to-night to nominate officers.

THE ASHTABULA DISASTER.

THE BRIDGE CAREFULLY EXAMINED

THE CLOSING SCENES—REPLACING THE BROKEN BRIDGE—AN EXAMINATION OF THE RUINED STRUCTURE—HOW IT WAS CONSTRUCTED—THE CHIEF ENGINEER'S OPPOSITION TO IT—THE CORONER'S INQUEST — CONTRADICTORY EVIDENCE HEARD.

By Telegraph from Our Special Correspondent.

ASHTABULA, Jan. 3.—The painful excitement which has reigned here since last Friday is gradually giving place to a sort of dulled, half-apathetic consciousness that nothing now can be done, that the worst will never be known, and that more or less of painful mystery will ever surround the still unrevealed incidents of that agonizing night. Relatives who have been here for days searching for their dead loved ones are turning homeward with very heavy hearts and a sorrow-stricken mien, which is almost as sad to witness as their earlier and more violent grief. Some of them bear away a watch or a trinket, or even some charred remnants of clothing, as the only reminiscences of the lost. I think that by to-morrow night all strangers will have gone except those who have injured relatives who cannot yet be moved, and then the town will be as quiet and dismal as a homestead the day after a funeral, the inquest alone remaining to give a sort of a ghastly grimness to the unaccustomed quietude. The interest now has mainly narrowed itself down to the inquest, and the replacing of the broken bridge, both of which are actively going on, there being a good prospect of having the new wooden bridge in position by Saturday night. Speaking of the bridge, I made a very careful examination of it again this afternoon, and also made some inquiries about the general characteristics of this and the company's other bridges. This bridge was built 12 years ago. It was the first of the kind the company had ever constructed, and it has never been duplicated. This does not look as though the company were overpleased with the patent of their new bridge. I have talked with some engineers about the Howe Truss Bridge. They say that it makes a first rate wooden bridge, but that they do not like it for an iron one. They say that with wood for the material contraction is impossible, but they shrug their shoulders and talk about expense, adjustment, excessive changes of temperature, &c., when iron is spoken of. With regard to this bridge, I have what I deem to be unimpeachable authority for saying that its planning created a warm discussion, amounting almost to a rupture, between Mr. Collins, the company's Chief Engineer, and Mr. Amasa Stone, Jr., the President of the company, under whose directions the plans of the bridge were drawn. Mr. Collins was very averse to planning an iron bridge then at all, and it ended by his decided refusal to have anything whatever to do with the structure. Mr. Collins, too, had always made a point of having this thoroughly understood when-ever the bridge has been the subject of discussion.

Again, an engineer who has just left here, and who is well acquainted and even associated with Mr. Collins, says that he once told Mr. Collins that he mistrusted the bridge, and that Mr. Collins replied: "If it does go down, I trust it will be with a freight and not with a passenger train." Mr. Collins tells me that he is an earnest advocate of arched stone bridges, because the sudden and excessive changes of temperature of our climate must always be enemies to iron bridges, whereas stone is unaffected. He consequently always puts in stone bridges when he can procure the company's consent to the extra expense. He says that the company have more stone bridges for their mileage than any other company in the United States. In my examination of the fallen bridge to-day, with the crowds and wreck out of the way, I had a better opportunity of judging of one or two points, and I also discovered what may turn out to be an important thing to the cause of the disaster. First, so far as I could judge, the bottom chord of the bridge is unbroken. This would lead to the theory that something was off the track which, pressing the top chord of the bridge out of line, caused the bridge to fall. Secondly, as to some inherent weakness in the bridge itself, the bridge was originally a wooden one, 300 feet long, stretching across the ravine on a series of stone piers. In order to shorten the length of the bridge, the company did some expensive filling in on both sides of the creek, and constructed a new bridge by the side of the old one, consisting of an arch and stone piers on either side of the creek, with an iron span of 152 feet between the two middle piers. The foundation of the four new piers consists only of piles, not of gravel or rock. The western arch has so settled that it is for several feet, separated from the superincumbent masonry supporting the pier by a crack of from two and a half to three inches in width. The arch, therefore, did not properly support the pier, and caused it to draw away a little from the span, thereby rendering the bridge insecure on its seat. Now, if, as many of the passengers assert, and the fallen bridge itself indicates, one or more of the sleeping cars went off the track when on the span, the bridge would have received such a severe strain on its already insecure seat as would cause it to give way. It was assuredly at the pier of this arch that the bridge first broke from its seat. The drill-holes and face of the masonry were torn and rasped all the way down, while the face of the eastern pier is uninjured. In any case, this crooked arch should be very thoroughly investigated.

The Coroner's jury sat for seven hours to-day. Mr. Knapp, the Chief Engineer of the Fire Brigade, and Mr. Strong, the station agent—the two gentlemen between whom lies the serious responsibility of not throwing water on the fire—were the only two witnesses called. They both underwent a long examination and cross-examination at the hands of the District Attorney and the company's counsel. The most of their testimony, I think, fully corroborated the conclusion I telegraphed yesterday, viz., that Mr. Knapp, the fire engineer, very reprehensibly allowed himself to be discouraged from doing his bounden and sworn duty by an answer to an application to Mr. Strong, which, I think, under the circumstances and in such a dire crisis showed a decided error of judgment on that gentleman's part. Mr. Knapp swore that he asked Mr. Strong, "On which side of the bridge shall I throw the hose?" and that Mr. Strong replied, "We don't want any water down there, but want help." Mr. Knapp also swore that he would have thrown water on the fire, but for what he deemed to be Mr. Strong's orders. Mr. Strong swears that he did not hear Mr. Knapp say anything about hose, although he did hear him ask about throwing water, and that he replied, "I don't want it; I want help," by meaning thereby to forbid Mr. Knapp throwing water, but at the moment thinking more about help for the wounded than anything else. He also swore that when he met Knapp, water thrown on the fire would undoubtedly have prevented the bodies being burned beyond recognition, though he thought it was too late to save life.

The only body identified to-day was that of Mrs. Elizabeth Cowper, (or Kopper,) of Chippewa, Canada. Some ornament to her head adhering to the skull was the only means of her identification. William H. Kneid, of Bates, Reed & Cooley, No. 451 Broadway, New-York, has been published as one of the lost by the Ashtabula disaster. He got off the train at Erie, and is safe.

By the finding of papers and scraps of clothing among the débris to-day the following-named persons are known to have been on the train:

Misses Charlotte N. and Martha Ann Smith, of Rondout, N. Y.

J. W. Smith, of Toronto, Ontario.

The only relics found to-day besides those mentioned were some pocket-knives. It is probable that the work of clearing away the wreck and the search for the missing will be finished to-morrow.

CLEVELAND, Jan. 3.—A special dispatch from Ashtabula, Ohio, to the Leader last night says the body of Boyd L. Russell, of Auburn, N. Y., a victim of the late railroad disaster at that place, has been identified.

RONDOUT, Jan. 3.—It is now ascertained beyond a doubt that two young ladies of this place, (sisters,) named Charlotte and Martha Smith, who left here on Thursday of last week, intending to visit their uncle at Bloomington, Ill., were among the victims of the Ashtabula railroad disaster. They have been traced to the palace car, from which but one person is known to have escaped. They were the daughters of a widow recently reduced from affluence to poverty, and the blow falls upon her wish crushing weight.

WORCESTER, Jan. 3.—It has just been ascertained that George H. Spooner, of Millbury, perished in the car "City of Buffalo," in the Ashtabula disaster. He was on his way to California.

MR. DAVID CHITTENDEN.

The Cleveland Leader, of Monday, says: "David Chittenden, General Passenger Agent for the road, was on board of the train. He left Cleveland Thursday morning and went to Oil City, intending to return Friday night. A few minutes before the crash he was conversing with George M. Reid, of this city, who feels confident that Mr. Chittenden went down with the smoking car, riding backward. Mr. Reid also thinks he was killed before the fire got to him. Mr. Chittenden was 54 years old and was born at Newport, Herkimer County, New-York. He had lived in Cleveland for 21 years. Prior to his connection with the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern he was in the employ of the New-York Central road, for which company he did some business up to his death. He had been connected with the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroad Company for 30 years, and was a gentleman who commanded the confidence and respect of all railroad men, and was held in high esteem by a large circle of acquaintances. He leaves a wife and a grown daughter, Mrs. James Higgins, of this city, to mourn his sad death. The terrible news has prostrated Mrs. Chittenden, who yesterday was suffering the greatest anxiety lest no trace of her husband's body will be found."

REV. A. H. WASHBURNE.

THE MICHIGAN SENATORSHIP.

CAUCUS OF MEMBERS OF BOTH BRANCHES OF THE STATE LEGISLATURE — HON. THOMAS W. FERRY UNANIMOUSLY NOMINATED FOR RE-ELECTION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

LANSING, Jan 3.—The Republican members of both branches of the Michigan Legislature met in caucus this evening and nominated, by acclamation, Hon. Thomas W. Ferry, the present President pro tem of the United States Senate, for the six years following his present term which expires on the 4th of March next. No other name was presented or suggested. Great enthusiasm was manifested, and the general tenor of many stirring speeches made was that Michigan rejoices in this opportunity of showing the nation that she has entire and perfect confidence in the ability and integrity of Senator Ferry for the performance of his part in the settlement of the Presidential Electoral question. The Senatorial election comes on the 16th inst. There are but 34 Democrats in the Legislature, and they have not decided on whom they will throw away their votes.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3.—The following telegraphic

THE VOTE OF LOUISIANA.

GEN. JAMES H. VAN ALEN'S OPINION.

THE REPUBLICAN REFORM CLUB ADDRESSED BY GEN. VAN ALEN ON THE LOUISIANA ELECTION—A NON-PARTISAN VIEW OF THE CONTEST—CONCLUSIVE EVIDENCE OF DEMOCRATIC INTIMIDATION AND FRAUD—THE VIEWS OF THE COMMITTEES DISCUSSED AND EXPLAINED.

A meeting of the Republican Reform Club was held last night at their rooms, No. 67 Madison avenue, the object of which was to hear an address from Gen. James H. Van Alen on the impression produced on his mind by his recent visit to New Orleans. Mr. John A. Weeks presided, and in introducing the speaker, said: "Gen. Van Alen attended the canvass of the ballot of the State of Louisiana at the request of the President, and has made his report. Disconnected from partisan politics—neither a holder of nor an aspirant for office—by his social position, both at the North and South, and his eminently conservative views, he is peculiarly well qualified to give a clear and unprejudiced statement of the result of the Presidential contest in that State. I have the honor to present Gen. James H. Van Alen." Gen. Van Alen spoke as follows:

GENTLEMEN OF THE REPUBLICAN REFORM CLUB:—I acknowledge with gratitude the invitation by which you have requested me to take counsel with me concerning the result of the Presidential election, and especially concerning the Electoral vote of Louisiana. If this club were liable to the suspicion of being more partisan than patriotic—if its proceedings were subject to the reproach of seeking success for the Republican party through any dubious avenues—my unfamiliarity with the practice of public speaking would afford an easy excuse for avoiding this occasion. But I esteem it a high honor for my judgment to be asked as a guide or a confirmation of the opinions of gentlemen with whom it has been a privilege to be associated in this political campaign for upright purposes through upright means. Knowing that it is our common desire to ascertain the truth and abide by it, without reference to the fortunes of candidates or parties, I beg your indulgence of the awkwardness of a person unused to other arts of speech than those of social conversation, while I tell you briefly the substance of my observations and inquiries in New-Orleans. The invitation with which the President honored me was to go to Louisiana and report to him the truth about the election there, I presume was owing wholly to personal acquaintance and confidence. He knew that I was not a politician, and he did me the credit to believe (perhaps for that very reason) that if I saw fraud or outrage on either side I would be very quick to say so. Possibly, also, my opinion, well known to him, of the inefficiency and corruption that have stained the civil service in the South, and of the urgent need of a reform there, may have influenced his choice. He may have wished to learn how the facts in Louisiana impressed men of every shade of Republicanism. Without further apology, I may say that I went to New-Orleans; that, during a stay of nearly three weeks there, I enjoyed opportunities to learn the facts necessary to pass a fair judgment upon the proceedings of the Returning Board of the State; that I improved those opportunities to the utmost of my ability, aided by an extensive previous acquaintance with residents belonging to each party, and that I do not doubt that it is right and lawful to count the Electoral vote of Louisiana for Hayes and Wheeler. In my opinion the Returning Board of Louisiana could not have permitted the vote of their State to stand for the Democratic Electors, as it apparently did on the face of the returns, without violating the statute by virtue of which they held office and assuming a mass of intimidation and fraud disgraceful to republican institutions. Of the intellectual acuteness of my colleagues, whose names are attached to the report which has been presented through Senator Sherman to the President, I need not speak, for it is well known to the country; but I can testify to their fairness in my investigation. I do not believe that impartial men could come to any other conclusion upon the proofs; and I deeply regret that the delegation of gentlemen belonging to the Democratic Party, who were present by request of the Chairman of the Democratic National Committee, neither saw fit to join with us in a common examination of those proofs with a view to reach a common conclusion, nor to submit their testimony to the President and the country together with ours, so that the people might compare any conflicting evidence. The high character of the Democratic delegates, and the manly expressions of indignation to which some of them gave vent concerning certain instances of brutal violence which were brought to their attention, confirm me in the belief that a common conclusion would have been possible if deplorable influences had not prevailed upon them to hold themselves apart from us. Until I was compelled to believe otherwise by their own confession—and it is worthy of your attention that they long withheld their report from the public—I was not altogether without hope that even on their own partial and imperfect investigation they might determine that the way of justice is to frankly approve the adjudication of the vote of Louisiana by the Returning Board of Presidential candidates. Thus briefly stating the result to which I was compelled by my observations in Louisiana, let me review to you, with equal brevity, the processes by which I was forced to it.

THE VOTE AND ITS CANVASS.

It is needless to discuss in this connection the question of universal suffrage. Speaking for myself alone, I deplore the extension of suffrage to uneducated men, white or black, North or South. I regard it as the most fruitful source of misgovernment, both in the Northern cities and in the Southern States. I believe that one of President Grant's best claims to honor consists in his persistent recommendations to limit it by educational qualifications. But it exists in Louisiana, and exists lawfully. The law of Louisiana gives suffrage to men of all classes, all colors, and all degrees of intelligence. The questions we had to consider did not relate to the policy of this law, but solely to the obstruction of the right of one class and color threw in the way of the free exercise of suffrage by men of another class and color. The registration lists of the State show that the voting population two years ago was divided between the whites and the blacks in the proportion of 76,623 to 90,731, and in the year 1876 of 92,096 to 15,310. The footings of the returns of the November election the Democratic Electoral ticket appeared to have received 82,326 votes, and the Republican Electoral ticket only 77,023 votes. In view of the notorious fact that heretofore, in Louisiana, whenever and wherever there has been a fair opportunity for a free expression of their choice the blacks always have voted the Republican national ticket with substantial unanimity, these returns were suspicious on their face. Portentous for justice they were not final. Previous experience had provided a safeguard. They were made to a board which was created by a statute in 1870 with extraordinary powers that were increased by another statute two years later. I assume that these statutes confer upon this board supreme authority to canvass the votes cast throughout the entire State, and not only authorize, but direct it, if convinced that riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences have prevented voters from registering, or have materially interfered with the purity or freedom of election at any poll or voting-place, or have materially changed the result of the election, to exclude the votes cast at such polls or voting-places from the final count. As the Constitution of the United States prescribes that the Presidential Electors shall be appointed in each State "in such manner as the Legislature thereof shall direct," and as the Legislature of Louisiana has seen fit in its discretion to subject the popular vote to such a revision in order to cleanse it from the effects of violence and fraud, no other State nor any person has a right to complain of the Louisiana Board as an illegal tribunal, or object to its proceedings as unauthorized, provided they are in conformity with the statutes of Louisiana. To their conclusive character as judicial proceedings, in which the honest discretion of the members of the board is not subject to supervision or reversal, the Supreme Court of the State has borne witness as follows:

"No statute confers upon the courts the power to try any cases of contested elections or the title to office authorizes them to revise the action of the Returning Board. If we are to assume that prerogative, we should have to sit in the place of the returning officer, of the Supervisors of Elections, examine the right of voters to vote, and, in short, the court would become in regard to such cases mere offices for counting, counting, and recounting election returns. The Legislature has seen proper to lodge the power to decide who has or who has not been elected in the Returning Board. It might have conferred that power on the courts, but it did not. Whether the law be good or bad, it is our duty to obey its provisions and not to legislate."

I do not propose to argue the statutory question which was raised for the first time by the Democratic Committee, in their report, whether the canvassing of the votes for Presidential Electors is not excepted from the jurisdiction of the Returning Board. I am not a lawyer, and am content to rest my opinion of this question on the fact that the board did, in fact, canvass the Presidential vote in 1872 without any such objection, and on the assurance of my colleagues, including lawyers and statesmen, trained in the schools and the practice of jurisprudence, are more competent to deal with that aspect of the question than a layman has myself. Assuming the complete jurisdiction of the board, I propose to discuss so far as my testimony is of such which it became my duty to investigate, in order to determine whether, for the sake of truth and justice, the board is right in excluding a portion of the returns as tainted, and thereby adjudging in the final count that a majority of the honest votes was cast for the Republican Electoral candidates. A careful examination of the testimony before the board, the record of which is so immense that it comprises more than 2,000 large manuscript pages, satisfies me beyond the shadow of a doubt that this was the sad condition of the facts.

INTIMIDATION OF NEGRO VOTERS.

The negroes are a timid race, easily liable to terror, and quick to obey the impulses of fear. Besides their native facility to yield to intimidation, a hundred years of servitude have accustomed them to submit to the exercise of force by white men. It was this amiable and weak quality of their character of which the Democrats availed themselves to reverse by violence the Republican majority in the State. Some 17 parishes were selected for their field of operations, but especially five, in which the blacks so largely outnumbered the whites that if they could be dragooned into voting the Democratic ticket, or restrained from voting at all, the Democratic gain in them alone would secure the State to Tilden on the face of the returns. I refer to the Parishes of East Feliciana, West Feliciana, Morehouse, Ouachita and East Baton Rouge. The registered black voters in these five number 12,904, and the white voters only 5,704, and party lines and color lines are almost synonymous in these. There are few of the blacks who are not Republicans, and few of the whites who are not Democrats. The white Republican population was too feeble and too scattered to resist the policy which was pursued. Every one of these parishes was patrolled at night by bands of armed Democrats, and violent means were taken to impress the negroes with fear of danger to property, limb, and even life, if they should visit the polls without voting the Democratic ticket. Some of them were killed. Many of them were beaten and maimed. The policy was so successful that whereas these parishes in 1874 gave a Republican majority of 3,979, in 1876 they returned a Democratic majority of 4,413. This Democratic gain of 8,391, in these five parishes alone, is larger than the majority returned from the whole State for the Tilden ticket. In East Feliciana, where in 1874 there was a Republican vote of 1,688, only one solitary Republican, white or black, dared to present himself at the polls in November, 1876, although the registration gave 2,127 black voters in the parish. Such was the terrible extent to which I found the same condition of force and fraud, with similar results, in the parishes of Claiborne, Richland, Grant, Union, and several more. There was small cause to complain of the proceedings on election day, except in isolated localities. The work of terror was done beforehand, and it was done effectually. The quiet of the election was the quiet of fear, and not of freedom. The blacks were kept at home or were intimidated into polling a ticket which was not their free choice. On the face of the returns these facts could not appear. They were fair enough on their face, and showed only an amazing reversal of previous political opinion in certain parishes, without showing its cause. But a comparison of the returns of these parishes with these from the rest proved that the change was not a general one throughout the State. This of course was suspicious, and naturally would induce a fair man to search behind the returns; and, upon so searching, the testimony was overwhelming, and to me unconvincing, that it occurred to any considerable degree only in the parishes, and especially in the five I have named, where fear and fraud had controlled the black population. I appeal to you as fair citizens, whether any judicial tribunal, having power over such returns, could suffer results to stand which were obtained by such means. I ask Gov. Tilden and his fair supporters, whether they could enjoy with a clear conscience the fruits of such a harvest. If the Returning Board had not exercised its lawful authority to exclude the returns of these abused parishes, they would have committed a grievous offense against the liberties of the whole people of the United States. It matters not what are the antecedents of the members of the board. They are its members—the lawful depositaries of its power. The question is whether in the present instance they have exercised it legally, wisely, justly, righteously, and that is the only question. If they have previously erred, consciously or unconsciously, that goes only to the degree of inspection which the people should exercise into the facts upon which they have founded their present decision, and surely no one can complain that they are not in the focus of the full blaze of public scrutiny.

GOV. HAYES' VIEWS ON OFFICIAL CORRUPTION IN THE SOUTH.

Nor am I able to agree with the Democratic Committee in their assertion that the evils with which the Republican Administration of Louisiana has afflicted the State induced any great number of black voters to support Gov. Tilden for President in preference to Gov. Hayes. I do not palliate or excuse that Administration in the slightest degree. I know that it has been corrupt, unscrupulous, and wasteful. It has paralyzed the industry and commerce of the City of New-Orleans. It has rendered almost all property unproductive, has averted immigration, and has prevented the recovery of the Mississippi Valley from the disastrous effects of the civil war. I do not deny that there is a great and growing sensitiveness of intelligent men, white and black, to those evils, and I am glad of it. But I do deny that there is evidence to justify a belief that any great number of men, heretofore Republicans in Louisiana, freely voted for Gov. Tilden rather than for Gov. Hayes in the hope of a remedy. The wise and prudent, and patriotic words of our Presidential candidate were familiar throughout Louisiana, and no other, more prudent and more patriotic word have been spoken or written about the Southern troubles, which have resulted from the mistakes of reconstruction and from the control of Federal appointments by ambitious and unscrupulous Republican leaders to whom President Grant unfortunately surrendered the dictation of them. Let me repeat those encouraging and inspiring words. We cannot repeat them too frequently:

"The condition of the Southern States attracts the attention and commands the sympathy of the people of the whole Union. In their progressive recovery from the effects of the war, their first necessity is an intelligent and faithful administration of government which will protect all classes of citizens in their official and private rights. What the South most needs is peace, and peace depends upon the supremacy of the law. There can be no lasting peace if the constitutional rights of any portion of the people are habitually disregarded. A division of political parties resting merely upon sectional lines is always unfortunate and may be disastrous. The welfare of the South, alike with that of every other part of this country, depends upon the attractions it can afford to labor and immigration and to capital. But laborers will not go and capital will not be ventured where the Constitution and the laws are set at defiance, and distraction, apprehension, and alarm take the place of peace-loving and law-abiding social life. All parts of the Constitution are sacred, and must be sacredly observed—the parts that are new no less than the parts that are old. The moral and national prosperity of the Southern States can be most effectually advanced by a hearty and generous recognition of all the rights of all, by all—a recognition without reserve or exception. With such a recognition fully accorded, it will be practicable to promote, by the influence of all legitimate agencies of General Government, the efforts of the people of those States to obtain for themselves the blessings of honest and capable local Government. If elected, I shall consider it not only my duty, but it will be my ardent desire, to favor the attainment of this end. Let me assure my countrymen of the Southern States that if I shall be charged with the duty of organizing an administration, it will be one which will regard and cherish their truest interests—the interests of the white and colored people both, and equally; and which will put forth its best efforts in behalf of a civil policy which will wipe out forever the distinction between North and South in our common country. With a civil service organized upon a system which will secure purity, experience, efficiency, and economy, a strict regard for the public welfare solely in appointments, and the speedy, thorough, and unsparing prosecution and punishment of all public officers who betray official trusts; with a sound currency; with education unsectarian and free to all; with simplicity and frugality in public and private affairs; and with a fraternal spirit of harmony pervading the people of the whole country, I confidently reasonably hope that the second century of our existence as a nation will, by the blessing of God, be pre-eminent as an era of good feeling, and a period of progress, prosperity, and happiness."

Those Southern Republicans who are dissatisfied with what is called "carpet-bag" government had neither the need nor the disposition to look elsewhere than to the writer of those words for a remedy. In his election to the Presidency they had a firm assurance of it. They foresaw under his Administration a reformed Republican Party, reinforced in every Southern State by white men of property, intelligence, and character, and comprising the best part of the remains of the old Whig Party that linger there. They perceived the approach of a day in the near future when the President would retake into his own hands the control of the Federal offices in the South, and exclude from his councils the men who have abused them. It was precisely this which impelled the rash and cruel acts of violence that were committed in the Democratic interest in the intimidated Louisiana parishes. It was because the most rash and unscrupulous Democrats knew that the Republican vote of Louisiana would not lessen itself by the voluntary defection of members of the Republican Party, that they determined to lessen it by violence, and carried out their lawless determination. The very same spirit of intense partisanship which has led some Democrats on the Pacific coast to commit a fraud upon the Electoral vote of Oregon, induced others in the Gulf States to resort to force to repress and defeat a free expression of the popular will. Their motive was political ambition, not political reform. They were unwilling to accept reform from the hands of the Republicans. They were determined that it should come only through Democratic channels, and in order to open those channels they used intimidation.

THE EVIDENCE OF DEMOCRATIC FRAUDS CONCLUSIVE.

I do not believe that the Democratic Party will justify the deeds of its lawless and violent members in Louisiana, when the evidence of them is spread before the country. I see signs of the growth of sobriety among its leaders. It is noticeable in the very report of the Democratic committee who were present with us in New-Orleans, which does not attack the decision of the Returning Board upon the evidence, but upon legal technicalities, impeachment of motives, and assaults against character. It is noticeable in the upright and honorable course of the great majority of the Democratic Senators, under the lead of Mr. Bayard, of Delaware—whom I desire to mention with high respect—in regard to the abrogation of the twenty-second joint rule of Congress. It is manifest in a belief last spreading among Democrats everywhere, and especially among the cooler Democratic leaders of the South, that Gov. Hayes, righteously elected and inaugurated President of the United States, will have the disposition and the power to remove all causes of dissatisfaction with the Federal Administration in the Southern States, and will steadily pursue a policy which will promote the rapid return of prosperity to that section and to the whole country. What is now a doubt on the part of many of Mr. Tilden's recent supporters, whether as President he possibly could suppress that element in the party which committed these acts of violence in Louisiana and of deceit in Oregon, will ripen into conviction before the 4th of March, and reconcile them to their political defeat as a public blessing. Still quicker, perhaps, might be the reconciliation if the whole Louisiana case could meanwhile be submitted by Congress to the revision of the Supreme Court of the United States, whose fairness and impartial judgment I feel a perfect confidence, would confirm in the most solemn manner and to the fullest extent the award by which fraud and force have been rebuked. I deeply regret the defeat of the proposition of Senator Edmunds for such a tribunal, and I hope that the intervention of that court in some form, as an arbiter whose decision will command the confidence of all men, will result from the conferences of the Committees of Congress which now are considering plans for counting the Electoral votes. The Republican cause in Louisiana needs, on the facts, no technicalities, no apology, no concealment, nothing but a full and fair examination, for complete and universal acquiescence in its results. In conclusion, I invite your patriotic efforts to combine the honest men of both parties in a common endeavor to reach a peaceful and harmonious settlement of the Presidential controversy by such a full and fair examination of the facts. Let us discourage a spirit of blind partisanship. Let us welcome association with our political opponents in every fair investigation. Let us appeal to their love of country and their sense of justice not to uphold the wrongs which the black race suffers, but to frown upon the contempt of law searching the terrible record of the testimony which proves that the returns, so fair upon their face, were tainted with fraud and violence, and were a false expression of the popular will. President Grant struck the keynote of patriotism when he declared that "either party can afford to be disappointed in the result, but the country cannot afford to have the result tainted by the suspicion of illegal or false returns."

SANITARY CONDITION OF SCHOOLS.

DISCUSSION BEFORE THE MEDICO-LEGAL SOCIETY—DEFECTS IN THE CONSTRUCTION OF THE BUILDINGS—RECOMMENDATIONS ADOPTED.

At the meeting of the New-York Medico-Legal Society, last night, the sanitary condition of the public schools was discussed by a number of professional gentlemen who gave their views on hygiene and other important questions. The meeting was held at the Academy of Medicine, No. 19 West Thirty-first street. The Chairman, Prof. Hamilton, stated that their investigations into the condition of schools in this City was in the main satisactory; but defects were discovered in the masonry and in the want of cohesion in the iron which the architect and engineer failed to see. Under the present law, rendering attendance at school obligatory, the crowd and strain upon 10 of the public schools were excessive, and either the pressure must be relieved, or the structures must give way. Hon. George H. Yeaman, Chairman of the Committee on School Hygiene, next presented a report containing the following recommendations, which were adopted:

1. That the minimum age of admission to the public schools be made six years instead of four.

2. That the maximum attendance at school, for children under eight years of age, be made three hours per day, with suitable intermissions.

3. That provision be made by law for medical inspection and supervision to secure the adoption and enforcement of sanitary rules and the laws of health.

4. That larger play-grounds should as far as possible be furnished for children; and in improving present school-houses and uniformity in building new ones, they should be surrounded on all sides with an adequate open space, the better to secure light, ventilation, and play-grounds.

Dr. Agnew stated that he found an alarming number of children suffering from weak eyes, but whether this was to be attributed to the peculiar construction of the schools or the nature of their studies he would not undertake to say. He thought that a change in the style of school architecture, particularly in the primary departments, would be beneficial. Dr. Gerrish, Judge Fithian, Mr. Morgan, Dr. Sullivan, and Mr. Morris also spoke on the sanitary condition of the public schools, after which the meeting adjourned.

STRIKE OF ICE HARVESTERS.

HUDSON, Jan. 3.—The strike among the ice harvesters at Catskill this morning assumed large proportions, and violence was feared. Upon assembling, the movement embraced about 100 men, with a large number of silent sympathizers. They formed in line, with banners and music, and proceeded to the Knickerbocker Ice Company's houses, at the "Hop o' Nose," where they unharnessed the horses used in scraping ice. They then marched to the houses at the Point, where they repeated their acts, overcoming all opposition. Warrants for the arrest of the leaders were issued, but at last accounts no arrests had been made. Mr. E. E. Conklin, of the Knickerbocker Company, is at the scene of the trouble, and is determined that those who desire to work shall have protection. Sheriff Hand, of this city, was to-day called upon for officers to keep the peace at Rogar's Island ice-house, a short distance above Catskill, in this county. A dispatch to the Register from Catskill, at 5 o'clock this evening, says the excitement is intense. The strikers are parading the streets, with music and banners, and that 20 special policemen have been sworn in by the village authorities. Serious trouble is anticipated. The leading ice companies hold a meeting in New-York to-night, and it is probable that no ice will be taken from the river for men employed in storing ice shall be $1 25 and $1 50 per day, according to the character of the work, and that under no circumstances will the scale of wages be advanced.

LETTER FROM MR. SHERMAN.

The Mansfield (Ohio) Shield and Banner, a Democratic paper, prints the following letter from Senator Sherman:

UNITED STATES SENATE CHAMBER, WASHINGTON, Dec. 25, 1876.

DEAR SIR: My eye just fell upon a paragraph in your paper of the 23d, taken from the Cincinnati Enquirer, to the effect that my expenses and those of the gentlemen with me, in New-Orleans, were paid by the Secretary of the Treasury. This is false, absurdly so. Each of us paid our own expenses, without hope of repayment. That criminal folly in a party paper to invent such lies. I know you did not do it, and I think the Enquirer copied it. And let me say that there are not 50 Democrats in Richland County, if they had read, as I have, the testimony taken before the Returning Board, who would scorn to secure Electoral votes for Tilden by the crimes committed for that purpose in Louisiana. Please publish this.

Very truly yours,

JOHN SHERMAN.

JOHN Y. GLESSNER, Esq.

WHY MR. HENDRICKS IS DISPIRITED.

The Muncie (Ind.) Times tells why the friends of Gov. Hendricks lost a member of the Legislature at the special election. It says: "On Saturday before the election they held mass-meetings in each of the counties, widely advertised, for the purpose of perfecting their nefarious plot to capture the Government. Hon. John E. Neff, the silver trumpeter of the war hosts, held forth at the Opera-house, and the organization was completed to defeat Major Doxey. Runners were dispatched in every direction to warn the faithful out, and now Tuesday has come and gone, and their candidate, the most popular and respectable man of the party in the two counties, is defeated, the vote showing a loss to the Democratic vote over the State election of 100 in Delaware and 950 in Madison. Call another 'war meeting,' and you won't have a Democratic Party left in Madison County." No wonder that Gov. Hendricks is said to be terribly dispirited at the result.

PHILADELPHIA LONGEVITY.

The Philadelphia Ledger of the 2d inst. says: "The total number of the deaths of octogenarians announced in the Ledger during 1876 was 699, there being 266 men and 433 women, the latter being more than three-fifths of the whole number. The total for 1876 is 24 greater than for 1875, and all the statistics show that the women living over 80 years not only outnumbered the men, but they also were the longest lived, there being many more women than men who lived beyond 90. Of the men who died at or beyond the age of 90, the following are those reached the various ages designated: 90 years, eleven; 91, two; 92, three; 93, five; 94, two; 95, two; 96, four; 97, one; 98, one; 99, one; 100, one; 104, one; 107, one; 110, one. Of the women who died at or beyond the age of 90, the following numbers reached the various ages designated: 90 years, twenty-four; 91, thirteen; 92, six; 93, five; 94, ten; 95, six; 96, six; 97, seven; 98, four; 99, two; 100, five."

THE PUZZLE OF IT.

The Burlington Hawkeye thus puts it: "A man named Hendricks, who lives at or near Indiana, was the other day reading a great many Democratic journals, and ascertained that the feeling was unanimous that the election should, by some, any, or all means be thrown into Congress, that the election of Mr. Tilden by the House might be easily and surely effected. Whereupon the man sat down and sent a telegram to another man named Hewitt, in New-York, and asked him if this was the plan of it. And the man telegraphed back that it was. And when the man in Indiana got the dispatch he 'steamed' it open and read it, and he wrote another one to send back, and he wrote in it. 'What can I see in this for Hendricks?' and sent it back. And then the man showed it to a man named Sam, and they laughed, and told something or took something, it doesn't exactly appear which."

A CRAZY ENGINEER.

The Burlington (Vt.) Free Press of the 1st inst. says: "On Monday morning last, as the engine for the mail train had been fired up in the engine-house at Johnson preparatory to going on the road, an insane man by the name of Magoon, from Hardwick, jumped upon it and pulled the throttle. The watchman was near the turn-table, but succeeded in getting into the cab, and after the engine had got about on it, and after a severe struggle, in which the tools in the cab were freely used, overpowered Magoon and stopped the engine, getting it back so that the train left on time."

THE STATE FINANCES.

REPORT OF THE CONTROLLER.

CONDITION OF THE FINANCES OF THE STATE FOR THE YEAR ENDING SEPTEMBER LAST—EXPENDITURES IN VARIOUS DEPARTMENTS—PRINCIPAL OBJECTS TO WHICH THE GENERAL FUND REVENUES HAVE BEEN APPROPRIATED—ASSESSED VALUATION AND TAXATION.

The annual report of the Controller of the State for the fiscal year ending Sept. 30, 1876, prepared by Hon. Lucius Robinson, late Controller, was transmitted to the Legislature on the 3d inst. by Hon. F. P. Olcott, his successor in office. Following is a summary of the report: The Controller begins by saying that the accounts of the State, are kept with so many different funds, persons who are unacquainted with them are apt to become confused and find it difficult to understand the mass of figures, he has drawn together the results of all the accounts, and presents them in one brief and simple statement, as it would appear if all the funds of the State were consolidated into one. The statement is as follows:

RECEIPTS AND PAYMENTS.

Aggregate balance in the Treasury of all the funds, Oct. 1, 1875	$3,126,778 96
Aggregate receipts during the fiscal year ending Sept. 30, 1876	18,823,886 29

In the foregoing, the account of the General Fund revenue, the apparent surplus of $1,534 65 does not represent the true state of the fund at the date indicated. This is owing to balances due from County Treasurers at the close of the year, and payments on account of the appropriations of 1876, included in the tax payable in 1877. The actual surplus Sept. 30, 1876, is $763,697 16. The State debt, on Sept. 30, 1875, after deducting the unapplied balances of the sinking funds, amounted to $14,747,-304 26; on Sept. 30, 1876, to $9,127,870 34, showing net contributions to the sinking funds during the year of $5,619,433 92. The actual reduction of the debt during the same period by cancellation being $5,012,787 82. The General Fund debt was reduced during the year by the sum of $27,287 82, and now amounts to $3,092,238 58.

The aggregate Canal debt on Sept. 30 was $10,081,-660, with an aggregate of sinking funds of $2,121,-050 24, leaving a balance unprovided for of $7,960,-609 76.

The tolls collected for the year ending Sept. 30, 1875, were $1,902,990 64, and for the year ending Sept. 30, 1876, $1,477,331 55, showing a falling off of $425,659 09. The receipts from all sources for the year ending Sept. 30, 1875, were $1,925,995 63, and the year ending Sept. 30, 1876, $1,487,332 89, showing a falling off of $438,662 74. The expenses for the year ending Sept. 30, 1875, were $1,467,315 95 and for the year ending Sept. 30, 1876, $1,149,194 61, showing a falling off of $318,121 34. The net revenues for the year ending Sept. 30, 1875, were $458,-679 68; and for the year ending Sept. 30, 1876, $338,-138 28, showing a falling off of $120,541 40.

Following is a comparative statement of the expenditures in certain departments for the years 1875 and 1876:

The number of convicts in each of the prisons Sept. 30, 1874, 1875, and 1876, was as follows:

Auburn	1,302	1,212	1,291
Clinton	552	553	623

The amount paid during the year for the State Reformatory at Elmira was $196,693 06. There was paid, for the construction of the new Capitol, during the year, $205,457 92. The total amount paid from the State Treasury, up to date of report, Dec. 20, 1876, including purchase of land, was $7,598,395 16.

The following statement gives the principal objects to which the general fund revenues were appropriated for the past fiscal year, the sources from whence they were derived, and the amounts received and disbursed:

reasonant witness, he having refused to produce before the House Investigating Committee certain telegraphic dispatches passing through that office.

A letter having been read from Messrs. Lowery and Ashton, counsel, asking a postponement of the hearing till Friday next, a resolution to that effect was offered by Mr. KNOTT, of Kentucky, and it was adopted. Mr. Burgus was thereupon remitted to the charge of the Sergeant at Arms.

FEES OF CLERKS OF UNITED STATES COURTS AND MARSHALS.

Mr. DURHAM, of Kentucky, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, reported a bill fixing the fees of Clerks of United States District and Circuit Courts. Passed. Also a bill fixing the compensation of United States Marshals and Deputies. It provides that the compensation of Marshals shall not exceed $5,000 per annum, and that of Deputies shall not exceed $5 per day when actually employed, or $1,200 per annum.

Mr. CONGER, of Michigan, offered an amendment striking out the limitation of $1,200 as the compensation of deputies.

No quorum appearing on the vote for the amendment, the bill went over without action.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. McDILL, of Iowa, to fill the vacancy in the Committee on the rights, duties and privileges of the House in counting the Electoral vote, in place of Mr. Monroe, of Ohio, excused.

The House then, at 1:35 o'clock, adjourned.

THE STATE OF COLORADO.

REPORTS FROM THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE OF THE HOUSE ON THE QUESTION OF ADMITTING MR. BELFORD TO A SEAT.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3.—Representatives KNOTT-Lord, Caulfield, McCrary, Lawrence, Frye, and Hoar are the majority of the House Judiciary Committee who to-day made a report on the credentials of James B. Belford, claiming to be entitled to a seat in the House from Colorado. The distinctive point made against the recognition of Colorado as a State in the Union, was that Congress alone could admit a new State, having the sole power to judge whether its Constitution is Republican in form; but this prerequisite was not complied with. Colorado having been declared by the President to be a State in the Union with a Republican form of government. The majority of the committee, after discussing the provisions of the law under which the people of Colorado were authorized to form a Constitution and State Government preliminary to its admission into the Union on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever, conclude their report as follows: "The provision authorizing the President to declare the State admitted into the Union upon certain things having been made known to him is in no sense a delegation to him of the will of Congress that Colorado should be admitted into the Union upon the happening of a certain series of events. That will Congress expressed for itself in the act. Nor is it a delegation of any authority to him to judge of the expediency or inexpediency of the act taking effect upon the performance of certain conditions. That judgment Congress formed and expressed for itself when it presented the conditions. It simply empowered him to declare the legal result of a complete performance of all the conditions presented in the act on the part of the people of Colorado—namely, the completion of the compact between the United States and the people of Colorado—that the latter should constitute a State in the Union. Assuming that the people of Colorado had in point of fact performed in good faith every condition presented in the act in strict conformity with its provisions, the present Congress would be bound in good morals to recognize them as a State and admit them to representation in the Senate and the House, even if the President had wilfully refused to issue the proclamation provided for, and that the only possible pretext for a failure on the part of Congress to discharge its solemn obligation in that regard would be found in the quibble that the people of Colorado had agreed that their admission should depend finally upon the issual of a proclamation willfully withheld without any fault on their part, and after they had religiously observed and performed every obligation resting on them. Believing they have discharged those obligations, and that every condition upon which Colorado was to be admitted into the Union had been complied with, the committees recommend the adoption of a resolution that Colorado is a State in the Union, and that James B. Belford, Representative-elect from said State, be sworn and admitted to his seat as such."

Representatives HURD, Hunton, Ashe, and Lynde, of the minority of the committee, take issue with the majority, and submit their dissenting views, concluding as follows: "Whatever be the consequence of a refusal to recognize Colorado as a State, no one will here maintain that the main fact that the people have organized a State Government entitles Colorado to a place in the Union. To maintain such a proposition would be to hold that a Territory can admit itself into the Union. But the consequences from a refusal to recognize Colorado will by no means be so serious as urged by the majority. Whether the Government is called a territorial one, the fact remains that there is a Government, and a Government de facto affords the same protection to persons and property, and the same opportunities for the obtaining of justice as a Government de jure." The minority, believing that Colorado has not yet been admitted a State into the Union, and desiring to expedite the people of that Territory in their efforts to obtain such admission, would recommend the adoption of an act as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. That the Constitution and Government that the people of Colorado have lodged for themselves be and the same is hereby accepted, ratified, and confirmed, and that the said State of Colorado shall be and is hereby declared to be one of the United States of America, and is hereby admitted into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever.

THE BUILDING DEPARTMENT.

THE WORK OF 1876—WHERE THE NEW BUILDINGS HAVE BEEN PUT UP.

The operations of the Department of Buildings show that less activity prevailed during 1876 than in 1875 among the large class of workmen whose services are required in the erection of buildings. In 1875 plans for new buildings to the number of 1,393 were filed, while in 1876 there were filed only 1,336. The estimated cost of erecting those for which plans were filed in 1875 was $18,065,770, while in 1876 the cost estimated on the plans filed was $15,446,908. New buildings begun in 1875, 1,062; in 1876, 1,196, many of the number begun last year having been filed in the latter part of 1875. The number of new buildings completed in 1875 was 1,127, as compared with 1,250 completed in 1876. Plans for alterations were filed in 1876 to the number of 1,158, the estimated cost of which was $3,919,220; in 1875, 1,191 plans were filed, to cost $3,130,788. Alterations were begun in 1876 on 1,088 buildings, as compared with 923 undertakings of the same sort in 1875, and while the number of alterations completed in 1876 was 1,098, in 1876 the number finished was 1,059. The work of building was more active in the Nineteenth Ward than in any other in the City, about 20 per cent. of all buildings erected having been erected in that ward. In the Twelfth, Nineteenth, and Twenty-second Wards were erected about 56 per cent. of all buildings completed during the year. The following table shows the number of buildings completed in the different wards during the first nine months of 1876:

Wards.	First quarter.	Second quarter.	Third quarter.	Total for nine months.

DISAPPEARANCE OF SEIZED CIGARS.

On Saturday last Custom-house Officers Judd, McCort, and Narramore, attached to Supervisor Sharpe's department, seized on board the steam-ship City of Havana, lying at Pier No. 3 North River, 2,500 bundles of cigars and 1,800 packages of cigarettes, which some persons intended to land without sending them through the Custom-house. When the articles were taken from the vessel it was too late to send them to the Seizure Room of the Custom-house, and they were, therefore, stowed in a closet of an office on the pier, and two special watchmen were detailed to guard them at night. One watchman went on duty at sundown on Saturday; the other relieved him at midnight. On Sunday the officers who seized the property found it all right; but on Monday morning they discovered that it had been taken from the closet, the door of which gives early evidence of having been forced open. Officer Judd said yesterday that when he learned of the disappearance of the cigars and cigarettes, he asked the watchman on duty what had become of them. The latter answered that when he had relieved the previous watchman at midnight, he noticed that the closet in the cabin had been broken open and robbed, and immediately went to the Barge Office, where he informed the Lieutenant in charge of the occurrence. Further than this, he said, he knew nothing. An investigation will be made by Supervisor Sharpe, and, from present appearances, at least one of the watchmen will be dismissed.

LAW REPORTS.

THE OLD GARDINER SUIT.

THE CLAIM OF GARDINER AGAINST THE MAYOR—THOMAS C. FIELDS' STORY OF THE MATTER.

Judge VAN BRUNT, in Supreme Court, Circuit, Part II, yesterday dismissed the complaint in the suit of John C. Gardiner against the Mayor, &c. It will be remembered that the plaintiff is a brother of George A. Gardiner, who committed suicide in 1854, after obtaining a large amount of money on a bogus mining claim. The Government compromised its suit by taking the principal and giving the interest, amounting to $37,000, to Thomas C. Fields, then Public Administrator, for the benefit of the estate; $20,000 were given to the next of kin of the deceased, and the remainder was retained by Fields for himself and the counsel. The Surrogate signed the decree making such awards. Fields' testimony was taken in Montreal, Canada. He testified that the settlement was with the knowledge and assent of all the heirs; that all above $20,000 should go to discharge the expenses prior to and in accomplishing the settlement or compromise. To his best recollection he expended $17,912 04 in paying expenses and counsel fees and in effecting the compromise. Fields' replies to the first cross-interrogatory were: "I arrived in the City of New-York on the 1st day of April, 1841; I studied law with Hon. Robert H. Morris; was admitted, and practiced law in said City up to 1873; left the City of New-York the 5th day of October, 1873; have resided in Europe and Canada since; have been engaged in no permanent business; I am at present domiciled in Canada; I am in doubt as to making it my permanent residence; my present intention is to leave for Europe in a short time; am not engaged in any business." Fields produced receipts for $5,000 paid to Gardiner's counsel, $6,700 to Gen. Sickles, and about $1,000 to other persons, adding: "In addition to these sums I expended other large sums of money, including an additional sum to Mr. Sickles of about $3,000, and large sums to other parties, vouchers for which I have not, and, in my opinion, never took any. I cannot state what compissions were allowed me." The reading of Fields' deposition elicited much latter, especially where it particularized the amount of his expenditure, even to the item of four cents, while his enumeration of items was very vague. His statements that he came to this City on the 1st of April and was in doubt as to making Canada his permanent residence also provoked merriment. Judge VAN BRUNT dismissed the complaint in the suit, because the decree of the Surrogate is conclusive upon all parties who were before the Surrogate.

GUARDIAN SEEKING A CHILD'S CUSTODY.

John D. Welch, Jr., of this City, died on April 21, 1874. His wife, Kate Welch, survived him, as did his infant son, George M. Welch. John D. Welch left a will, in which he appointed Edwin Welch, Albert Welch, and Sarah Welch guardians of the person and property of his child. Mrs. Welch, the widow of the testator, had left her husband about 14 months prior to his death, and had gone to live with her maternal uncle, one Edward Burbank, who is a policeman, and lives in Forsyth street. She took her child with her, and her husband considering the tender age of his son, was loth to take proceedings to regain the latter's custody. In his will, however, he left the property and custody of the child to the guardians before mentioned. The latter instituted somewhat before speaking to deprive the mother of her child's custody, and while they were successful Mrs. Welch died, leaving the child to the custody of Mr. Burbank. The guardians applied to Judge DONOHUE, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, for a writ of habeas corpus, whereby to gain possession of the child. The petitioners stated in their application that Burbank resides on the third floor of a tenement house, and that the premises are not favorable to the healthy nurture of the child. Burbank, also, they claim is unable, by reason of the peculiar nature of his vocation, to look after the child properly. Judge DONOHUE granted the writ sought.

COURT NOTES.

John Gress, of Harrisburg, Penn., alias William White, alias Capt. Robert Fleming, was sentenced yesterday, in the Court of Special Sessions, to six months' imprisonment and to pay a fine of $100, for obtaining money by trick and device from hotel-keepers.

James Cummings, said to be a member of the "Osceola Club," known to the Police as "the Forty Thieves," was charged in the Court of General Sessions yesterday, with breaking into the liquor saloon of John Kelly, and stealing therefrom liquors and cigars valued at $25. The jury found Cummings guilty, and Judge GILDERSLEEVE sentenced him to four years in the State Prison.

Before Judge BARRET, and a jury, in Part III. of the Supreme Court, yesterday, was begun the fourth trial of the suit of John Steward against the Phœnix Fire Insurance Company. The action is on a $2,000 policy, the property insured being a mill at Mackford, Wis. The defendants set up in answer that in the survey of the premises which was made a portion of the policy the plaintiff made certain misrepresentations. The case is still on.

Thomas Coleman, a bricklayer, snatched a pocket-book containing $22 from Harriet Cunningham, while that lady was walking on Third avenue, on Dec. 15. He pleaded guilty to petit larceny, in the Court of General Sessions, and was sentenced to three months in the Penitentiary. The offense being larceny from the person, Assistant District Attorney LYON had Coleman brought back, and the prisoner pleaded guilty to that offense. Judge GILDERSLEEVE sentenced him to two years in the State Prison.

In Part I. of the Court of General Sessions yesterday, Assistant District Attorney LYON called the case of Charles Benkert, alias Pratt, alias Hen, charged with obtaining goods by false pretenses. The paper showed that on Nov. 20 the prisoner engaged board with Mrs. Maria Anderson, and represented that he was a member of the firm of Morrow & Co. He disappeared after a day's sojourn, and was next heard of at the boarding-house of Mrs. Margaret Barton, where he procured a good room and board by representing himself as a Mr. Hep, a tobacco dealer. The prisoner pleaded guilty, and said that he was a salesman, from Philadelphia. Judge GILDERSLEEVE said that if the prisoner ever came before him again, he should punish him as severely as the law allowed. For the present offense, he would inflict the mitigated penalty of one month in the Penitentiary.

A JUDGMENT BY DEFAULT FOR TILDEN.

The suit of Henry H. Boody against Samuel J. Tilden and others, was called before Judge SPEIR, in the Superior Court, Special Term, yesterday, on a motion by the defendant to dismiss the complaint. The action was brought to recover $22,000, and interest, alleged to have been overdrawn by Tilden in a "pool" gotten up to obtain a controlling interest in the Chicago and Galena Union Railroad Company, and to consolidate that corporation with the Chicago and North-western Railroad Company. Tilden's great defense to the action was contained in an elaborate plea of the Statute of Limitations, he alleging that the matters referred to had happened more than ten years prior to the beginning of the action. When the case was called yesterday, no one appeared on behalf of the plaintiff, and Judge SPEIR granted judgment in Mr. Tilden's favor, with costs, and also awarded $1,500 extra allowance to the defendant's lawyers, probably for their skill in obtaining extensions of time for Mr. Tilden to answer. Extensions were obtained for days in all. On inquiry yesterday at the office of HAWKINS & CATHRON, the plaintiff's attorneys, a TIMES reporter was informed by Mr. CATHRON that Mr. HAWKINS had charge of the case, but had been detained in Brooklyn. They did not believe that Tilden's attorneys would take a "snap judgment" of this kind. Mr. CATHRON said they would move to open the default.

THE SUITS AGAINST TWEED'S BONDSMAN.

The case of The People, &c., against Charles Devlin was called in the General Term of the Court of Common Pleas yesterday, but was adjourned until to-day in consequence of the absence of District Attorney PHELPS, the counsel for the people. Devlin was Tweed's bondsman in five criminal indictments, and his recognizances were forfeited in the Court of Oyer and Terminer on Tweed's escape. At the same time a certiorari was granted to carry the case for review before the Supreme Court, General Term This operated as a stay of proceedings, but in spite of this, some one in the County Clerk's office, finding the orders for estreat among the records, entered judgments on them without authority. The judgments form a lien on the property of Devlin, and the latter is unable to dispose of any of it. He seeks to have the judgments exounged. The application was made first in the Supreme Court, Chambers, but Judge BRADY there decided that the Common Pleas was the proper place at which to make the application. District Attorney PHELPS appears for the people, and Field & Deyo for the defendant.

AN ANSWER IN A NOTE SUIT.

Judge FRIEDMAN, in the Superior Court, Special Term, yesterday rendered a decision on a motion for a reference in the case of Isaac B. Newcombe and Joseph Packard against Eugene M. Earle. The suit is brought to recover $30,000 on six notes given by the defendant. The latter in answer to the claim sets up that the plaintiffs, in 1875, were engaged in the business of buying and selling stocks on commission, and made a contract with him whereby they agreed to buy for him certain stocks, among others, Panama Railroad stock. He alleges that they were at the time agents of persons engaged in carrying on and manipulating Panama stock. The defendant claims that the plaintiffs really made fictitious purchases of their own stock for him, and also rendered to him false accounts, containing sales of stock unauthorized by him. He also alleges that they threatened to expose his pecuniary circumstances, and in this way compelled him to give him six notes, from time to time renewed. These renewed notes are the ones sued on. The plaintiffs made the motion for a reference on the ground that many accounts would have to be examined in trying the case. The defendant in opposition insisted that the plaintiffs sought a reference merely to avoid the publicity of a trial in court. Judge FRIEDMAN ordered a reference.

A POLICY IN THE CONTINENTAL LIFE.

The case of Merrell against the Continental Life Insurance Company was brought up before Judge GILBERT in the Supreme Court of Kings County yesterday. The plaintiff is a widow, residing in California, and previous to its failure, the Company had sent her, in payment of her policy upon her husband's life, a draft for $7,600 on the United States Trust Company, where they had on deposit more than that amount of money Before the mail could carry the draft to her for indorsement, and return it to this City for presentation, the Company had passed into the hands of the Receiver, and the latter took possession of all the funds so that this draft was not paid. The case came up on a motion to compel the Receiver to pay the amount of the draft on the ground that it operated as a special assignment in favor of the widow of so much of the funds then in the hands of the Trust Company as Trustee for the widow's benefit. After full consideration the court granted an order for its payment to the plaintiff. Elliott F. Shepard appeared for the motion, and Sewell and Pierce in opposition.

Mr. E. A. Cronin, of Oregon, is a very remarkable person. His faculty of intuitive perception comes out quite as strongly as his strawberry nose. Gov. Grover had not told him that his name was on the Electoral certificate, or that it was to be put on, but Cronin expected a call to serve his country, and having, quite accidentally, happened to be in a position where he could peer over the shoulder of the Governor's Private Secretary, he saw his name on the certificate. This discovery induced him to attend in the room where the meeting of the Electoral College was held, and, while there another happy accident befell him. In answer to a knock whose purpose he divined, he opened the door and took a package which his instincts told him contained the Electoral certificates, and which he immediately put in his pocket, as he had a further intuition that somebody might take it from him. Cronin did not wait to hear the refusal of the duly-chosen Electors to act with him; he conjectured, in defiance of all analogy, that their silence meant refusal. Money came to Cronin as mysteriously as intuitions. He made the very liberal estimate of $3,000 for the expenses of his trip to Washington and back, and though the actual expense is about $500, his demand was promptly acceded to. It probably did not surprise Cronin any more than it will the general public to learn that an order signed by the Chairman of the Oregon Democratic Committee was duly honored by a banking-house in Liberty street, New-York, and that Mr. Cronin carried his characteristic nose, his wonderfully acute perceptions, and his bogus vote to Washington by the aid of the same corruption fund which brought the quack-medicine candidate within sight of the Presidency.

Mr. Tilden has apparently imposed on the Democratic Governors the duty of showing their hands. Mr. Vance, of North Carolina, showed his on Tuesday in an awkward and rather blundering fashion. Mr. Hubbard, of Connecticut, showed his yesterday when he was inaugurated, and everybody was struck with the similarity between his style and that of Mr. Tilden himself. Mr. Hubbard's speech consisted largely of a labored partisan attack on the General Government, in which he can see no good. He painted the usual picture of Federal "battalions" surrounding the polls and taking "midnight possession" of legislative halls, and doing other things which make the Governor think that we are on the straight road to imperialism and a military despotism. Of course, he sees nothing requiring interference or even criticism in the shotgun policy of the Democrats in South Carolina, or the systematic "bull-dozing" by the same party in Louisiana. He only recognizes the whites as the people of the South, and sticks to the good old Democratic doctrine that black men have no rights which white men are bound to respect. Mr. Hubbard, however, is not so bold but he may live to learn that neither the country, nor the Constitution, nor the Administration is the same as in James Buchanan's day, and that the American people are not afraid of armed tyranny resulting from a firm and moderate determination by the General Government to maintain, as far as its power goes, the equal rights of all.

The address of Gen. Van Alen before the Republican Reform Club, last night, is a valuable contribution toward a full understanding of the dispute concerning the vote of Louisiana. Its merits are not so much those of a presentation of new facts as of the clear statement of facts and principles already ascertained, by a man whose position and character lend them new weight and added significance. Of all the members of the Louisiana Committee, selected by the President, no one was less of a partisan than Gen. Van Alen, and certainly none could regard the matter more evidently from the point of view of an independent and patriotic citizen, who, "if he saw fraud or outrage on either side, would be very quick to say so." It is his opinion that "the Returning Board of Louisiana could not have permitted the vote of their State to stand for the Democratic Electors, as it apparently did on the face of the returns, without violating the statute by virtue of which they held office, and sanctioning a mass of intimidation and fraud, disgraceful to republican institutions," and he appeals to "Gov. Tilden and his fair supporters, whether they could enjoy with a clear conscience the fruits of such a harvest." As Gov. Tilden is simply the centre and directing spirit of a knot of unscrupulous political gamblers, people have never stopped to consider what might be the result of conscientious scruples which in his case are non-existent.

The club, which includes in its membership several of our wealthiest and most eminent citizens, passed some brief resolutions at the close of Gen. Van Alen's address, which point out the only method of settling the Presidential question. In one they declare "that the sure and patriotic way to the reform of our Government, the restoration of public confidence, and the revival of business interests, is a universal and cheerful acquiescence in the official declaration of the election of the candidates for President and Vice President of the United States which has been determined by the votes of the Electoral Colleges." And in the other they state, with equal justice, "that the attempt of partisans to obstruct the declaration of that vote is the efficient cause of the stagnation of trade and the suspension of industry." This is better than vague talk about "unselfish patriotism," and so forth, because it touches the root of the matter from which the Democrats are very industriously trying to divert public attention.

In the matter of the returning of the so-called Japanese indemnity fund there is some difference between the action proposed by the House and that proposed by the Senate. The amount originally paid by Japan was less than $750,000, gold. It reached that sum when the value of exchange was added. The Senate has passed a bill to refund $750,000. The House proposes to add the accrued interest, which would make the sum total about $1,250,000. Lest some frugal person should be startled by a proposition to pay to a friendly power so much money as reparation, after twelve years, for an unjustly exacted indemnity, it should be said that the money has never been included in the assets of the United States Government. Mr. Seward, who was Secretary of State when the money was received, invested it in United States bonds, and the bonds have been in the custody of the State Department from that day to this. The Treasury has had the use of the money, just as it has had the use of that of its other creditors. The bonds in the hands of the Secretary of State, with accrued interest, are now worth $500,000 more than Japan originally paid us. If the Japanese Government receives half a million more than was paid twelve years ago, it will be because Mr. Seward, who favored a return of the indemnity, made a shrewd investment.

FLORIDA AND LOUISIANA.

The course of events in Florida suggests a moral that will not detract from the strength of the Republican Party in the estimation of intelligent men. The State has been cheated out of its right to elect its own rulers. Its Electoral vote remains in the Republican column simply because the majority of its Returning Board could neither be bribed nor bullied into a violation of their duty. The law had given them power to count the vote, and on an honest count they found that the State had declared for Hayes and Wheeler. The same inflexible principle, guided by the same discriminating use of facts, led them to conclude that the Republican State ticket had also been elected. The intervention of a State court, at the instance of partisans, brought about a reopening of the count so far as the local ticket was concerned. The board was denied a right to judge between lawful and fraudulent votes. It was ordered to accept false returns as though they were genuine, and to abstain from purging other returns of the frauds that tainted them.

It is known that the facts already acquired reveal but a fraction of the frauds and violence that were employed by the Democratic Party in the State. Enough, however, has been ascertained to establish the moral worthlessness of the Democratic title to the Governorship or any other of the local advantages resulting from the unjust interference of the court. A system of intimidation prevailed which alone should vitiate the vote in certain districts. The proscription waged against Northern citizens who have settled in the State, and devoted their capital and energies to the development of its resources, might seem incredible, considering the assiduity with which Northern people are invited to make Florida their home. But it is too well authenticated to be denied. At Jacksonville, and wherever Northern men and money have substituted life and prosperity for the desolation that previously reigned, the most shameless methods were resorted to to insult and injure them. They were denounced, derided, menaced, and in many cases cruelly wronged. The more flagrant crimes, intended to keep away colored voters, were supplemented with others to which the Democrats are addicted outside of Florida. Republican voters were arrested on frivolous and trumped-up charges, in order that they might be detained until the polls closed. Repeating and ballot-box stuffing were brought into requisition. Records were falsified or destroyed. All the tricks and frauds with which the Democracy have familiarized us in New-York were reproduced in Florida, and outrages were added which Tammany in its hey-day would not have dared to attempt. All these facts the court ignored.

The Republicans have submitted. Of the Presidential vote they could not be robbed. The Governorship and the Legislature have been wrested from them by the agencies we have described. The formalities of law have been the instruments for working a scandalous injustice. The Republicans accept the situation, not because they have any misgiving as to their own moral right to all the fruits of victory, or because they concede the construction put upon the law by the judicial tools of the Democratic Party. They submit on the ground that for legal wrongs there are legal remedies, and that no perversion of power by individual Judges can justify violent revolutionary measures.

Contrast this conduct with that of the Democrats in Louisiana, and the distinguishing characteristics of the two parties become apparent. In Louisiana the Democrats have no solid ground to stand upon. They may assail the law providing for the organization of the Returning Board and vesting in it the powers it exercised, but the authority of the board itself they have not seriously questioned. Its right to exercise judicial functions, so far as that right can be conferred by legislation, is, on nearly all sides, admitted. From its verdict there is no appeal, except to the nation's sense of justice. How that will decide when the shocking condition of things, which has been partially reported, shall be fully exposed, with the sanction of a committee whose inquiries have been conducted with rare impartiality and moderation, we cannot doubt. On this point the testimony of a man like Gen. Van Alen, no less distinguished for independence than for purity of character, ought to be final. In his address, published in our columns to-day, he places on record his deliberate judgment, arrived at after a full and searching examination of the facts, that "the Republican case in Louisiana needs on the facts no technicality, no apology, no concealment, nothing but a full and fair examination, for complete and universal acquiescence in its results." The Louisiana Democrats, however, constitute themselves judges in their own behalf, and deliberately apply themselves to the task of resisting law, with incipient anarchy as the immediate result. They proposed to take a lesson from Wade Hampton's book, and to sway the organization of the Legislature by the pressure of a mob. Foiled in this by the precautionary action of Gov. Kellogg, they retire and elsewhere go through the farce of converting a minority of the two chambers into an opposition Legislature. The only recognizable returns of the election show that on the State as well as the national ticket they are a minority. The fact is not allowed to hinder their obstructive policy. They accept the fraudulent estimates of the Democratic committee, with the attesting signature of a person who has no official existence; and on this flimsy basis they proceed to announce the election as Governor of a candidate who was defeated by 3,500 votes, and in other respects to repeat the manœuvres which attended the bogus election of McEnery.

It is not easy to write gravely of incidents in themselves ridiculous. Judged by any common-sense standard, the Louisiana Democratic managers would seem to be a group of idiots. There is no coherence in their plan, and no possibility of its accomplishing anything for either Tilden or Nicholls. But folly often leads to mischief. And, however it may end, the line of conduct they have marked out for themselves tends to prolong the unhappy strife with which the State is afflicted, and to furnish pretexts for the agitation on which Northern Democrats rely as a means of influencing the policy of their friends in Congress. The latter consideration is probably that which determines the decision of the managers in Louisiana; and their readiness to help the scheme is but another sign of the desperation to which the party has been reduced by Mr. Tilden's craving for a distinction to which he has no proper title.

THE LAST DEVICE OF THE SILVER RING.

A letter which we published from our Washington correspondent last week throws a good deal of light on the plot for carrying the Silver bill through the Senate. We call it a plot advisedly, for there is no question that the measure is pushed with great energy by a set of men who expect to make money, and that largely, by its success. The soundness or unsoundness of the legislation they seek is of no consequence to them; neither is the effect which their measure may have on the credit of the country or on the prosperity of the people generally, or on any particular class of the people except themselves. What they wish is to make silver the coin of the country, to force a market for several hundred millions of the product of the Nevada mines, and to commit the Government to a policy which will compel a steadily increasing demand for silver. These objects would all be accomplished by the Bland bill as it passed the House, since that bill was intended to authorize, and probably would require, the substitution of silver payments for gold payments in respect of nearly if not quite all Government bonds, interest and principal, and would require as well the redemption in silver of the legal-tender notes. It would also authorize the payment of Customs dues in silver instead of gold, unless interpreted judicially differently from what now seems possible. Such a measure, with such wide-reaching objects, pursued deliberately and with recourse to all manner of means, legitimate and otherwise, answers to the name of "plot," and as such it should be regarded and met.

We confess to a feeling of astonishment and chagrin that it should be thought possible that this bill is to receive, at the outset, a half-way favorable reception from the Senate Committee on Finance. It is reported, we trust erroneously, that Senator Sherman is prepared to present the bill to the Senate with an amendment, leaving the power of coinage unlimited, but limiting the legal-tender quality of silver to some sum variously stated at from $20 to $50. We can only say that such a "compromise" would be no compromise at all. It would be substantially a surrender; and that it could be even attributed to the Chairman of the Finance Committee, shows how demoralizing the whole silver business has been. The concession which Mr. Sherman is said to be ready to make is, of course, only one step further than that which the Secretary of the Treasury made so gratuitously in his last report. There is really no more reason for $50,000,000 of silver legal tender with a limit of $10, than there is for an indefinite issue with a limit of $50. The only motive for either, so far as we can perceive, is that the silver miners demand something. But that is precisely the reason why they should get nothing. If they are given an inch in the way of a limited legal tender, they will soon take an ell in the way of unlimited legal tender.

Anything, however slight apparently, which serves to give the impression that the United States is tending to a revival of the silver legal tender at this time would be an incalculable misfortune, an almost irreparable injury to the country, and a concession such as Mr. Sherman is said to contemplate would have precisely that effect. It would, in the first place, be a definite victory for the Silver Ring. It would be an acceptance to that extent of their fallacious and pernicious theory of legal tender. It would be a recognition by the Government of the fitness of silver to serve as a legal tender for other than subsidiary or token coinage. It would be a concession of the idea that, for certain important functions, for the discharge of debts under the limit named, the Government could fix an arbitrary relation between gold and silver, and make sixteen ounces of the latter actually worth one ounce of the former. This might easily satisfy the Ring for the present, for it would be the entrance of the edge of the wedge far enough and firmly enough to enable them to drive it home in good time. And, moreover, a limited legal tender, beyond the bounds of token coinage, would be a gross outrage on the wages-earning class, and one which they would have great difficulty in repelling or redressing. If silver were a universal legal-tender in the United States, the commercial classes would in a rough way protect themselves against its fluctuations. But the class which work for wages could do this only very imperfectly; in fact, they could hardly do it at all. Like other demagogic schemes for tinkering the currency, which have a professed purpose of serving the laboring classes, the Silver bill, is a most unjustifiable attempt to rob and persecute them. It should be met with determined, vigilant, and uncompromising opposition at every step.

SPRINGER ON "PRESIDENTIAL COUNTS."

The House half of the Joint Committee on Counting the Electoral Vote, or rather the Democratic fraction of that half, of which Springer and Hewitt constitute a large majority, have published, through the Appletons, of this City, their preliminary report. The Springer sub-committee report, made, not to Congress, but to a New-York publishing firm, is divided into two parts—an incoherent stump speech in favor of counting in Tilden, facetiously termed an "Analytical Introduction," and choice extracts from that popular work, the Congressional Globe. The whole document makes a little 8vo. pamphlet of only 724 pages. Unbound Congressional Reports it has heretofore been impossible to give away, unless something very valuable, like a Patent Office Report, was attached to the proffered gift. But the unsuspecting public, it is expected, can be seduced by superior binding to pay the trifling sum of three dollars and fifty cents for a report from two such extraordinary men as the explosive Springer and the exploded Hewitt.

The first thing to be said of this Democratic report in book form is that it is sloppy. There are three blunders on the first page, and at least one on every succeeding page that we have examined. "There have been twenty-one Presidential elections under our Federal Constitution," begins this authentic document—when all the elementary text-books inform us there have been twenty-two. "There are 184 uncontested votes on one side, 165 on the other side and twenty in dispute." The Democratic House Committee sent to South Carolina declares this statement to be false. On the same first page, in attempting to give the counting clause of the Constitution, this book-report says, not the votes, but the certificates "shall then be counted." On the next page but one, Springer says the first counting of the Electoral vote was done "before the Senate had elected its President pro tem.," when in point of fact John Langdon was elected President pro tempore, for the express purpose of doing the counting and remained such until John Adams took his chair.

According to their own showing, and the open confession of these Congressional attorneys, the first precedent, made by the framers of the Constitution, is "dead" against them. The first Senate elected a President pro tempore for the sole purpose of counting the Electoral vote. He did count said vote, and declared the result in the Senate Chamber, the House assenting to all this, and agreeing that the notifications to the persons elected be made in such manner as the Senate should be pleased to direct. But the author of the book of Counts, resolving, like Rip Van Winkle, not to count this, throws himself in a helpless manner on and around the second count. What was this "regular procedure which has been substantially followed ever since"? The Senate informed the House that a President of the Senate was "elected for the sole purpose of opening the certificates and counting the votes of the several States in the choice of a President and Vice President of the United States," and subsequent to this the House tellers delivered to the House a list of the votes of the Electors "as the same were declared by the President of the Senate." Here we have an incontestable solution of the meaning of the important phrase used in twenty joint rules, defining the duties of tellers "to make a list of the votes as they shall be declared." It matters not what joint committees were appointed to do; the material fact is what was done. The President of the Senate announced the state of the vote and the persons elected, which was deemed the official declaration of the result.

At the third counting, on Feb. 8, 1797, the House informed the Senate that they were ready to meet the Senate, "to attend the opening and examining the votes of the Electors for President and Vice President of the United States, as the Constitution provides." John Adams, although then Vice President and successful candidate for President, officially certifies over his own name that he did "open all the certificates and count all the votes of the Electors for a President and a Vice President," &c. And "in obedience to the Constitution and the law of the United States," and as if that were not enough to warrant him in announcing himself elected President, he adds that he has the authority of Congress to make so seemingly immodest a proclamation. The record says: "The Vice President then delivered the votes of the Electors to the Secretary of the Senate," which would have been quite an impossible thing to do if, according to the Democratic theory of having parted with these votes when he opened them, he had nothing to deliver. In conclusion, here is a precedent of sufficient weight to occupy the reflections of Jeffersonian Democrats until we return to this subject again:

Be it known, That the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, being convened at the City of Washington on the second Wednesday of February, A. D. 1801, the underwritten Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate, did, in the presence of the said Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and count all the votes of the Electors for President; whereupon it appeared that Thomas Jefferson, of Virginia, and Aaron Burr, of New-York, had a majority of the votes of the Electors, and an equal number of votes; in consequence of which the House of Representatives proceeded to a choice of a President, and have this day notified to the Senate that Thomas Jefferson has by them been duly chosen President; by all of which it appears that Aaron Burr, Esq., of New-York, is duly elected, agreeably to the Constitution, Vice President of the United States of America.

In witness thereof, I have hereunto set my hand and seal this 18th day of February, 1801.

SIGNS OF WAR.

No reader who has paid the slightest attention to affairs in Eastern Europe can have failed to note that there has been a steady drifting toward war. On the part of Russia it is apparent that negotiations have been conducted with a twofold purpose; first, to gain time for preparation, and, second, to throw upon Turkey the responsibility for provoking hostilities. Turkey, while willing to prolong the armistice and delay the final conflict, has fought at every stage of the diplomatic battle with characteristic Oriental obstructiveness. In this particular, the attitude of the Sublime Porte has been singularly like that of China when the Allies, in 1859, were put off with shuffling evasions until war could no longer be delayed. In all of the seeming concessions of Turkey there has been an aspect of reserve which has not betokened that abasement which some of the more ardent crusaders of modern times have anticipated. It has seemed probable that, when all was said and done, Turkey would be found in its last retreat, ready to fight for its existence in Europe. The Turks, indeed, have already declared that they came into Europe few in numbers, and that the few who will remain when all is ever will be buried by their enemies. Of course, in all these interminable negotiations there have been declarations of the most peaceful intentions on both sides. There has been no sharp crisis which has not been immediately succeeded by the most reassuring indications. Nevertheless, the ultimate tendency has been toward war. The fine phrases and diplomatic redundancies, once stripped off, reveal nothing but a warlike and aggressive purpose on the one side, and an equally warlike and defiant determination on the other.

To appreciate what seems the madness of the Turk, we must consider his pride of race, his natural tenacity of purpose, and the magnificent military traditions of his race. For more than three centuries, the descendants of Othman have reigned in Constantinople. During this long period, the glories of the reigns of Amurath, Bajazet, Selim, and Solyman have been the glories of the haughty Turk. In the nature of things, it was not possible that he should comprehend the decline of the power of the Ottoman Empire which the rest of the civilized world has seen. And now, after years of delay, after months of parleying, the representative of Othman is confronted with proposals which are absolutely degrading to him and his people. It is not necessary that we should refer to the justice of these propositions, nor to the events which have precipitated this crisis upon Turkey. The fact remains that the ultimatum offered to the Government of the Sublime Porte is in its essence and particulars revolting to every son of Islam.

In brief, Turkey is asked to surrender its sovereignty in its Christian provinces. The final proposals of the great powers have no other practical meaning. It is demanded that Bulgaria shall be divided into two provinces; that Governors shall be appointed by consent only of the allied powers; that guarantees of certain popular reforms for the Christian subjects of Turkey shall be given; and that to secure the execution of these reforms still further, a military police force of foreign recruits shall be introduced by the allies and maintained and paid by Turkey. We may concede to the Turk all the barbaric tyranny and bigotry which have been claimed for him, but he is not yet sunk so low that he can view this naked proposal of abdication without indignation. Midhat Pasha has very spiritedly declared that the Turks will not listen to a proposition to cut their own throats. If that operation is to be performed at all, their challengers must come and do it themselves. Pressed to the wall, the Sultan declares that he will uphold his rights and trust in God. This is the language of a lineal successor in a long and gorgeous line of Caliphs, as well as of one who adheres to the fatalistic traditions of his race.

On the other hand, we may concede that there is nothing unreasonable in the long-cherished wish of Russia to secure an outlet into the Mediterranean for its Black Sea commerce. The rest of Europe has so long been taught to consider this desire one of extraordinary wickedness, that John Bright's late defense of its justice came upon the English public with the freshness of a new revelation. Then, again, the atrocities which have inflamed the Slavic peoples whose territory borders that of Turkey, have scandalized the world long enough. The Bulgarian massacres which Disraeli attempted to pooh-pooh were real. Nothing more forcibly illustrates the change of opinion which the civilized world has gradually undergone than the sudden change which has come over the English people in this regard. It is scarcely two months since Disraeli publicly challenged Russia to interfere in the affairs of Turkey at her peril. To-day the English Ambassador waits to see what answer Turkey gives to the Russian proposals, indorsed and enforced by England, before he abandons the Sultan to his fate. It does not matter what shape the Russian policy takes in this controversy. The sentimental and humanitarian considerations are uppermost. The treatment of the Bulgarians furnishes the occasion. The passage of the Dardanelles and the Bosphorus is the ultimate end in view.

The Turks will fight to the last for their Empire. They will not readily be conquered. And, whatever may immediately come of to-day's conference at Constantinople, war seems inevitable sooner or later. War has been in incessant preparation ever since the first outbreak in Herzegovina. Russia is a vast camp, and her columns are at this moment pressing to the Vistula and the Pruth. Nor has Turkey been idle through all these years. The iron-clad fleet of the hapless Abdul-Aziz was something more than a plaything. It is one of the finest in the world. That monarch, too, accumulated military stores with an industry which was almost a passion. Russian credit is not good in the markets of Europe, and Russian funds are low. Turkey is bankrupt; and what is worse for her, she is at last alone. If any ally is yet to come to her relief, no sign of his coming is now to be seen. We cannot tell how soon the cannon's opening roar shall be heard. It will be the signal for the downfall of the Ottoman Empire in Europe.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

THE SO-CALLED SALT NUISANCE.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

If the horse railroad companies would quickly sweep the snow and ice melted by the use of salt not only from the curves, switches, and crossings, where they are allowed by law to use it, down into the nearest sewer culverts, but also from the tracks, where they so often surreptitiously put it, there would be no just cause of complaint. Salt is not so injurious to horses' feet as is generally supposed, or the horse railroad companies would be the last to use it, as their horses are more exposed than any others. The injury to the public health, except from wet shoes, is absolutely chimerical, and the supposition that it causes widely-spread diptheria, or any other malignant disease, is altogether gratuitous, if not absurd.

If, when hard snow and ice accumulates on the sidewalks, our citizens were obliged by law to sprinkle salt upon it, in place of ashes or sawdust, and then promptly sweep the melted product into the gutters, the latter would be kept more open, and the sewers would be partly disinfected; also the foul water in our filthy docks would be slightly improved. If the omnibus routes and railroad tracks were promptly salted, after each fall of snow, and the melted mass as quickly swept into the nearest culverts, the benefits to rapid and cleanly travel, and to the public health would be great indeed. The use of salt without prompt after-sweeping is disgusting, and somewhat injurious to those persons, and those only, who often get their feet wet on the dirty compound of street filth, melted snow, and salt. It is to be hoped that this matter will be brought up before the Public Health Association, or the Medical Society of the County of New-York, which was once the sole and efficient guardian of the public health of this City, or before the New-York Academy of Medicine, which has done so much for medical science. We are confident that the great majority of the most eminent physicians would approve of the above plan, while we are equally sure that it would disapprove of the lavish use of salt, without the equally free use of the shovel, broom, and sweeper to remove the resultant slush.

Incidental allusion has been made to flushing and disinfecting our filthy sewers. Would it not be possible to turn the water of the North and East rivers, at the ebb-tide, into the sewers at the upper parts of the City, and thus allow a large body of clean water to force its way through all the sewers from or above the Central Park to the Battery? In Hamburg the down flow of the river Elbe is periodically turned into the sewers, which are thus frequently flushed and cleansed.

DEMOCRATIC RULE IN ALABAMA.

Of the 65 counties in this State, there are now only six in which the county officers are Republicans. The general law for the selection of grand and petit jurors in the State courts imposes the duty of selection upon the Judge of Probate, the Sheriff, and the Clerk of the Circuit Court in and for each county. In the 59 counties which have Democratic county officials, not a single colored man has ever been selected as a juror. This, notwithstanding the fact that of our 1,000,000 population the whites do not outnumber the colored by more than 20,000, and in many counties the colored population are much more than one-half of the whole. But our present Democratic Legislature, whose members hold their seats by virtue of the most infamous and glaring frauds at the ballot-box, could not be satisfied until they had deprived the colored men in these six counties of the right to sit upon juries. This they did by an act approved Dec. 19, 1876, which takes the power of selecting jurors from the county officers of Montgomery, Lowndes, Autauga, Dallas, Perry, and Bullock Counties, and gives it to five Commissioners in each county, to be appointed by the Governor. It is needless to state that these Commissioners are all Democrats, and that they will follow the example of their brethren in the other 59 counties and exclude the colored people from the juries. THE BLISS FUND.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Mr. Moody suggests that a penny collection be taken up in the Sunday Schools, on 14th January, for the benefit of the children of Mr. Bliss, and for the erection of a monument to the memory of Mr. and Mrs. Bliss. Such a course would be very appropriate and kind, but, I think, $10,000 has been collected in Chicago for these children, and they must have friends. I would suggest that a two-penny collection be taken up upon a stated Sunday throughout the East, the proceeds for the benefit of the Home Missionaries in the extreme West, and upon the frontiers, who are greatly in need of warm under and over clothing and boots. Besides this collection, perhaps, donations can be made of warm clothing; though worn, it would have warmth, it is needed for the missionaries and for their wives and children. There are hundreds of cases of suffering in the extreme West that call for worn clothing that can to some extent be furnished from every family. C. A. M.

THE NORTH CAROLINA BONDS.

As some of the newspapers have stated that the meeting of the North Carolina bondholders, called for Thursday morning, is in the interest of the holders of special tax bonds, we desire to contradict the statement. The meeting is not called in the interest of the holders of any class of the bonds of the State, but in the interest of all the holders of North Carolina bonds, and the object of the meeting is to appoint a disinterested committee to represent all the bondholders, and through such committee to secure, if possible, an equitable adjustment of the whole debt of the State of North Carolina.

ABOLISH THE RAILROAD CAR STOVE.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In the case of the recent railroad disaster at Ashtabula Creek, as well as in others, it is noteworthy that more lives are lost by the burning of the cars than by the fall or collision itself. Is it not, therefore, time that legislation should forbid the heating of cars by the dangerous means in use? There are other methods that could be employed with safety.

Let some member of our Legislature, about to convene, do the public and humanity a service by introducing a bill that shall meet the case.

New-York, Monday, Jan. 1, 1877. D. P. B.

OPENING OF THE ONTARIO PARLIAMENT.

Toronto, Jan. 3.—This afternoon Hon. Donald A. Macdonald, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Ontario, opened the second session of the third Parliament of Ontario with a speech in which the most significant announcement was that measures giving votes to sons of farmers, in certain cases, and for extending the Voters' Lists act, with necessary modifications, to municipal elections, would be presented.

WASHINGTON.

THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

THE WORK OF THE HOUSE SUB-COMMITTEE—CONTROL OF THE MATTER ASSUMED BY AN ILLINOIS CONGRESSMAN—LONG SPEECHES INSTEAD OF PRECEDENTS—HOW THE COST OF THE WORK IS INCREASED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3.—The House Committee on the Electoral Vote recently appointed to act with a committee of the Senate have held but one meeting, as yet, and have done nothing. They met for a short time to-day, but there being but four members present, no business was transacted. The work of its sub-committee in compiling precedents was not even examined. When it is, it seems doubtful whether it will have the approval of the country, even if the full committee should be willing to father it. When this committee was appointed authority was given it from the House to compile all the precedents bearing upon the subject of the counting of the Electoral vote, and have them printed as an extra document. The duty of making this compilation was confided to Mr. Springer, of Illinois, Democrat, and Mr. Willard, of Michigan, Republican. Mr. Springer, however, took control of the matter, and instead of confining the work to precedents, he took column after column of debates from the Globe, which were easy of access, and had them reprinted in his volume of precedents. Not an opinion, precedent or expression that could be found bearing upon the subject has been omitted by Mr. Springer, and many times after he has declared his work finished and ordered it to press has he recalled the forms and inserted new matter, thus necessitating a new make-up, and greatly increasing the cost. These insertions of new matter have been long and numerous, costing several hundred dollars in correction, and now, when he has again announced his work complete, a large volume of nearly 800 pages of printed matter, nearly all which could easily be found elsewhere among the records of the House, is all that the country is to get for several thousands of dollars expended to gratify Mr. Springer's ambition as a compiler. It is stated that the work will be given to the public next week, unless Mr. Springer should make another addition that would necessitate doing the work over again.

RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

THE CENTRAL PACIFIC'S CLAIMS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT—A CASE OF SHARP PRACTICE—A RELIEF BILL INTRODUCED IN THE SENATE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3.—The Senate to-day had before it a bill to save the Government from the results of one of the old Railroad bills passed about the same time as the Union Pacific. It is the Central Branch, and runs through a part of Kansas, and has lands which it claims, but which the Judiciary Committee does not think it entitled to, which are valued at $6,000,000. The attempt of the road to hold the lands is generally regarded as a pretty bad case of sharp practice. But Senator Ingalls seems not to so regard it, for he championed the road and caused the reading of the printed report, occupying two hours, in order to secure delay. If the bill is not passed this session the Government will lose lands of very great extent and value. Senator Ingalls claims that the rights involved should be settled in the courts, but in the meantime the land would continue to be sold.

THE JAPANESE INDEMNITY FUND.

THE FULL AMOUNT TO BE RETURNED TO JAPAN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3.—The House Foreign Affairs Committee will hold a meeting to-morrow for the purpose of considering its report on the Japanese Indemnity Fund, and it is certain that a unanimous report will be made in favor of returning the full amount to Japan, including all the accrued interest. The Senate disposed of this matter some time back by agreeing to return the excess claimed by Japan—some $750,000—but the House committee takes the view, and will report, that not only the amount claimed should be returned but that all the accrued interest of the last 12 years should be paid Japan. If this view should prevail the sum returned to Japan will be about $1,250,000 instead of $750,000, as provided by the Senate bill.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3.—Congressman Willis will, to-morrow, present to the House of Representatives the original memorial bearing the autograph signatures of bankers and merchants of New-York, praying for a peaceful settlement of electoral questions, &c. He has received a letter, written by E. S. Jeffray, the custodian of the memorial, stating that "the meeting which originated it has unanimously selected Senator Conkling and Mr. Willis as the most suitable representatives of the State and City of New-York to present the same to Congress."

The House Committee on Appropriations this afternoon completed the Military Academy Appropriation bill, and will report it to-morrow. Its total is reduced about $25,000 below the amount appropriated for the academy at the last session, the reduction being effected by cutting off the usual provision for Professors' "longevity allowances," (thus restricting them to the pay of their assimilated rank,) and by providing that the band shall hereafter consist of 28 musicians, exclusive of the leader, this being its number as originally constituted.

The Senate, in its executive session to-day, confirmed the following nominations: James M. Currie, to be Collector of Customs at St. Marks, Fla.; James Ashworth, to be Collector of Internal Revenue for the First District of Pennsylvania. Postmasters—George H. Anderson, at Pittsburg, Penn.; Mrs. Electa J. Eyland, at Rochester, Ind.; H. K. Winslow, at Kokomo, Ind.; John D. Hunter, Webster City, Iowa, and E. A. Bartlett, at Cuba N. Y.

There are no indications at the War Department of any disposition to send additional troops anywhere South. The view taken is that the public peace can be preserved in all sections where there has been reason to believe that tumults or disorder might arise.

The sub-committee appointed by the House Committee on Pacific Railroads, to report on the so-called compromise bill in aid of the construction of the Texas Pacific Railroad, met to-day, and after a general discussion adjourned without action, until 9 o'clock to-morrow morning, when they will hold another meeting in advance of the assembling of the full committee.

Ex-Assistant District Attorney Charles G. Fisher, recently convicted of abstracting court papers from the office of the Clerk of the court, was to-day sentenced to 11 months imprisonment at hard labor in the common jail.

E. A. Burbank was to-day appointed Revenue Storekeeper for the Second District of Kentucky. H. A. Badham, A. T. Smith, and Thomas D. Finnin were each appointed Storekeeper and Gauger for the Sixth District of North Carolina, and Robert A. Happy, Edgar D. Hackett, and T. Kinsley for the Second District of Kentucky, and James W. Clark for the Eighth District of Kentucky.

Speaker Randall recently appointed Representative McDill to fill the vacancy in the Committee on the Powers, Privileges, and Duties of the House in connection with Counting the Electoral Vote for President and Vice President, caused by the resignation of Representative Monroe. On this some adverse criticisms have been made, as though the Speaker made his appointments regardless of proper legal representation on the committee. It may be stated that Mr. McDill, after studying law in his native State, (Ohio,) emigrated to Iowa, in which State he respectively filled the offices of County, District, and Circuit Judge. The last-named position he filled when he was elected to Congress. He comes from one of the largest Republican States in the Union.

A STREET ENCOUNTER.

JAMES GORDON BENNETT ATTACKED HE IS SET UPON BY FREDERICK MAY AND COWHIDED IN FRONT OF THE UNION CLUB HOUSE—THE STORIES OF EYE-WITNESSES TO THE AFFRAY—ALLEGED CAUSES OF THE DIFFICULTY.

The tide of pleasant gossip which has been on its way through fashionable circles in this City for some time past in regard to the nuptials of James Gordon Bennett, the proprietor of the Herald, and Miss Edith May, was rudely broken into yesterday by the report of an angry encounter or fracas between Mr. Bennett and Mr. Frederick May, a brother of Miss Edith May. It is well known that Mr. Bennett has been paying attentions to Miss May for more than a year past, and their speedy marriage has been regarded as a certainty for some time. They appeared frequently together in society, and Mr. Bennett was regarded by many as being very devoted to the lady. The preparations for the marriage were discussed in various social circles from time to time by friends ever since the trip to Canada by Mr. Bennett and Miss May last Winter, when Lord Dufferin gave a grand ball at Toronto. Rumors came at times about certain wild escapades on the part of Mr. Bennett, and following on their heels were various statements to the effect that the engagement had been broken off. There was sufficient uncertainty for awhile to set fashionable circles in a ferment, but the rumors and discussions were apparently stilled last week by the arrival in this City, from Paris, of Miss May's bridal trousseau. The first intimation the outside world received since, that pleasant relations had not been restored between the two was afforded in the report of the encounter between Mr. May and Mr. Bennett, which took place in front of the Union Club, at Twenty-first street and Fifth avenue, yesterday. Concerning the occurrence the stories told by different persons vary somewhat in details, but the main features are the same in all. There seems to be no doubt that Mr. May provided himself with a cowhide and lay in wait for Mr. Bennett in front of the club-house. On the latter's appearance he was assaulted, beaten, and thrown down. The accounts are somewhat conflicting on the point as to whether Mr. Bennett offered resistance or not. The fracas itself was witnessed by a number of persons, including several members of the Union Club and other gentlemen who were in the neighborhood, and were attracted by the occurrence to the scene of action. The tidings of the affair spread rapidly, and before evening formed a prominent and almost the sole topic of conversation at many clubs and at the hotels.

HOW THE AFFRAY OCCURRED.

A gentleman who witnessed the affray thus described it to a TIMES reporter:

Between 1 and 2 o'clock in the afternoon Mr. May was walking up Fifth avenue and saw Mr. Bennett pass down in the direction of the Union Club. He followed him down the avenue and saw him enter the club-house. Not being a member of the club, Mr. May remained outside on the street, expecting that Mr. Bennett would come out immediately, which the latter, however, did not do. Mr. May waited for about an hour on the street, until he saw Mr. Bennett passing out from the club, accompanied by some friends. Just as he stepped upon the sidewalk, Mr. May came up to him, and, without saying a word, took a light cowhide from under his overcoat and struck him on the head with it three or four times. Mr. May had no stick or weapon of any kind in his hands, except the light whip which he had brought with him for the purpose of giving the proprietor of the Herald a public flogging. The moment Mr. May struck Mr. Bennett the latter, without making the slightest attempt to ward off the blows, threw open both his coats, as Mr. May supposed, to draw a weapon from his pocket. Seeing this movement on the part of Mr. Bennett, Mr. May struck at him with his clenched fists and knocked him down on the sidewalk, and then deliberately sat down on him for a moment, but did not strike him while he was down. Mr. Bennett got up and faced his antagonist, and again Mr. May knocked him down. Mr. May would not have struck Mr. Bennett in the first instance with his fists, were it not that he believed the latter was armed and was going to draw a revolver on him. When Mr. Bennett had been cowhided and knocked down twice, a gentleman named Mr. Hoeksher stepped in and said "That is sufficient." He then separated the combatants. Mr. May buttoned up his coat and walked down the avenue, while Mr. Bennett was taken away from the scene of the encounter by his friends.

ANOTHER ACCOUNT.

A gentleman well-known in literary and club circles in this City, and a warm personal friend of Mr. Bennett, gave a TIMES reporter last evening the following explanation of the affair: He said that there was not, and never had been, any doubt whatever in regard to the fact that there was an engagement of marriage between Mr. Bennett and Miss May, the former having wooed the lady and won her affections about a year ago. The day for the marriage, however, had never been fixed, all reports to the contrary notwithstanding. It had been rumored that they were to be married in June last, and Mr. Bennett's friends believed there had been some such intention, but the actual day was not named. It was finally, by mutual consent of the parties, postponed until the Fall or Winter. Mr. Bennett fully intended to marry the lady, because he was fully fond of her, and she fully reciprocated the sentiment. But it had been fully agreed between them that the wedding was to be a strictly private one, and that the only guests should be Mr. Bennett's sister, the members of Miss May's family, and a very few of the most intimate personal friends of the parties. The week before last, Mr. Bennett went off on one of his "periodical sprees," which fact, in due course of time, got to the ears of Miss May's father, whereupon, on Friday of last week, that gentleman wrote Mr. Bennett, withdrawing his consent to the union. Mr. Bennett was considerably surprised at this, and at first hardly knew what to do. His first impulse was to elope with the girl and marry her despite the want of consent of her father, but he afterward considered that determination and concluded to wait until the affair had blown over, being, however, still determined to marry her. In order to prove that amicable relations had existed between the family of Miss May and the family of Mr. Bennett, the reporter's informant stated that Mr. Bennett's sister was at Miss May's house on Tuesday, and that she was also there yesterday, at the very time when the assault was committed by young Mr. May upon Mr. Bennett. The latter had no idea whatever that any trouble was brewing. He was out riding yesterday in his sleigh, and paid a visit to the Union Club. After remaining there a short time, he called for his sleigh preparatory to leave. As he came out of the club-house he noticed Mr. May walking on the sidewalk. That gentleman approached Mr. Bennett, and, without saying a word, struck him across the temple with the butt end of a heavy rawhide, knocking him down. He struck him again after he was down, hitting him this time across the nose. There was then a short and sharp scuffle, and then friends stepped in and separated them. After this Mr. Bennett was driven home. The marks left by the encounter are a slight abrasion of the temple, and a slight scratch on the nose. "That," said the informant, "is just about all there is of it." When asked what the result would be, the gentleman said that at present he was not able to state. He was sure the intention of both parties was to be married, but that, of course, the present state of the case put an entirely new phase on the matter. When asked what he thought about the rumor in club circles last night to the effect that there was likely to be a hostile meeting of the contestants, growing out of the assault, the gentleman replied, emphatically, that he did not believe a word of it. He said that if such a thing had been in contemplation, he was quite sure he should know something about it, and he thought, therefore, that such a rumor was wholly untrue and unauthorized. He said, moreover, that he did not think the lady had anything to do with the affair, but he did not know whether the father had anything to do with it or not.

MR. BENNETT'S MARRIAGE ENGAGEMENT.

Another gentleman, also a warm personal friend of Mr. Bennett, was questioned last night by a TIMES reporter in reference to the engagement of Mr. Bennett and Miss May. He stated that there was no mistake whatever about the truth of the rumor, and that the engagement was entered into about one year ago. He said however, that he did not believe that any particular day had ever been set for the marriage, and, from his personal knowledge of the affair, and his close personal relations with Mr. Bennett, he did not think it possible a day could have been fixed upon for the wedding without his knowledge. It had been rumored, he said, that they were to have been married in April, and again in September, and again in October and November, but he thought that was not so. They had been engaged just about a year, however, and he supposed the time for the marriage was drawing nigh. The gentleman stated further that he knew the engagement was finally broken off on Saturday last, but he did not know what caused that action, or who had caused it, or anything about it. As to the reported difficulty between Mr. Bennett and the brother of Miss May, the gentleman said the only explanation he could give was that if it had happened, it was probable that the cause was the anger of Miss May's brother at the sudden termination of the engagement.

THE AFFAIR FULLY DESCRIBED.

An intimate friend of one of the principals to the transaction said: "This unfortunate affair was not at all precipitated; it has been brewing for more than a week past. Mr. Bennett was to have been married on the 26th of December, not on the 3d of January as some state, but his conduct during the past month was such that the young lady's friends could under no consideration allow the marriage to take place. The marriage was accordingly broken off. The May family became greatly incensed toward Mr. Bennett, being convinced that his extraordinary irregularities were perpetrated for the purpose of preventing the marriage. The meeting with Frederick May was not unexpected by Mr. Bennett, as the latter saw Mr. May walking up and down Fifth avenue, evidently waiting for him. Mr. Bennett thereupon lit a cigar, and emerged from the entrance of the Union Club just as Mr. May reached the corner of Twenty-first street. The two gentlemen walked toward each other, and met midway between the corner of Fifth avenue and the club entrance. Without uttering a syllable, Mr. May raised a large rawhide, which he had kept concealed on his person, and struck Mr. Bennett full in the face, blood following the stroke. A second and third blow followed, and before Mr. Bennett had time to recover his surprise at the suddenness of the attack, he had received two severe cuts on the face—one on the nose, and one over the left eye. On regaining his self-possession Mr. Bennett struck at Mr. May, and the two men clinched and fell. In the struggle which followed, Mr. May, who is a powerful man, being six feet one inch in height, and some 40 pounds heavier than Mr. Bennett, had the advantage, and threw the latter heavily, rolling in the snow together. By this time the fracas had been observed by some of the members of the club, who rushed out, and the combatants were separated by Mr. John G. Heckscher, Mr. William H. Marston, and other gentlemen. Mr. Bennett was taken into the club, where his injuries were attended to by a physician. Mr. May walked leisurely down Fifth avenue to the residence of his father, at 5 o'clock Mr. Bennett, having recovered from the effects of the beating, sent for his sleigh and was driven home. On reaching his residence he sent for Mr. Leonard W. Jerome, and Mr. Duncan, and a few other intimate friends, and a consultation was held as to what should be done under the circumstances. Mr. Bennett, who, of course, feels humiliated at his castigation, insists, it is understood, on challenging Mr. May to mortal combat. Those of his advisers, however, who are thoroughly conversant with the "code of honor," say that this is impossible, as the person challenged cannot in honor, according to the code, fight a duel with an adversary who has been disgraced by the cowhide. The situation is looked upon by Mr. Bennett's most intimate friends as exceedingly embarrassing, but they hope that with sober reflection they may be able to find some way out of the difficulty which shall be consistent with the honor and outraged feelings of the unhappy young gentleman.

WHAT LED TO THE ASSAULT.

The direct cause of the assault on Mr. Bennett is a matter as to which none of the parties to the affair, nor their friends, were willing to give any positive information. The principals, indeed, refused to say anything about it. There is no doubt, however, but that the affray grew out of the engagement of Mr. Bennett to Miss May, and it is possible that the statements above given are in some measure true. While the friends of Mr. Bennett claim that the engagement was broken off some days ago and that no day had ever been set for the marriage, those who are intimately associated with the May family assert quite the contrary. They say Mr. Bennett and Miss May were to have been married yesterday morning at an early hour, and were to have gone to Europe on the Russia, which sailed shortly before noon, Not appearing at Miss May's residence and not sending any word of apology or excuse, Mr. Frederick May determined the outrage should not pass unnoticed and straightway proceeded to chastise Mr. Bennett with the result as above told.

SKETCH OF THE ASSAILANT.

Mr. Frederick May is a native of Washington, D. C., and the son of Dr. Frederick May, the well-known physician of that city. His grandfather was also a physician, pursuing his profession in Washington for many years, and occupying a prominent position in society. Col. Charles May, of the United States Dragoons, who distinguished himself in the Mexican war by his gallant and meritorious services in the field, was his uncle. Another of his uncles, Julian May, was also well known in Washington society. He was principal in a fatal duel which took place near Washington in 1843 or 1844. It arose out of a quarrel with a gentleman by the name of Cochran. Both were young and hot-headed, and although their friends made every effort to bring about a reconciliation, they insisted upon fighting. They met near the Chain Bridge, about five miles from Washington, and fought with rifles at long range. Cochran fell at the first fire, shot through the head. He was taken home, and died within a week. Mr. Bennett's assailant is a strong man of about 24 years of age, but very tall and of powerful frame. He has always borne a good reputation, and his friends say he would not have committed the assault except under the impulse of feeling arising from some grievous wrong.

ENTERPRISE APPRECIATED.

AMUSEMENTS.

MR. THOMAS' CONCERTS.

The public rehearsal preliminary to Mr. Thomas' third symphony concert, which takes place on Saturday evening, may be attended at Steinway Hall, this afternoon. The programme is, as usual, one of great interest.

THE BALTIMORE CORN EXCHANGE.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 3.—At a meeting of the newly-elected Board of Directors of the Corn and Flour Exchange to-day, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, W. B. McAtee; Vice Presidents, J. L. Middleton and James Knox; Treasurer, R. M. Wylie; Secretary, William F. Wheatley; Executive Committee, James Lake, William D. Fullerton, and R. W. Grosthmey.

A SHOCKING TRAGEDY.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 3.—A special to the Gazette, says Henry Creighton, a resident of Bloom Township, Fairfield County, was murdered by his crazy wife yesterday afternoon. She shot him twice and then cut his head off with an axe. The parties had been married four years.

ALUMNI OF AMHERST.

The annual reunion and dinner of the Alumni of Amherst College in the West for 1876 was held in Chicago on Friday evening last, about 30 graduates being present. Among the more prominent were Rufus Kellogg, of Green Bay, President of the Association for 1876; W. G. Hammond, of Iowa City; George Howland, Principal of the Chicago High School; Judge Henry Hudson, George Gage, Henry Mathews, John Thompson, Daniel T. Nelson, F. W. Packard, John W. Marsh, C. E. Dickinson, George C. Clarke, and others. The guests gathered gradually, and by 8 o'clock a very pleasant levee was in progress in one of the parlors adjoining the supper-room. Here they met Prof. Hitchcock, of Amherst, who went on for the purpose of taking part in the dinner. A pleasant hour was spent in conversation, and at its conclusion President Kellogg called the association to order, and the election of officers for the ensuing year was gone into, with the following result: President—John M. Thompson, of Iowa City; Vice-President—W. G. Hammond; Secretary and Treasurer—F. W. Packard; Executive Committee—The Vice-President, the Secretary, and Henry L. Boltwood and John W. Marsh. After dinner the time was given up to speech-making, introduced by the retiring President, Mr. Kellogg, and added to and abetted by Prof. Hitchcock and a considerable proportion of those present. Letters were also read, and loudly received, from Prof. Tyler, of Amherst, Prof. Seelye, Mr. Jennison, of St. Louis, and Mr. Spear, of Cincinnati—breathing friendship and good wishes.

CAPTURE OF MAIL ROBBERS

WHERE AND HOW CAUGHT.

SYSTEMATIC ROBBERIES OF MAIL WAGONS—SEVERAL OF THE THIEVES ARRESTED—LETTER POUCHES AND THEIR CONTENTS RIFLED—CHECKS AMOUNTING TO OVER $30,000 FOUND IN THE DEN OF THE ROBBERS.

For over a month past there have been heavy and mysterious losses of mails between Philadelphia and Boston. A great deal of uneasiness has been felt among the business men of Philadelphia, as heavy pecuniary losses have been occasioned. Of late these losses have increased to such an extent that the Post Office Department at Washington detailed a force of special agents to look after the matter at Philadelphia, and along the routes leading eastward from that place. The impression gained was that robberies were committed at Philadelphia, and there the investigations were principally made. During this time many checks lost in these mails were presented at different banks in Philadelphia with skillfully-forged indorsements, and paid on demand, amounting to upward of $5,000. Previous to these losses of mail matter, and as early as Oct. 23, 1876, losses of valuable baggage were reported while in the care of Dodd's Express Company, and these finally became so frequent that Pinkerton's Detective Agency was called upon to "work up" the case. The first loss was of a sample trunk of cutlery, exhibited at the Centennial Exposition and valued at $1,000, and shortly afterward two other trunks, seemingly containing samples, but really containing wardrobe, were stolen. At the time of the first loss, one John Kelly, once an employe of the express company, was seen in close proximity to the baggage-wagons, and, as he had recently completed a term of imprisonment for stealing baggage, the finger of suspicion naturally pointed toward him. A fourth piece of valuable baggage, delivered at the Hudson River Railroad depot, was claimed by persons on a forged check, but the real owner, conclusively proving that the property belonged to him, the thieves were foiled. The employes of the railroad company were able to describe the fraudulent claimants, and from this the detectives were able to verify their first suspicions that Kelly and his associates were again engaged in their business of baggage stealing. From this time these men were "shadowed" at all times, and were frequently followed to the recognized resorts of thieves. These developments connected the losses of mail matter with those of baggage from the wagons of the same company. Two of the suspected men were, on last Thursday, followed to the office of the American Express Company, at Fourth street and Broadway. Each carried a large parcel, which they had been seen to take from a house on Prince street, where Kelly and others of the gang were in the habit of meeting. The detectives entered the express office soon after the men left, and requested the agent to hold the packages, as they were supposed have been stolen. This was done, and a superficial examination of one revealed a United States mail bag, and on the 29th inst. Mr. Bangs, General Superintendent of Pinkerton's Detective Agency, apprised Mr. Sharrett, Special Agent of the Post Office Department, of the fact. Mr. Mann, an expert of the Post-office in this City, was sent there, and the package was opened, disclosing a mail pouch, dispatched from York, Penn., for New-York City. A number of mutilated letters, probably 100 in number, were found inside, having the post-mark of the 15th and 16th of December, and from York and adjacent villages. The pouch-age left at the same time was examined by the officers, and was found to contain a sachel belonging to a route agent named Stephenson, which was stolen from a mail wagon while on the way from the Post Office in this City to the Jersey City ferry-boat. This contained the agent's registering book, stamps, and all the paraphernalia for rating and stamping letters. The two packages were carefully wrapped up in heavy brown paper, the mail being addressed to George Gumbleton, Oswego, N. Y., and the sachel to William Thurma, Oswego, N. Y., both being fictitious names, it being an evident attempt to get rid of undesirable property. These disclosures gave a clue to the whole mystery, and though apparently vague and uncertain, have been the means, probably, of effectually stopping a systematic scheme of robbery. The first arrest was made on Tuesday afternoon of one James Cranford, by detectives of Pinkerton's Agency, assisted by Officer Blackwood, who is detailed on Post Office duty. Cranford, who was formerly employed by Dodd's Express Company, was taken to Special Agent Sharrett's office, but at the time declined to acknowledge his participation in the robberies. The officers afterward arrested John Kelly, Mary Collins, and Clinton Eddy. The latter is a son of the late Edward Eddy, and is not supposed to be connected with the robberies, but was found in company with those suspected. Kelly and one John Quinn, a minstrel, were found near Clinton place and Broadway, and Kelly, who was considerably under the influence of liquor, made quite a fight before submitting to an arrest, and in the meantime Quinn escaped. Eddy states that he was about starting out with a traveling theatrical company, and that Kelly was to furnish him with funds, which accounted for his being in the company of the thieves. After these arrests had been made, a search warrant was obtained from Justice Duffy, and Superintendent Pinkerton, Officer Blackwood, and Antony Fountain, Superintendent of the Post Office, searched the premises of Miss Collins, in Prince street. A trunk was found containing a large number of letters which had been mailed at Philadelphia on the 28th of December, and containing checks amounting in the aggregate to about $30,000. Among other letters were a number indicating that checks had been inclosed and afterward abstracted. One of these was a letter referring to a check for $2,000, mailed at Philadelphia on Dec. 28, about 7 P. M., the check drawn by Nelson Brothers & Co., and payable to A. J. Tillson, of Boston. This check was presented at the Commercial Bank of Philadelphia on Dec. 30, and paid on a forged indorsement. The person presenting it seemingly did not apprehend any trouble, and coolly demanded that the amount be paid in bills of $50 and $100 denomination.

The persons arrested denied all knowledge regarding these letters, but through the untiring efforts of D. B. Parker, Chief Special Agent of the Post Office Department, Special Agent Sharrett, Mr. Pinkerton, and Postmaster James, revelations were made which threw light on the transaction, and fully disclosed the manner in which the mails were robbed. It seems that the robbers operated in connection with a driver of Dodds' Express Company named John De Friest, who was met by Kelly and Crawford while coming from the Jersey City Ferry to the New-York Post Office. They would take from his wagon, through his connivance, such mail-pouches as he designated. On three different occasions they took ten through pouches from Philadelphia to Boston, and again one from York, Penn., to New-York, the one found at the express office. The other bags have not been found, but are known to have been sent to fictitious addresses in Quebec and Toronto. De Friest was arrested yesterday as he drove to the Post Office for his usual mail dispatch. He has been in the employ of the Express company for upward of 10 years, and was always considered the most reliable. The story of these robberies is not yet half told, and it is confidently expected that further developments will follow, which will show the robberies to have been most systematically planned and in the hands of experts. The persons arrested were taked before United States Commissioner Shields yesterday, and remanded for examination.

THE WEATHER.

INDICATIONS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4—1 A. M.—In the Middle and Eastern States rising barometer, north-west to south-west winds, continued cold and clear or partly cloudy weather will prevail, followed in the western portion of the former by falling barometer and winds shifting to slightly warmer southerly.

PROFESSIONAL BILLIARD SHARPS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 3.—At a meeting of the Northwestern and South-western Billiard Congress to-day it was resolved that W. Burleigh and L. Shaw be expelled from the congress, and be ever debarred from playing for the championship, for the reason that Burleigh agreed at the last championship contest in this city, to throw the game for a momentary consideration in Shaw's favor, the latter knowingly participating in the transaction.

FATAL RAILROAD ACCIDENT IN DENMARK.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—A special despatch to the Pall Mall Gazette from Copenhagen, says, the first railway accident in Denmark involving loss of life, has occurred between Horsens and Aarhuus. A train conveying 100 laborers to clear a snow blockade ran off the track. Nine persons were killed and 30 severely hurt. The injured suffered greatly from cold and the difficulty of sending assistance to them.

THE COLLIERY FIRE.

LYKENS Jan. 3.—The fire in the mines is still unabated, and the only plan to stop the fire now is to flood the mines. The Bear Creek has been turned and is flowing into the slope. A party of miners went down through the old level this morning from Big Lick Colliery, a distance of three miles, and at the inside stables they found the mules there alive, though they were unable to reach the outside stables. About 900 men have been thrown out of employment by the fire, and the damage done cannot be repaired in less time than a year. The amount of loss cannot be estimated at present.

OBITUARY.

"EPH" HORN.

Evan Evans Horn, better known as "Eph" Horn, one of the oldest and most celebrated negro minstrel performers in the country, died at 2:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, at the residence of Mr. Tony Pastor, in this City, after a brief illness. It appears that in returning to this City from Trenton, N. J., on Christmas night, he caught cold, which on Friday last developed into pneumonia, with the sad result above stated. "Eph" Horn was born in the southern portion of the City of Philadelphia in the year 1818. At a very early age he developed remarkable talent in the art of minstrelsy, and in 1845 first appeared on the stage in a concert-hall in Spring Garden street in his native city. He at once became very popular, and traveled for a number of years through the Southern and Eastern States as the leading man in a number of minstrel troupes, and earning for himself a well-deserved reputation. One of his best "bits" during this period was made in the delivery of a burlesque speech on "Woman's Rights," said to have been first delivered by W. W. Newcomb, but afterward improved upon by "Uncle Eph," as he was familiarly called. In 1851 he decided upon coming to New-York, and his first appearance in this City was made in Pierce's Minstrels, then performing at Burton's old Theatre. He immediately became a favorite with New-York audiences and remained so until his death. His next appearance was made in Fellows' Minstrels at No. 444 Broadway, and later he appeared at the City Assembly Rooms where for a long time he drew large houses. He played in nearly every city in the United States and was always to use a theatrical phrase, "a drawing card." He went twice to California, earning, on each occasion, fresh laurels. Mr. Horn was a remarkably witty man, and as asserted above, he said more really funny things on the stage than any other man in the profession. He was a good comedian, and as "Bones" was second to none. He was the first man who ever made a feature of a negro clown, which he did on a tour through the country with Slote & Shephard's circus. Subsequent to this time, he, in company with Hornwell and Briggs, organized a band of minstrels, which will be well-remembered by old play-goers throughout the Union. He was afterward in partnership with W. H. Newcombe, above mentioned; later with the well-known Henry Bloodgood, and in 1855 he was associated in this City with "Charley" White. When the company was broken up Mr. Horn traveled over the country on a starring tour, during which he was eminently successful. In 1866, when the late "Dan" Bryant went to England, he took "Eph" Horn with him, the two being very much attached to each other. During the trip Mr. Horn only played one night, but in 1871 he accepted an engagement with Moore & Burgess' Minstrels, and played to large audiences in St. James' Hall, London. He afterward went through England on a starring tour, his principal engagement being at St. James' Hall in Liverpool. Upon his return, although quite an old man, he continued playing in this country, and his last regular engagement was concluded at "Tony" Pastor's Opera-House on Broadway on Dec. 23, last. His last appearance on any stage was in Trenton, on Christmas day. "Eph" Horn, except when traveling, has always resided in Philadelphia, where at the time of his death, he had a wife and two daughters living. He also leaves a son, who is at present playing in Washington, under the name of "Eph" Horn, Jr.

OBITUARY NOTES.

Judge McCully, of the Nova Scotia Supreme Court, died Tuesday night, aged 68. Previous to his appointment to the Judgeship he had been a prominent polititian for 25 years.

Mr. William A. Campbell, of the Denver Democrat, died recently in that city. Mr. Campbell was formerly connected with the Chicago press, serving for many years on the leading newspapers in that city. He was a young man who was respected and esteemed for his abilities and many good qualities. The immediate cause of his death was consumption.

Mr. Joseph Ripley, a brother-in-law of the late Senator Buckingham, of Connecticut, and a member of one of the oldest families in New-England died at his residence in this City on Monday last in the seventy-third year of his age. Mr. Ripley was one of the oldest wool brokers in the City, having been engaged in that business for over 40 years. The funeral services will take place this morning at Rev. THE GRAND TRUNK STRIKE.

THE STRIKE ENDED—TROUBLESOME ENGINEERS RE-ENGAGED—TRAINS NOW RUNNING AS USUAL—THE DELAYED MAILS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

DETROIT, Jan. 3.—The strike of the engineers on the Grand Trunk Railroad ended this morning, the line receiving back the striking drivers, and the men abating also, it is understood, something of their demands. All trains at this end of the road have started and run to-day on regular time, and with the usual engineers. Yesterday the outlook was rather serious here, it being found necessary that armed policemen should accompany, beyond the junctions outside of this city, the one or two trains which did run between Detroit and Port Huron, while at the latter place the Mayor called out a local Militia company to preserve the peace at the depot, and prevent riotous demonstrations by a large body of strikers gathered there. To-day, however, everything is quiet and orderly at all points in this vicinity. The strike has been attended with much public discomfort, especially in a suspension of the mail service between this city and Port Huron. This became so serious to business men in the villages affected that they finally made special arrangement whereby a locomotive was sent into this city, and carried out the accumulated mail.

A CONJUGAL CONTRACT.

HOW A MASSACHUSETTS COUPLE MARRIED THEMSELVES.

From the Boston Herald, Dec. 31.

Those who know Moses Hull, and they are not few, knew that he is an avowed believer in what is termed free love, or mating without the ceremony of marriage as performed by preachers and Justices of the Peace, and that he practices what he preaches. He has, in many written articles and in speeches from numerous rostrums, demanded, and continues to demand, that all marriage laws shall be repealed, and that parties may be allowed to marry and divorce themselves under a general law of contracts. The law-makers have not yet seen fit to comply with the demands made by Moses, but, notwithstanding this fact, his teachings and practices have been followed by his daughter, Mary Florence Hull, a plump brunette, who has entered into a conjugal partnership with a good-looking and apparently vigorous young man, and the firm name is Hull & Johnson. Tuesday evening last, while a party of friends were gathered at the residence of Moses, to wish him a pleasant trip to Vineland, N. J., and a safe deliverance from the court there which summoned him to trial for practicing what he preached, his daughter, Mary Florence, and Horace Alvin Johnson, a clerk in a leather store on High street, walked into the room and requested Moses to read the following:

BUSINESS AND CONJUGAL CONTRACT BETWEEN MARY FLORENCE HULL AND HORACE ALVIN JOHNSON.

We, whose names are hereunto fixed, do, on this twenty-sixth day of December, in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-six of the Christian era, enter into a business and conjugal contract; the firm to be known as Hull and Johnson.

We regard ourselves as, in every sense of the word, equal partners, promising to strive to treat each other, under all circumstances, as becomes such. We promise that we will not try in any other way than by advice or persuasion to control the actions of each other.

Believing that neither Church nor State have any business with our affairs, we propose to live our own lives without reference to either, further than, if necessary, to give security to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts that our children, should we be blessed with offspring, shall be, at least, as well cared for as are a majority of those born in legal wedlock.

We further contract that when mutual love shall no longer justify our conjugal union, we shall part, giving the State as little trouble in our parting as we have in coming together.

After the contract was read the parties called for criticism. If their union was not right, or the document was not right, they wanted to know it. Brief remarks embodying approval and good wishes were made by friends, after which Florence and Horace stepped forward and signed the copartnership document.

A reporter called at the house of Florence and Horace, No. 30 Hudson street, at 9:30 o'clock Saturday evening, and the newspaper Paul Pry was very politely informed by the masculine member of the firm, that they were very happy and contented.

FATAL RAILROAD ACCIDENT.

BOSTON, Jan. 3.—A train on the Boston, Revere Beach, and Lynn Railroad ran into a gang of laborers who were removing snow, killing Joseph Dampiere and slightly wounding another man.

A CONTEST IN ORATORY.

COLLEGE BOYS ON THE STAGE.

TEN COLLEGES REPRESENTED—THE FIRST PRIZE AWARDED TO HAMILTON, AND THE SECOND TO WILLIAMS COLLEGE—CORNELL CARRIES OFF FIVE PRIZES FOR ESSAYS.

The third annual oratorical contest of the Inter-collegiate Literary Association was held last night in the Academy of Music. The body of the house was well filled and many of the boxes were occupied.

The colleges represented by orators competing for the prize of the association were the University of the City of New-York, Hamilton College, St. John's, Fordham, the North-western University of Illinois, Cornell University, Rutgers' College, the College of the City of New-York, Williams College, Princeton, and Lafayette.

The stage was occupied by prominent members of the Literary Association and a number of invited persons. The judges of oratory, Mr. Bavard Taylor, Gen. Joseph R. Hawley, and Rev. Dr. E. H. Chapin, occupied seats in the parquet. Among those present were Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby, President McCosh, of the College of New-Jersey, Prof. Goertner and Prof. Frink, of Hamilton College; President F. A. P. Barnard, of Columbia; President D. H. Coolman, of the Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute; Richard Grant White, Elihu Root, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, Prof. Martin, Prof. Theodore W. Dwight, LL. D., Prof. Darling, Prof. Johnson, Prof. Coakley, Prof. Baird, and Prof. Bull.

The exercises began at 8 o'clock with prayer by Rev. Mython Maury, after which Rev. S. I. Prime made a few congratulatory remarks.

The first orator was Mr. Frank H. Scott, of the North Western University, who spoke on "Time the Judge." The second orator was Mr. G. W. Terbush, of Layfayette College, who was warmly applauded at the close of his oration on "The Hidden Sequel." Mr. Wilson Mann Dunn, the representative of the University of the City of New-York, was greeted with cordial applause by the audience when he came upon the stage, and his oration on "Revolutions" awoke the audience to a cordial recognition of his impassioned eloquence. Mr. George W. Colligan, the representative of St. John's College, Fordham, chose for his subject, "The Intellectual Culture of the Age." William E. Sleeper, of Princeton, created a very favorable impression by his oration on the "Growth of Opinion." The oration on "John Milton," by Samuel Douglass Dodge, of Williams College, was repeatedly interrupted with warm applause. Frank Foster Laird, of Hamilton College, stirred the audience to the first enthusiastic applause of the occasion in his eloquent and just tribute to the patriotism, constancy, and courage of "The Negro in American History." Mr. Z. B. Vredenburgh, of Rutgers, delivered an oration on "The Growth of Toleration." The last oration was that on "The Pilgrims," by Mr. D. M. Hunter, of the College of the City of New-York.

Col. Thomas Wentworth Higginson, Chairman of the Judges of Essays, reported that the judges had considered nine closely-written manuscripts, and thought that the average execution of the work was equal to the essays of previous years. They had decided that the first prize, for the essay on "The Position of Hawthorne in American Literature," should be awarded to Mr. F. M. Taylor, of the North-western University of Illinois, and that the committee might have gone further and found much more. Honorable mention was made of Mr. Spencer H. Cone, of Rutgers, and Mr. W. A. Randolph, of Cornell University. For the essay on "The Federal Party in the United States," the first prize was awarded to Mr. Charles T. Brewer, of Cornell University, and honorable mention was made of the name of Lewis Claude Whilon, of the University of the City of New-York.

Mr. Charlton T. Lewis read the report of the judges of Greek, who unanimously awarded the first prize to Mr. Eugene Frayer, of Cornell University, while they honorably mentioned Richard Martin, of the University of the City of New-York. Prof. J. H. Morse, of the examiners in Latin, reported that the first prize was due to Mr. Emile Schwertfegger, of Cornell University, and that the second should be given to Mr. Henry Blakely, of Rutgers C. llege. Major J. M. Bigelot, of Hamilton, who read the first prize in oratory in the last contest, read the report of the the examiners in mathematics, who decided that the merit of two of the competitors was so nearly equal that the prize should be divided between Mr. C. A. Van Velzer, of Cornell University, and Mr. George C. Hollereth, of the College of New-York. He also read the report of the examiners in mental science, who awarded the first prize to Mr. Thomas Davies Jones, of Princeton College, and the second to Mr. F. M. Taylor, of the North-western University of Illinois.

When Mr. Bavard Taylor, Gen. Hawley, and Rev. Dr. Chapin came on the stage to render judgment upon the orations, they were received with much applause, followed by a profound stillness, which was maintained until the name of the first victor was spoken. Mr. Taylor said that before announcing the award it was well to state that the judges had been governed, in reaching their decision, by the principles established by their predecessors in these contests. Accepting all that the term oratory includes, the questions of intellectual treatment, style, diction, elocution, and manner—each one of which considerations was as important and as indispensable as high color, and shade in painting—the judges had found the responsibility of decision very much increased. They had listened with as broad and conscientious a spirit as was possible to the orations, and it had given them pleasure to observe the honest endeavor that each of the contestants had made to gain the prize. When the judges had compared their notes, made separate ely and without previous consultation, they had unanimously decided that the first prize should be awarded to Mr. Frank Foster Laird, of Hamilton College, and the second to Mr. Samuel Douglass Dodge, of Williams College.

The announcement was received with screams of applause from the Hamilton boys in the audience. Outside the Academy of Music the students gathered in crowds and rent the air with the peculiar cheers of Cornell, Columbia, and Yale, creating great excitement, which lasted for nearly an hour after the close of the exercises.

THE LOSS OF THE RJUKAN.

Capt. Merryman, in charge of the New-York Division of the Life-saving Service, who has been investigating charges made against the crew of Life-saving Station No. 7 by order of the Department at Washington, has returned from Ocean Grove, N. J., where the examination was made. He states that the charge that the crew in question were tardy in rendering assistance to the Norwegian bark Rjukan, which went ashore at that point two weeks ago, were entirely refuted, Capt. Hanser, of the bark, joining in the testimony to the credit of the life-saving crew. A large number of affidavits were taken, including those of many residents in the neighborhood of the spot where the wreck occurred, which show that the crew ac

FOR

$2,800,000 7 3/10 p. c. Bonds

CITY OF CINCINNATI.

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 10, 1877,

AT 2 O'CLOCK P. M., for the whole or any part of the sum of $2,800,000, MUNICIPAL BONDS OF THE CITY OF CINCINNATI, as authorized by an act of the Legislature of the State of Ohio, entitled "an act relating to cities of the first class having a population exceeding one hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants," passed May 4, 1869, and "an act supplementary thereto," passed Feb. 24, 1876, a vote of the people of the CITY OF CINCINNATI, and a resolution of the City Council as prescribed by the said act.

SAID BONDS WILL BEAR INTEREST AT THE RATE OF 7 3-10 PER CENT. PER ANNUM, PAYABLE ON THE 1ST DAY OF MAY AND NOVEMBER IN EACH YEAR, AND THE PRINCIPAL WILL BECOME DUE IN 1906, BOTH PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST BEING PAYABLE AT THE AMERICAN EXCHANGE NATIONAL BANK IN NEW-YORK.

Each proposal should be sealed and indorsed:

"PROPOSALS FOR 7 3-10 PER CENT. BONDS OF THE CITY OF CINCINNATI," AND INCLOSED IN A SECOND ENVELOPE ADDRESSED TO THE AMERICAN EXCHANGE NATIONAL BANK OF NEW-YORK.

The right is reserved on the part of the undersigned to reject any or all of the bids, if, in their judgment, the interests of the city require it.

AWARDS WILL BE MADE ON JAN. 11.

FOR FULL INFORMATION APPLY TO THE UNDERSIGNED AGENTS.

THE BATTLE OF PRINCETON.

ITS CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION.

A MIMIC BATTLE IN COMMEMORATION OF WASHINGTON'S VICTORY OVER THE BRITISH — SIX HUNDRED TROOPS ENGAGED—EVERY DETAIL OF THE FIGHT RE-ENACTED.

From a Special Correspondent.

PRINCETON, Wednesday, Jan. 3, 1877.

The one hundredth anniversary of the battle of Princeton was celebrated here to-day with a degree of enthusiasm and éclat to which this staid little university town has long been a stranger. Six hundred rank and file, composed in equal numbers of New Jersey State Militia and volunteer organizations, marched and countermarched, fired upon each other and retreated, in as strict imitation of the encounter between Washington and Mahwood's troops as the topography of the town and its altered condition would admit. Making due allowance for the inferior numbers engaged, the fight was decidedly superior to the one at Trenton ten days ago, both in the discipline of the combatants and their superiority of equipment and the heartiness and vigor with which the counterfeit war was waged. The grand final onslaught on the British forces under the walls of the University was a piece of military acting of which trained regulars need not have been ashamed, while the running fight along Nassau street was equally well conducted. Those having the affair in charge had evidently mastered not only the history of the original engagement, but the military knowledge necessary to its correct reproduction.

The majority of the visiting military arrived yesterday, the Philadelphia company reaching Princeton Junction on the 9 P. M. train from the West. They were met at the station by the Continentals under Capt. A. L. Green, and escorted to their head-quarters on Nassau street. As the First is the "crack" regiment of Philadelphia, the men sent here to represent it were among the best of the entire command, and in both discipline and military bearing reflected deserved credit upon their parent corps. The Phil Kearney Guards (Company C, Third Regiment, New-Jersey National Guard,) under Capt. William H. De Hart, arrived from Elizabeth at 10:30 this morning. Two companies from Trenton debarked from the cars at Princeton Station at about the same time, and after waiting an hour and a half for the diminutive train on the branch railroad to this place, consoled to march the distance, three and one-half miles, through the snow. After making two-thirds of the distance they overhauled the cars, and finally arrived just in time to take up their position in the English line. The commencement of the engagement had been fixed for 11 o'clock, but owing to the delay in the movements of the troops it was nearly 12:30 o'clock before the first shot was fired. The Continental Army, who were drawn up across the Mercer street road, a mile and a half to the west of the college, consisted of the following troops: The Phil Kearney Guards, (Company C, Third New-Jersey National Guard,) Capt. William H. De Hart. Company B, First Pennsylvania National Guard, Capt. T. J. Dunn; Company A, Princeton Continentals, (citizens,) Capt. A. L. Green; Company B, same organization, Capt. J. H. Margeram; Company C, Capt. James Leggett. The Continentals numbered 300 men altogether, and were commanded by Gen. J. Madison Drake, of Elizabeth, who personated Gen. Washington. John F. Hegeman, Jr., acted as Adjutant to the Commander in Chief, and Major Aaron Allen officiated as Major and Chief of Ordnance. The British forces which equaled the Continentals in numbers, occupied a position on the same road a few hundred feet near the town, and comprised four companies of the First Regiment, New-Jersey National Guard—Company D, Capt. Alfred Williams; Company E, Capt. Samuel Klotz; Company G, Capt. W. W. Hulfish; Company H, Capt. Thomas Fairservice. Two companies of the Seventh New-Jersey Regiment were also engaged on the British side—Company G, Capt. Peter Wilkes, and Company B, Capt. Samuel M. Yeomans. Col. Allen, of Newark, acted as Col. Mawhood, the British commander, and the four companies of the New-Jersey National Guard were known for the time being as "His Majesty's Seventeenth Regiment of Foot."

At 12:30 o'clock the battle commenced by the Continentals under Capt. Ulogarum attacking the British troops posted at the Old Barracks, on Edge-hill. In the first encounter the Americans proved successful, and after a smart raking fire, dislodged their opponents and drove them down hill into a ravine. Here the British rallied, and after a single volley charged back up hill, driving the patriots in turn. On reaching the middle of the ascent they paused, and a few minutes later the main body of Washington's troops appeared on the ridge and crowded down upon the flanks of the English. The latter retreated, and after vainly attempting to make a stand on the site of "the old store" of Revolutionary times, were pursued up Nassau street, the victorious Continentals firing volley upon volley after the retiring "red-coats." Meanwhile counter flank movements had been made on either side, the Americans sending off Capt. Dunn's company by way of Railroad avenue, and the British detailing a portion of their force to hold the college grounds against the enemy. Meantime the fighting between the main bodies on Nassau street continued briskly, the British retreating in the direction of the University, and the Americans following on their flanks. A few minutes after 1 o'clock Capt. Dunn and his men emerged from behind the old college building, (known as Nassau Hall in Washington's day,) and opened a rolling fire on the British right flank. The manœuvre was well executed, and called forth applause from the crowds of spectators on Nassau street. The final struggle which ensued on the historic "campus" was the finest and most spirited part of the engagement. The Continentals under Washington were drawn up in a line opposite the British, who formed immediately in front of Library Hall. Both forces looked their best. The uniforms of the English contrasted finely with the bright snow and the blue and buff garb in which the Washington Light Infantry were clad. Both sides carried ensigns of their own, the Americans possessing two fine regimental standards besides the old battle-flag of Phil Kearny's command, while from the English ranks floated the emplazoned eross of St. George with its blood-red field. On both sides of the Campus, at right angles to the troops, were ranged crowds of spectators, while directly back of the English and in front of the Library doors were congregated a dense throng of students. For several minutes a rolling fusillade was kept up by both parties The rapidity and precision with which the men handled their weapons and the steadiness of the fire on both sides was really excellent and was loudly applauded. As the Americans closed up on the English, a laughable incident occurred in the summary capture of several ovilians who had unwittingly wandered between the lines. Penned in on both sides, the English were finally forced to surrender, Col. Allen, the representative of Mahwood, handing his sword gracefully to Washington's Chief of Staff, Col. Hegeman. This portion of the play, by the way, was an improvement on the original, in which no surrender took place, only a few of the English being taken prisoners. The two commands then formed in line, the American on the right, and marched to the University House, where dinner was served at 2 o'clock. Every detail of the original battle was carried out as far as practicable, even to the mortal wounding of Gen. Mercer in front of the college. The original programme had included an oration and poem at the Presbyterian Church; but this feature of the day was dispensed with. The military from abroad left for their homes by the afternoon trains, well pleased with their visit. Col. Drake, of Elizabeth, who filled the rôle of Washington, minus the Continental uniform, is a veteran of the Army of the Potomac, having served with distinction in no less than three Army corps, and received a Brevet Brigadier Generalship at the close of the war. He is also one of the few recipients of the famous bronze medals awarded by Congress to certain officers and men who had served with distinguished gallantry. The Committee of Arrangements having the affair in charge, consisted of the following 13 citizens of Princeton: Hon. George Vanderbilt, ex-Speaker of the New-Jersey Assembly; Thomas N. Segar, R. H. Green, J. F. Dodsle, W. Vanderveer, A. L. Green, Joseph Schenck, J. J. Stryker, Valentine Arnheiter, J. F. Hegeman, Jr., W. G. McCloskey, J. L. Bryner, and Josiah Wright. Messrs. Rose, Vandewater, and Green have been the leading spirits in the work, and the entire expense, including the cost of some 5,000 rounds of ammunition, has been raised by the citizens of Princeton themselves, without aid from the authorities either State or local.

THE WASHINGTON MARKET HOMICIDE.

A mass of contradictory testimony was taken yesterday at the inquest held by Coroner Croker in the case of Hugh McCabe, of No. 193 Franklin street, who died on Thursday last of injuries received during a melée in West Washington Market on October 16 last. Owen McCabe, a brother of the deceased, testified that the affray grew out of a fight between himself and Frank McCarren, a produce dealer, who threatened to drive McCabe from the market because he [McCabe] sold some potatoes to one of McCarren's customers. The jury decided that the deceased died from the injury on the head inflicted by James Rice, but expressed the belief that Rice had no intention of taking McCabe's life. Coroner Croker held Rice in $5,000 bail, which was furnished by Henry Fink, No. 102 Second avenue.

A THREAT OF ASSASSINATION.

EX-ATTORNEY GEN. BARLOW SENDS A CHALLENGE TO MR. ELIHU ROOT—HE SUBSEQUENTLY TREATS THE MATTER AS A JOKE.

A sensational story was in circulation among the lawyers of New-York yesterday relative to a challenge to mortal combat, said to have been sent by ex-Attorney Gen. Francis C. Barlow, of the law firm of Barlow & Olney, No. 206 Broadway, to Elihu Root, of the law firm of Compton, Root, & Bartlett, No. 43 Pine street. The story was that a dispute having arisen between the two gentlemen in the matter of a certain brief, Mr. Root had sent a very impudent note to Mr. Barlow, in response to which the latter wrote demanding an apology or the satisfaction which one gentleman should, under the circumstances, give to another. Rumor went even further and said that a duel would certainly take place in one of the provinces of Canada, while in contradiction of this rumor there was another that Mr. Root had caused Gen. Barlow to be arrested and bound over to keep the peace.

The facts are as follows: On the 27th of December last Gen. Barlow sent a challenge, which also contained a threat of assassination, to Mr. Root, which the latter believed to be genuine and took measures to protect himself accordingly. Gen. Barlow now publicly declares that his challenge or threat of assassination was only a "bit of fun," but many believe that Mr. Barlow meant more than "fun" when he sent his rude challenge to Mr. Root. It is believed that he had no intention to fight, but in a spirit of bravado to hurt the feelings of Mr. Root, and now that he finds the matter assuming a serious aspect he endeavors to shield himself under the plea that his challenge was sent in "fun." Mr. Root acknowledges that he was misguided by the judgment of his friends, and now believes that there was no occasion whatever for him to be frightened.

Mr. Barlow was the Attorney General of this State in 1872 and 1873. While holding this office he began the suit of the People against the Bank of North America. After his term of office had expired he was employed to continue the suit before the Referee, Mr. William Stanley, No. 16 Wall street. Mr. Root was the counsel on the other side. Last October, the suit still being undecided, the Referee requested the counsel to conclude the case by the presentation of written briefs. A short time before Christmas the counsel exchanged briefs, preliminary to submitting them to the Referee. Gen. Barlow, having perused Mr. Root's brief, and perhaps taken a copy of it, returned it with the request that his own brief be returned to him. Mr. Root was very much surprised at this request. His experience had taught him that lawyers always exchanged briefs, with the understanding that each should keep that which belonged to the other. Acting upon this experience he had, immediately upon receiving Gen. Barlow's brief, appropriated it to himself, making extensive marginal notes upon it. Should he return it he would disclose to the opposing counsel his line of defense. This much he stated in a note to Gen. Barlow. Gen. Barlow was not satisfied with this—he reiterated his demand for his brief in a note, of which the following is a copy:

DEAR SIR: I have heretofore requested the return of my written argument in the case of the People vs. The Bank of North America.

I make now a further and formal request, for the purpose of basing upon it, if still uncomplied with, an action of replevin, or if the argument has been destroyed, an action of trover, coupled with the arrest of the guilty parties. Yours, &c.,

FRANCIS C. BARLOW.

ELIHU ROOT, Esq.

In reply to the above Mr. Root sent the following:

DEC. 27, 1876.

Francis C. Barlow, Esq.

DEAR SIR: Don't be a damned fool.

Yours, &c., ELIHU ROOT.

Mr. Barlow diu not like to be called a fool, so he set about to make a fool of himself by sending the following challenge to Mr. Root:

NEW-YORK, No. 206 BROADWAY, Dec. 27, 1876.

Elihu Root, Esq.

SIR: I have received your letter of this date containing an offensive epithet. I regret that the legal controversy between us, (I allude now to the conversion of my written argument,) should have become embarrassed by the personalities which you have chosen to bring into the controversy. I should have preferred to leave the matters of difference between us to the courts, but I must accept the personal issue which you have interjected into the affair

At the outset I am embarrassed by an indistinctness in the writing of your last note. I am not certain whether the offensive word used by you, (or whether one of them, to speak with entire accuracy,) is "damned" or "darned." Some of my friends whom I have consulted think that the latter is the expression, which may possibly be less offensive in its implication than the former. I should be glad if that point could be settled at the outset; but without dwelling longer on this point, I make the following requests of you, in order to lay a basis for future action:

First—That you will define your exact meaning, or rather that you will state whether the adjective of your letter of to-day was "damned" or "darned."

Secondly—That you withdraw unequivocally the entire expression of your note of to-day. It will be enough that you say simply, "I withdraw the offensive expressions (using the plural to cover the whole expression) of my note of Dec. 27."

Should you decline both the above propositions, I must declare my future course—not by way of threat, for I consider that unbecoming—but simply that you may realize exactly the situation. I request that you will inform me on or before 12 M. of Saturday next whether you will meet me at a point to be designated by yourself in Canada during the coming week, that we may settle this matter of difference in a dignified way. If you answer in the affirmative, I will request a friend to wait upon you whom you can refer to some gentleman who will act for you.

Should you decline to give me this satisfaction, I can only ask you to be prepared to defend yourself, (of course I mean by the use of fire-arms,) whenever and wherever I may meet you, always excepting, of course, the courts as a place of encounter. Upon recognition I shall feel at liberty to fire upon you as the only method of adjustment left me or this difficulty. Of course the appeal to the courts which I intend in the matter of the argument will go on exclusive of this method of settling the personal difficulty arising from the offensive remarks. Should you decline the retractions and explanations, and the other methods of settlement which I propose, and I should not happen to meet you before Jan. 6, I would suggest that you notify Mr. Stanley of our intentions, that he may absent himself from the room until the result of our meeting is determined.

Possibly I shall be compelled to give Mr. Kernan a similar notice as to our meeting, (my meeting with him.) I have written him to inquire whether he is in any way responsible for the offensive note, (yours of Dec. 27,) as it looks to me as if it were a concerted action between you. You would relieve the case from some complications by avowing yourself alone responsible for the note of this date. An early answer will oblige me. Yours, &c.,

FRANCIS C. BARLOW.

Mr. Root, on receiving the above offensive communication, sent the following reply to Mr. Barlow:

NO. 43 PINE STREET, NEW-YORK, Dec. 28, 1876.

Francis C. Barlow, Esq.:

SIR: Your second letter of the 27th inst. was received to-day:

If contains a threat of assassination unless I comply with your dictation.

That alone is sufficient to preclude me from considering anything further in your communication,

ELIHU ROOT.

Mr. Root felt alarmed. Of course he would not think of going to Canada to fight a duel with Gen. Barlow; his fears were that he should be shot down while walking up and down Broadway in pursuit of his business or in his journeyings to and from his home. He decided that something should be done to protect his life, and at once consulted his friends, among whom were ex-Judge Fullerton and his law partners, Messrs. Knox and Crosby. These gentlemen read the challenge, and agreed with Mr. Root that Gen. Barlow meant just what he said. They advised Mr. Root to appeal to District Attorney Phelps for protection. Accordingly the entire correspondence was handed over to Mr. Phelps, and he was requested to act. He was told that Gen. Barlow was a very excitable man, and that he would just as soon kill Mr. Root as eat his dinner. Reading the challenge, Mr. Phelps pronounced it a joke. Nevertheless, at the earnest solicitation of Mr. Root's friends, he promised to act, and forthwith called upon Judge Noah Davis. Judge Davis was very much amused at the affair. He said that he would call upon Gen. Barlow and talk the matter over with him. He did call upon Gen. Barlow, and, it is said, greatly astonished him by mentioning the object of his visit. Gen. Barlow assured the Judge that he had forgotten all about the letter, that it was a mere joke, and it was stated yesterday that Gen. Barlow had written a letter to Mr. Root's friends, in which he repeated this statement. Neither Gen. Barlow nor Mr. Root would say anything about the affair yesterday, and both seemed very anxious that the newspapers should say nothing about it.

RESULTS OF THE STORM.

TRAVEL SERIOUSLY IMPEDED.

THE NORTH AND EAST RIVERS FULL OF ICE —FERRY-BOATS DELAYED FROM TWO TO FOUR HOURS—DETENTION OF INCOMING MAILS — CLEARING THE STREETS OF SNOW.

The effects of the recent storm, and the continued cold weather, promise to try the patience of travelers and the strength of horses, ferry-boats, and locomotives until a thaw and a warm rain shall have melted and carried away some of the superabundant snow and ice. The North and East Rivers are both full of floating ice, which yesterday rather increased in quantity than diminished; the streets are covered with dirty snow to the depth of a foot. The street railroad companies yesterday morning employed great numbers of men and carts to remove the snow from the most crowded thoroughfares. The Third avenue line carried away hundreds of cart-loads from Park row, and the Broadway and other west side roads had men and carts busy all day removing the mounds that flanked their tracks in Barclay, Church, and Greene streets. The Belt Railroad Company also kept a large force employed in this work. Along West and South streets there was scarcely a moment in the day that long lines of trucks were not delayed by cars or by other trucks. On Broadway the Street Cleaning Bureau had carts and men at work removing the heaviest mounds of snow, though no attempt was made to clean the street thoroughly.

To add to the discomfort which business men from Brooklyn have felt in reaching the ferry-houses on either side of the river, they were yesterday morning tried still more sorely by an ice blockade, which delayed several thousand persons for from two to four hours in the most valuable part of the day. At about 7:30 o'clock a large and very solid field of ice came up through the Buttermilk Channel, on the flood tide, and, slowly but surely wedging itself into the piers and slips, formed a barrier across the river. The South and Hamilton Ferries first felt the effects of this obstruction, and many of those who came to the docks on either side of the river turned away to take the Wall street boats. Having reached Wall street, the tide was found to have got ahead of them, the boats having been laid up. They did not make any trips until nearly noon. As a last resort, the disappointed people who had been driven from the lower ferries resorted to Fulton street. Here they joined a throng of people just as anxious as themselves to be ferried across the river. The Farragut was overflowed with passengers, who packed the cabins full and then took possession of the upper decks. At 6:30 o'clock there seemed no prospect of relief. At this time the Fulton, which had been caught in the ice in an effort to get to the Brooklyn side, was carried by the tide and ice right across the entrance to the slip, where she spent half an hour backing and running ahead in vain efforts to break a way through the ice-field. The Farragut made a dash when the opportunity offered, and buried her bow in the mass of floating ice by which she was carried up the river in the direction of the Navy-yard. The pilot of the Fulton having contrived to get her into the slip, she was taken by storm, the waiting crowd swarming upon her by hundreds. Waiting only for an opening in the ice, the pilot of the Fulton again put out, and succeeded in getting his boat into much the same situation as the Farragut had found. These two boats were not alone in their imprisonment. Near by for company they had the America and the Columbia. Higher up the stream were the Alaska, Superior, and Montana, of the Williamsburg Ferry, and the Republic of the Catharine Ferry, all surrounded by the floating ice, and so locked up that they were able to do nothing toward reaching their respective slips. Not far off were the Southampton, of the Long Island Railroad Ferry and the Shady Side of the Harlem Line. In midstream, opposite the dry docks, two puffing little tugs butted ineffectually against the ice with an unwieldy oil barge in tow, and were obliged to wait with their larger companions in difficulty, the turning of the tide. The Shady Side was at last compelled to turn about and land her passengers at Grand street. A number of tug-boats endeavored to dislodge the ice in the path of the ferry-boats, and perhaps hastened the moment of their relief. But the turn of the tide was the means of releasing all the imprisoned boats. The Montana reached the Roosevelt street slip a little before 10 o'clock, having been about two hours and a half in making the trip from Williamsburg. The Fulton and Catharine ferry-boats soon after reached their slips, and the body of ice having been broken by the tide, the delays after that time were brief. Long Island Sound was also badly choked up by ice, and no sailing vessels passed Hell Gate yesterday. During the afternoon the Garden City, of the James Slip Ferry, was disabled and taken to Pier No. 35, and at 6 o'clock all trips on that ferry were suspended for the night.

The North Shore Staten Island ferry-boats were not seriously interfered with. Their trips were made with short delays, but a great deal of very heavy ice was encountered. A notice was posted at the ferry-house announcing that in consequence of the ice the night trips would be uncertain. It was explained that this meant that the trips of the line would probably be discontinued if the obstructions should be serious. The Providence Line steamer Thetis was delayed several hours on her trip from Providence to this City. She started behind time on Tuesday night, in consequence of the delay of trains connecting with her, and then met with large quantities of heavy ice all the way from the Stepping Stones to New-York. The failure of the Fall River boat to reach this City yesterday with the mails was said by the agents of the company not to be attributed to the presence of ice, but to an accident to the machinery of the Old Colony. The ferry-boats on the North River were only slightly delayed by the floating ice. The steamer Jesse Hoyt, of the Southern Railroad of New-Jersey, which left this City at 11 o'clock on Tuesday morning, was unable to reach this City before 8 o'clock last night, bringing a mail of two bags only, and that consisting only of locked matter from Philadelphia. None of the local mail had been received, and it was supposed that it had been detained and forwarded by other routes. The boat did not sail yesterday, the Captain deciding that it would not be advisable to encounter the dangerous fields of broken ice floating in the lower bay.

The snow has not ceased to obstruct the railroads, and yesterday morning there was more or less detention of passengers from local points. The Morris and Essex trains were hindered by drifting snow. The express train from Easton, due in New York at 11 o'clock, arriving an hour behind time. The mails were quite as badly interrupted in their arrival as they were on Tuesday. The Eastern mail due at 6:30 A. M. did not reach the Post Office until 9:45 A. M., and then came without the Shore Line connection. The Washington express, due at 6:30, bringing letters from Washington and points this side of that city, arrived at 9:20. The Richmond express mail, due here at 10:15 in the morning, came along seven hours late, at 5:25 in the evening. The mail due at 9 o'clock was delayed half an hour. The mails by the New-York Central Railroad due here at 11:15 o'clock in the morning came in at 12:40, and comprised the first and second Atlantic express mails and the San Francisco, West, and North-west matter. The Harlem Railroad mail, due at 8 o'clock, came in five hours behind time, being received at the Post Office at 12 o'clock. Another mail due at 11:35 A. M. was not received until 3 P. M. The Pennsylvania Central mail, due at 7, reached its destination at 10. The Erie Railroad mails were also detained, that due at 7:45 not arriving until 12:30.

The snow blockade continues on Long Island, causing much delay to travel. On the Long Island Railroad the freight trains have been abandoned on the sidings, and are completely snowed in. The snow-plows have been running over the road and its branches since Tuesday, but have made little progress, the snow blowing into the cuts as fast as cleared out. On Tuesday morning the Port Jefferson branch was cleared out, and at 4:30 P. M., the Port Jefferson express train left Hunter's Point. Between Hicksville and Syosset, deep banks were again encountered, and the train did not reach Port Jefferson until 5 o'clock on Wednesday. No trains have been run over the Sag Harbor branch since the storm. On this branch the sand blows with the snow, and packs firmly. The Greenport express train, which left Tuesday morning, had not arrived at Hunter's Point at a late hour last night. Trains on the Southern and North Shore roads are now running nearly on time.

THE BROOKLYN FERRIES AGAIN BLOCKADED LAST NIGHT.

The scenes on the North and East Rivers yesterday morning were repeated last evening at the second flow of the tide. The flow commenced soon after 8 o'clock, and half an hour later the rivers were both filled with floating ice. In the North River, although the boats did not make regular time, they were able to accommodate most of the traffic. In the East River the delay was far greater. The boats of the Hamilton and South Ferry lines were the first to be reached by the ice floe, and from 8.30 until 12 o'clock they lost from 15 to 20 minutes on every trip. The Wall street boats were withdrawn at 12 o'clock, about three hours earlier than usual, but the most serious interruption was caused at the Fulton Ferry. At 9:30 o'clock, as the Fulton was entering her slip on the Brooklyn side and the Farragut was moving out on the same side, both boats were caught by a floe, and were carried side by side up the river as far as Williamsburg. At an early hour this morning the boats had worked down as far as the Navy-yard Bay, where they seemed likely to remain until the ebb tide set in. One boat was kept running at the Catharine Ferry, and was very successful. At every opportunity she would dart through the thinner portions of the ice, and nearly all of the people who had been detained during the delay of the morning ultimately conveyed to Brooklyn by this route. The Roosevelt Street Ferry ran one boat at irregular intervals.

A SHOCKING TRAGEDY.

A COLORED MAN BEATS, SCALDS, AND ROASTS HIS MISTRESS IN JERSEY CITY.

A tragedy occurred yesterday in Jersey City which for fiendish cruelty is worse than any that has ever occurred in New-Jersey. The perpetrator, Oscar Hudson, is a young colored man, who has lived with a colored woman named Martha Shuttle for several years, on Harrison avenue, Jersey City Heights. The woman was considered attractive by the colored men living in the neighborhood. Her quiet manners won her many friends among the neighbors, and the attentions she received from her male acquaintances aroused Hudson's jealousy so that he beat her frequently. The neighbors often heard cries for help coming from Hudson's apartments, and only as late as Christmas a number of them called in to save the woman from being murdered. Yesterday Hudson returned home about noon, and finding a neighbor and her infant in the room immediately began a quarrel. This woman implored him to desist, and he snatched her infant from her arms and threw it against the wall, threatening at the time to kill its mother if she dared take an outcry. Then he seized his mistress by the throat, and throwing her across the stove picked up a kettle of boiling water and poured it over her body. Afterward he kicked her from the stove to the floor, and after kicking her almost dead began to search for a razor. Failing to find one he returned to the woman's prostrate body, and after giving her another beating replaced her again across the stove. After threatening the other terrified occupant of the room to return and kill her if she called the neighbors, he left the house. The woman, after finding he had gone, removed Martha Shuttle from the stove to the floor, and then notified the neighbors. When they entered the room the sight that met their gaze was sickening. Martha Shuttle's body lay on the floor, the flesh parboiled and peeling from her limbs and face, while a smell of burning flesh pervaded the room. Dr. Young, who was hastily summoned, on examining the woman, pronounced her injuries fatal.

Hudson was found shortly after in a billiard saloon, where he is employed, on Monticello avenue, and was taken by the Police to the South Precinct Station. He is an ugly, vicious-looking negro. To all who visited him he refused to make any statement.

SEQUEL TO A CLANDESTINE MARRIAGE.

Mr. H. W. Vandervoort, young in years and romantic in disposition, was formerly an assistant teacher in the public school at Hewlett's, on the Rockaway branch of the Southern Railroad of Long Island, and while thus engaged, made the acquaintance of Miss Addie Johnsen, the daughter of Mr. Abram Johnsen of Woodsburg. The acquaintance ripened into intimacy and love. Recently young Vandervoort has been engaged in pursuit of his profession in Connecticut, but a few days ago he took occasion to visit Hewlett's, and he and Miss Addie, without previous consultation with the latter's parents, paid a clandestine visit to Rev. J. H. Painter, Pastor of the First Methodist Church of Woodsburg, by whom they were married. The ceremonies, it appears, concluded to put a bold face upon the matter, and going to the house of Miss Addie's parents, exhibited the marriage certificate to her mother. She at once, it is reported, became enraged, and in her wrath proceeded to administer to her daughter a severe castigation. The father came in, and learning the condition of affairs, he too, became enraged, and proceeded to kick the young man in a vigorous manner. Vandervoort ran toward the highway, followed by the irate parent. Arrived at the yard fence, he could not open the gate, but was helped out of the difficulty by the old gentleman, who, with one hand grasping his coat-collar and the other the seat of his pantaloons, lifted the youngster over and deposited him on the sidewalk. The father then returned to the house, after forbidding the young man's entrance, and the latter was forced to go to a hotel for a night's lodging, while his bride remained at home. The next day the "old folks" talked the matter over, and, after some degree, perhaps, by the fear of possible legal proceedings, finally relented, and the young couple are now living together, it is to be presumed, happily.

CITY HALL NOTES.

The Aldermen will meet as a Board of County Canvassers next Tuesday, to canvass the votes cast on Tuesday last for member of Congress in the Seventh District.

Controller Kelly also appointed Alfred Vredenburgh to the position of Deputy Receiver of Taxes—a position which has been vacant for a long time. Mr. Vredenburgh has been a clerk in the Tax office for over 21 years.

Col. Gilon, the new Collector of Assessments, took the oath of office yesterday before Mayor Ely, and filed bonds in $50,000 for the faithful performance of his duties. His sureties are Sheriff Bernard Reilly and Mr. H. K. Thurber.

Mr. Hubert O. Thompson has been appointed Deputy Commissioner of Public Works by Commissioner Campbell. The office was held until recently by Mr. H. A. Gumbleton, who was elected County Clerk. Mr. Thompson is well acquainted with the duties of the position, having filled it with satisfaction since his predecessor left the department. He is a courteous and experienced official.

Another member of the Tammany Hall General Committee was provided for yesterday by Controller Kelly, who appointed Edward T. Fitzpatrick to the office of Collector of City Revenue, in place of Dr. K. F. Stevens. Mr. Fitzpatrick, who represents the Fourth Assembly District in the Tammany General Committee, formerly held the position of General Inspector in the Department of Buildings.

BUSINESS EMBARRASSMENTS.

James W. Wiseman, crockery, of No. 85 Warren street, made an assignment to George W. Pratt, Sr.

Richard F. Purdy and William H. Avery, composing the firm of R. F. Purdy & Co., clothing, of No. 142 Bowery, assigned their property to Edward G. Moran.

Edwin Wickstead and Theodore Wickstead, composing the firm of E. Wickstead & Co., stationers, of No. 31 Malden lane, made an assignment to James D. Van Voorhees.

The New-York creditors of Emanuel Schwerfin, the Philadelphia clothier who failed with liabilities of $375,000, have resolved to accept a settlement at 60 cents on time.

The liabilities of Freeman, Barents & Co., clothing, at No. 106 Duane street, are reported at over $25,000. The place is in possession of the Sheriff by virtue of an attachment obtained by Goddard & Brother.

Vose, Dinsmore & Co., railroad supplies, of No. 13 Barclay street, whose assignment was announced yesterday, have liabilities amounting to over $100,000. A statement of the indebtedness and assets is being prepared, and will be completed in a week.

A RECEIVER POSSIBLY FOR A RECEIVER.

When Mayor Wickham was appointed Receiver of the Security Life Insurance and Annuity Company, there were some odd statements regarding his own financial standing which were not all complimentary to him. It is stated that Mr. Wickham, who is quite a bon vivant, has been living fully up to his income, and it is known that only a few months ago a claim of a little more than $1,000 was not paid by him, and judgment was obtained by the creditor. Still more recently judgment was recovered against Mr. Wickham for $7,000 and it was gravely suggested yesterday that a Receiver should be appointed to take charge of whatever property he has. It is among the possibilities of the near future that some such action will be taken. Some of the policy-holders in the Security Company do not like the state of affairs and are beginning to make public their complaints. They urge that a person in Mr. Wickhem's financial circumstances is unfitted for the position of Receiver. No imputations however, are made regarding Mr. Wickham's probity, but the fact of his finances for the reasons above given is strongly commented on, and the discussions may lead to an effort looking to his removal.

THE EMMA MINE LITIGATION.

The January term of the United States Circuit Court, Judge Wallace presiding, was opened yesterday, and with it the continuation of the trial of the suit of the Emma Silver Mining Company, (limited) of London, against Tremor W. Park, Gen. Baxter, and William M. Stewart. Argument was heard from William A. Beach, for the defense, upon the objections raised to the admission of certain evidence offered on the part of the plaintiff. This included the prospectus of the company and the statutory declaration of Mr. Park. Judge Wallace, at the conclusion of the argument, decided that these papers were admissible, and an exception was entered by Mr. Beach. The reading of evidence on the part of the plaintiff will be continued this morning.

KILLED ON THE RAIL.

Thomas Driscoll, a laborer, residing at No. 40 Railroad avenue, Jersey City, while at work with a gang of men on the Pennsylvania Railroad tracks in Jersey City yesterday, in his haste to get out of the way of an approaching train, slipped and fell beneath the wheels of drill engine No. 716. The wheels passed over the unfortunate man's throat, completely severing the head from the body. Coroner Gannon was notified, and took charge of the remains. The deceased leaves a wife and two children.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

Victoria C. Woodhull will deliver her new lecture on the "Social Problem," at the Park Theatre, on Sunday evening next.

Amateur performances of "Cinderella" and "Scrap of Paper" will be given this evening in Masonic Hall, for the benefit of the poor of St. Ann's Church.

Thomas M. Mahon, aged 37, of Little Neck, Long Island, was found prostrated by sickness in one of the streets of the Twenty-first Precinct last evening, and was taken to Bellevue Hospital.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the Manhonides Library Association will be celebrated this evening at the Tontonia Assembly Rooms. The exercises will consist of a concert, supper, and ball.

Robert Lusk, a bricklayer, whose skull was fractured with a bottle during a fracas in Joseph Arthur's liquor store, No. 309 Eleventh avenue, on Thanksgiving Day, died of his injuries at the Ninety-ninth Street Hospital yesterday morning. Coroner Croker will hold an inquest.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Yorkville held its annual meeting on Tuesday evening, in their rooms, corner of Third avenue and Eighty-sixth street. Reports were rendered by the Chairmen of the several committees of the work done and the good accomplished during 1876. A new Executive Committee was chosen.

Mr. B. L. Hursen acknowledges the receipt of the following donations in aid of the Shinnecock Indians, who were made sufferers by the shipwreck of the Circassian: Theodore Roosevelt, $25; Evening Post, $5; E. B., $10; W. A. C. Stamford, $1; A. C. Brooks, $10; S. A. Roosevelt, $25; Mrs. L. A. Blackwell, $25; B. L. Hursen, $25. Total $126.

Capt. Allaire arrested a suspicious-looking man who was about leaving a cigar store at No. 118 Bowery, with a large valise. On the way to the Station-house the man dropped the bag on the side-walk in Broome street, and escaped. The valise was found to contain about $2,000 worth of "Imperial diamond-drilled-eyed buttons," manufactured by John English & Co., of England.

BROOKLYN.

During the month of December, according to Fire Marshal Keady's report, there were 40 fires in the city, involving a loss of $177,670, with an insurance of $151,476.

Mrs. Johanna Donnelly, while under the influence of liquor, jumped out of the third-story window of her residence, corner of Myrtle avenue and Walworth street, yesterday. She was seriously, but not fatally, injured.

The Kings County Board of Supervisors met yesterday, and organized for 1877, by electing John L. Ryder, of Flatlands, Chairman pro tem. E. B. Cadley was re-elected Clerk of the Board. No other business of importance was transacted.

Mr. William H. Muldoon, Police Property Clerk, reports that during the month of December the Police recovered property valued at $2,297 99. Several articles of jewelry, recovered from the ruins of the Brooklyn Theatre, still remain unidentified.

Application was made to Surrogate Livingston yesterday for the guardianship of William J. Ward, a child whose parents were burned in the Brooklyn Theatre fire. The father of the child had an interest in some real estate which brought him in $600 a year. The grandfather and young Ward's mother's brother both seek the guardianship. The Surrogate reserved his decision.

NEW-JERSEY.

The Hudson County Grand Jury yesterday presented the Hoboken Ferry turnstiles as a nuisance.

A course of lectures will be given by the Young Men's Guild of Trinity Parish, Bergen Point, this Winter.

Benjamin Miller, a lad residing in Newark, died on Tuesday night from the effects of injuries received while coasting a week ago.

Cornelius Post dropped dead while entering the door of the Rogers' Locomotive Works, in Paterson, yesterday. He had been employed in the shops for 35 years, and was well and favorably known.

John W. Warren was found dead on Eagle Rock avenue, Roseland, yesterday morning. It is supposed that while walking from East Orange, where he was visiting, he dropped in the snow and died before assistance could reach him.

An unsuccessful attempt was made by burglars to rob the West Hoboken Baptist Church on Tuesday night. Mr. Winfield Simons, a citizen, in passing, discovered one of the windows of the church open, and, on entering, found the carpets and altar ornaments piled in a heap on the floor ready for removal.

Thomas Titus, a Paterson rough, was locked up in that city on Tuesday for an assault on Constable Garrabrant. Yesterday, when the doorman went to take Titus from his cell, he discovered that the prisoner had effected his escape by kicking enough bricks from the rear wall of his cell to enable him to crawl out. He is still at large.

At the annual meeting of the Triton Boat Club, of Newark, the following officers were elected: Louis E. Saunier, President; Wallace Van Ness, Vice President; George H. F. Gray, Secretary; A. W. Conckliu, Treasurer; George D. Small, Captain; William Brintzinghoffer, Jr., Lieutenant; James McClose, Log-keeper. The log-keeper reported the number of miles rowed last year to be 6,435½.

REVISING THE STATUTES.

The Bar Association held another meeting last evening relative to revision of the statutes, Mr. Edward S. Van Winkle in the chair. Section 43 of the new revision gives a convict the right to testify in court. It was objected that this provision was too sweeping, and that if it became a law it should be the subject of a special statute, and not a part of a code referring mainly to remedial practice. A motion to amend the section was lost. A recommendation was adopted that, instead of permitting a Commissioner, arbitrator, or other court officer, to issue a subpœna for the arrest and punishment of a recusant witness, the sole power to do this shall reside in the Judge. Section 48 of the new revision gives the power to a court to compel a corporation to produce a book or paper simply on service of a subpœna duces tecum on the proper officer. Mr. Charles Tracy objected strongly to this. Mr. A. J. Parsons moved that the corporations should be obliged to furnish evidence under the same conditions imposed on individuals, and it was decided not to propose any amendment to the section. It was decided to favor a provision that testimony can be taken wholly or in part by commission, either orally or on written interrogatories.

DESPERATE FIGHT WITH BURGLARS.

At 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon two men were detected in the act of forcing an entrance into the establishment of Mr. James Griffin, shoe-dealer, on the second floor of No. 52 Warren street. Mr. John P. Benjamin, an occupant of the same building, discovered the burglars, and attacked them. One of the men turned on Mr. Benjamin and endeavored to strike him with a jimmy, but the merchant warded off the blow and knocked the burglar down. Mr. J. H. Steenberg, who does business on the top floor of the building, went to the assistance of Mr. Benjamin, and attacked the other burglar. The fellow fought desperately. POLITICAL INTELLIGENCE.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

MR. WRIGHT'S BILL TO PROVIDE FOR A COURT TO DECIDE CONTESTS DISCUSSED IN THE SENATE—SPEECH OF SENATOR WRIGHT—MR. KERNAN'S REPLY—HIS ARGUMENT THAT BOTH HOUSES SHOULD CONCUR IN THE COUNTING OF ANY VOTE—THE VOICE OF TILDEN IN THE SENATE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—In the Senate this morning, Senator Wright called up his bill, presented some weeks ago, and which looks to the settlement of the Presidental question by the establishment of a court to decide all such contests as that now pending. The bill provides in substance that "the court shall consist of the Chief Justice and six Judges of the Circuit or District Courts of the United States, to be selected by the said Chief Justice from those of different political parties, and who shall not be interested in the particular contest, nor in any manner related thereto. The court shall meet in Washington and the Chief Justice shall preside. Before acting the judges shall take a special oath for the occasion. The court shall have power to make and enforce all regulations not contrary to law. The court shall have power to allow amendments to pleadings, but there shall be no unnecessary delay in the hearings. Each of the Judges shall have power to administer oaths, and the court shall have power to send for persons or papers and enforce attendance. A majority shall be competent to decide all questions and shall keep a record."

In explaining the provisions of his bill and advocating its passage, Senator Wright made a long and able speech, in which he denounced the action of Grover and Cronin, of Oregon, as infamous and outrageous. During the delivery of these remarks, Gov. Grover was seated in the Senate Chamber, and was evidently uncomfortable and ill at ease. At the conclusion of Senator Wright's speech, Mr. Kernan rose to reply, and as he is generally regarded as being not only the warm advocate, but, to a certain extent, the mouthpiece of Ex-Gov. Tilden, his address was listened to with marked attention. He made a long and evidently a carefully prepared speech of the reform, agricultural society order, for which he is noted in Central New-York. The present question, he said, should not be regarded as one of party. It rose above all party, and it should be decided, not according to partisan feeling, but upon principle, and with an eye single to right and justice. The proposition to allow the President of the Senate to count the vote he denounced as revolutionary, and in direct opposition to both the letter and spirit of American institutions. As Mr. Kernan was about to conclude his address—indeed, he had just commenced his well-known Agricultural Society flourish about honor in politics, Senator Sherman quietly said: "Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?" "Certainly," replied Mr. Kernan. "Well then, Sir," continued Mr. Sherman, "I would like to know whether in your opinion, both houses of Congress must concur in the counting of the vote of a State before it shall be declared a legal vote?" To this Mr. Kernan for a moment failed to reply, and then he said distinctly that in his opinion such concurrence was necessary, or in other words, that either house could throw out the vote of a State, and this was all his high flown speech amounted to. He opposed and denounced the counting of the votes by the President of the Senate, calling such action unjust and revolutionary; but he favored and supported the infamous theory that the Democratic House could go behind the certificates of a Governor of a State, duly issued, and throw out the vote of that State.

The Senate and House Committees on Counting the Electoral Vote both met to-day, but separately, and each discussed the subject and reached no conclusion. The Senate committee, it may be said on excellent authority, has done nothing whatever except to talk and discuss, and the declarations of members in the committee have not been sufficiently definite to warrant any formation of an opinion as to what proposition may be favorably acted upon. There has been to this time no result whatever, and that is all that can be said about it.

ANOTHER DEMOCRATIC ELECTOR INELIGIBLE

—A PREVAILING DESIRE FOR PEACE THROUGHOUT THE COUNTRY.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—Prominent Republicans here have information to the effect that John H. Moore, a Democratic Elector from the Seventh District of Tennessee, is disqualified because of the fact that he was a cadet at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, and subsequently performed service in the Confederate Army; and that said disabilities have not been removed by Congress.

Several letters have been received in this city from various portions of the country, giving full expression of the opinions and sentiments that prevail in the respective localities from which they are dated, upon the topic of the peaceful solution of the pending political difficulties. The general tone of all serious correspondence directed to prominent gentlemen of both political parties is to the effect that there is a vigorous increase of the feeling that nothing will occur that will be productive of a violation of the country's peace in the settlement of the great questions now at issue. "The talk is all for peace," is part of the language of a letter received by a very prominent Republican, and the same gentleman states that, in addition to a great number received by himself of this character, he is personally cognizant of similar expressions to other gentlemen of his party, while the same sentiment solidly prevails in opposing political quarters.

THE SOUTH CAROLINA COMMITTEE.

A UNANIMOUS REPORT TO BE MADE THAT HAYES CARRIED THE STATE—THE DEMOCRATIC MEMBERS DISGUSTED WITH THEIR BRETHREN OF THE PALMETTO STATE—A DEPLORABLE CONDITION OF AFFAIRS REPORTED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—The House Committee which went to South Carolina to investigate the recent election in that State, returned last night, and most of the members were in their seats in the House to-day. None of them hesitate to speak of their visit and to comment upon the result, therefore it can be stated authoritatively that the Committee will make a unanimous report that upon the face of the returns the Hayes and Wheeler Electors are chosen. The report will not touch upon the result of the election as to State officers, as the committee was not authorized to investigate as to them by the resolution under which they acted. The testimony taken by the committee will make about 600 printed pages, and cannot be written out for the printer for 10 days yet, and the committee is not expected to meet for consultation for a week at least. Mr. Cowler, Chairman of the committee, says that the investigation has been conducted with a view of ascertaining the exact facts in relation to the condition of affairs in South Carolina, and that there is no difference of opinion among the members of the committee as to the main points to be reported upon; that all agree that Hayes has carried the State, as well as that there has been a good deal of unfairness in the conduct of the election on both sides. He says things are in a deplorable condition in the State. While he does not say directly that he deprecates the action of his party associates in the State, he gives expression to enough of disgust for the condition of things to show very clearly that he has not gained an abiding faith in the South Carolina Democracy by the short stay he has made among them. Several of the other Democratic members of the committee also speak freely of their disappointment at the attitude of the Democracy in South Carolina, and not one member of the committee can be found who does not tell a pitiful story of the condition of affairs. What recommendations will be made by the committee are matters for future consideration, but there is no doubt that in addition to a unanimous report in favor of Hayes, there will also be a statement of facts not very creditable to either party there that will have approval of the full committee.

WADE HAMPTON AND HIS TOOLS.

MACKEY'S MISSION TO PRESIDENT-ELECT HAYES — INDICATIONS OF HAMPTON THROWING OUT AN ANCHOR TO WINDWARD—DISGUST OF THE DEMOCRATS.

From Our Special Correspondent.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Tuesday, Jan. 2, 1877.

Judge Mackey's performances in Columbus, Ohio, have amused the Republicans here and enraged the Democrats. Hampton seems to have fallen an easy prey to the erratic Mackey, who is one of the very worst of the genus scallawag, and has been a veritable "Old Man of the Sea" to all the Republican Governors, Scott, Moses, and Chamberlain—fastening himself on them in succession, and betraying each in his turn. His claim to be a Hayes man and a reformer is preposterous. Mackey was made Judge in 1872 by the Moses Legislature, and was admitted to the Bar only four days before being commissioned. He was the chief engineer of the conspiracy by which Moses and Whipper were elected Judges last Winter, thus securing his own re-election. In the late campaign he commenced as an earnest champion of Chamberlain, but yielded to the bull-dozers before long, and became a strong advocate of Hampton. He really did talk about Hayes and Hampton for a few days, but before the close of the campaign he spoke at a Tilden meeting in New-York, and returned home to advocate and vote for him.

The Democrats are deeply chagrined that Hampton should have used him as an envoy to Hayes. At home they do not mind tolerating any tool, but to send him abroad disgusts the high-toned ones. Hampton is obliged to deny that he told Mackey that he believed Hayes to be elected fairly, or that he authorized Mackey to speak for him or the party here. Nevertheless, Mackey was intrusted with a letter from Hampton to Hayes, and it is evident that Hampton has been trying to put out an anchor to windward.

The Supreme Court met to-day, but immediately adjourned until Thursday. The Democratic counsel insist upon judgment in the case of the quo warranto against the Republican Electors. As the counsel for the Republican Electors withdrew from the court denying its jurisdiction, the Democrats demand a judgment in their favor by default. Chief Justice Moses continues too feeble to appear in court, and it is thought by many that he never will sit again. Should he die, there is no means of filling the vacancy until the meeting of the Legislature.

The hearing of the habeas corpus case, before Hon. R. B. Carpenter, Circuit Judge, which tries the validity of a pardon by Chamberlain, was concluded on Saturday. The rulings of the court in the course of the case indicate an intention of deciding only upon the question of who is de facto Governor. This is a great disappointment to the Democrats, who anticipated a great eagerness on the part of Judge Carpenter to strike Chamberlain a deadly blow, if possible, on account of the very bitter personal enmity known to exist between them. There is no doubt among Republicans that the decision will be favorable to Chamberlain as de facto Governor, if not de jure.

Hampton issued a New Year's address, calling upon his supporters to pay over to his agents 10 per cent. of the amount paid by each as taxes last year. There is an implied threat in the address that unless he is thus sustained he will have to abandon the field.

The Senate Committee has been engaged for several days in hearing Democratic witnesses as to the conduct of the election. These are all summoned from lists furnished by Gen. M. C. Butler, and they are all examined by him before going to the committee. Yesterday, among them was found a man for whom a United States warrant had long been out. After he had testified it was served, and a great hubbub ensued. The man had been a prominent actor in the Hamburg massacre, and afterward in the Ellenton raids. He is a relative of A. P. Butler, of Aiken. The Democratic organs denounce his arrest as a great outrage.

LOUISIANA AFFAIRS.

BUNGLING, OR WORSE, OF THE DEMOCRATS ABOUT THE TESTIMONY TAKEN BY THE RETURNING BOARD—A USELESS DUPLICATION INEVITABLE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—The Democratic testimony obtained by Senator Bogy and his companions in Louisiana has just been handed to the Secretary of the Senate to send to the printing office. The Republican report and testimony make a not very bulky volume, and the controversy about printing the Democratic testimony was ended by an order to print extra copies of both and have them stitched together. The delay of the Democrats in furnishing their testimony has prevented the printing of extra copies of the Republican testimony, and now Bogy has produced a small trunkful of manuscript, which will make two or three large volumes, and will require several weeks for printing. The bulk of the matter, when printed, will prevent the stitching of all the evidence into one volume as was ordered. While this matter is printing, the committee will return from New-Orleans and their testimony will be sent to the printers, so that practically, all the expense of printing the testimony presented at the opening of Congress will have been useless.

THE LEGISLATURE.

The bill has passed the Senate and goes to the Governor appropriating $200,000 for Militia purposes. The following bills were also passed: Authorising the prosecuting officers of the State to challenge jurors in certain cases; forbidding the organization of military companies other than Militia. A resolution was introduced declaring that the seats of all the members declared legally elected which shall be vacant on Jan. 6, without formal leave of absence from the House, shall be declared permanently vacant, and that new writs of election be issued as prescribed by law.

The bogus Legislature is in receipt of communications from Thomas A. Adams, President of the Citizens' Committee, notifying the presiding officers of the House and Senate that their orders on William C. Black, Treasurer, for any amount of money they may require to the extent of his receipts, will be promptly paid.

THE INVESTIGATIONS.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 4.—Chief Justice Ludeling, of the Supreme Court of Louisiana, testified before the Senate Committee this morning as to the general intimidation of colored Republicans in Ouachita by means of armed bodies of Democrats, and said his nephew, Dr. Dinkgrave, Tax Collector, was killed, he believed, by members of the Democratic Party for organising a Republican club. Dinkgrave had told him that he had been warned by a friend, who was a member of a rifle club, that he would be killed if he attempted to organize a Republican club at Logtown. Judge Ludeling submitted his statement in writing. He contradicted several statements of Samuel McEnery, that Judge Ray and other prominent Republicans had said they believed Wimberly killed Dinkgrave. Witness also believed that Judge Crawford and District Attorney Harris were assassinated on account of their politics. Mr. Saulsbury asked if he was not the Ludeling referred to in Wallace's reports, Supreme Court, in the case of Jackson vs. Ludeling. Witness replied in the affirmative and made a statement exonerating himself from the strictures contained therein.

James Tray, tax-collector, denied that he had told Samuel McEnery that he believed Dinkgrave was killed by Wimberly.

Capt. Hale, Sixteenth Infantry, recalled. He stated he heard Richmore Dunn, colored, state as a reason for not voting the Republican ticket that he could not do so and live.

Mr. J. Grady, Supervisor of Registration, identified the affidavit or protest accompanying his consolidated returns of Ouachita Parish made to the Returning Board, which charges general intimidation, and specific cases of interference with the officers of election at polls Nos. 3, 8, 9, 10 and 11, and said the constables to hold the election were selected from lists furnished by the Democrats and Republicans; thinks there were 600 Republicans who did not vote, but he could not name any of them. On cross-examination witness said the protest and accompanying affidavits were prepared by Commissioner Woolley's clerk in New-Orleans, as he was summoned here before he had time to prepare them; that Judge Hugh Campbell had told him it was his duty to make them.

Samuel McEnery stated in explanation that Judge Ray, Robert Ray, and others named had left the impression on his mind by their remarks that they thought Wimberly or Adams had killed Dinkgrave.

Joseph Dunigneud, attorney, of New-Orleans, testified that he visited Ouachita as a speaker for the Republicans during the canvass, and such terror existed among the colored Republicans that a meeting at Grady's school-house was abandoned; several negroes told him they had been warned the night before not to come.

The Senate sub-committee to-day heard further evidence relative to East Baton Rouge. Lieut. Roe, Third Infantry, stationed at Baton Rouge, knew of no intimidation; had heard numerous complaints, which he found on investigation to be without foundation; saw one negro shot in the leg who said he had been shot by a white man.

Henry C. Young testified there was no intimidation; said he belonged to the Port Hudson conclave of the Two Ninety-eight Society, which had 30 members; on being interrogated, said no Republicans were members, and that it was more of a social than political order; could not explain the oath or the meaning of "Two Ninety-eight," as they were secrets; he had got through with it now as there was not much need of sociability since the election; witness stated that the society had nothing to do with the Mount Pleasant fight, and that the regulators in his neighborhood numbered more blacks than whites.

John N. Conrad stated that he visited the parish during the election, and was present at the meeting where the Texas circular was read. He saw or heard of no intimidation.

Before the House Committee to-day Judge Dibble, a member of the Republican State Committee, denied the statement made that he had instructed the Republicans to delay the voting of Democrats, and said he advised colored men to vote at the polls back of the city where they lived, in order to avoid collision; also denied that he had told them to vote double tickets; had good reason for counseling absolute fairness, because he believed the Republicans would carry the State; was a candidate for Congress; because of the disorders in the Felicianas, Baton Rouge, Ouachita, and Morehouse abandoned all hope of securing the vote of Republicans in those parishes; believed the terrorism there had the effect of giving an unnatural colored vote to the Democrats; gave a history of the famous sewing machine circulars which were intended to purge the registration of 1874 of fraud, and they had that effect.

Col. Lewis, (colored,) a prominent Republican, testified that in a fair election the Republicans would carry the State by a large majority.

THE CONTUMACIOUS WITNESSES.

THE WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY'S REPRESENTATIVES AND THE CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—Mr. Barnes, the Manager of the New-Orleans Western Union Telegraph office, will be arraigned at the Bar of the House to-morrow for alleged contempt of its authority in declining to appear before the Morrison Committee and producing certain telegrams. He will be accompanied by G. P. Lowrey as counsel.

Mr. Turner, the telegraph operator at Jacksonville, Oregon, who declined to answer certain questions before Senator Morton's Committee, says he cannot answer them, because in doing so he would violate the laws of Oregon (which makes the disclosure of private telegrams a felony) and the rules of the Western Union Telegraph Company, and therefore he would prefer any punishment the Senate might inflict rather than violate his obligations.

THE MAINE SENATORSHIP.

NOMINATION OF MR. BLAINE FOR THE SHORT AND FULL TERMS BY ACCLAMATION IN THE REPUBLICAN LEGISLATIVE CAUCUS.

AUGUSTA, Jan. 4.—Hon. James G. Blaine was nominated in the Republican Legislative caucus this evening, for the short term in the United States Senate, and also for the full term of six years, beginning March 4, 1877. Both nominations were made by acclamation amid a great display of enthusiasm, every one of the 140 members present rising when the question was submitted. This is the first time that a candidate for United States Senatorship in Maine was ever nominated by acclamation at his first election; and this exceptional method was selected as a special and emphatic compliment to Mr. Blaine. His name was presented to the caucus by Gen. Hyde, President of the Senate, seconded by Mr. Neally, Speaker of the House, and several eulogistic speeches were made, in addition, by leading members of both branches of the Legislature.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—The House to-day passed a bill allowing pensions to the survivors of the Black Hawk, Seminole, and Mexican wars, at the rate of $8 per month. The last section of the bill provides that this pension shall not extend to those upon whom political disabilities have been imposed in consequence of participation in the rebellion. Mr. Reagan, of Texas, moved to strike out this section. Mr. Rusk, of Wisconsin, opposed the motion to strike out and during his remarks asked Mr. Reagan if he was in favor of extending the benefit of the bill to Jefferson Davis, who was in the United States Army during the Mexican war. Mr. Regan made an affirmative reply, and pronounced a brief eulogium on Mr. Davis. The motion to strike out was lost.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

The amendment offered by Mr. Holman in the House to-day to the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill provides that on and after June 30, 1877, Embassadors, Envoys Extraordinary, and Ministers Plenipotentiary and Ministers Resident shall be entitled to the following annual salaries: Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Plenipotentiary to Great Britain, France, Germany, and Russia, $15,000 each; to Spain, Austria, Italy, Brazil, Mexico, Japan, and China, $10,000 each. Minister Resident to Belgium, the Netherlands, Swedes and Norway, Turkey, Venezuela, Hawaiian Islands, and the Argentine Republic, $6,000 each; so the Central American States to reside in such place in such of such States as the President may direct, $8,000; Ministers Resident and the Consuls General to Hayti and Liberia, $4,000 each.

THE TEXAS PACIFIC COMPROMISE.

THE TWO LOBBIES UNITED IN FAVOR OF THE COMPROMISE BILL—CONFIDENCE THAT THE MEASURE WILL PASS—EVERY MEMBER OF THE HOUSE TO BE URGED TO SUPPORT IT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—The Texas Pacific railroad scheme will be presently brought before the House and pushed with renewed energy. This time the two powerful lobbies, which have been for a long time arrayed against each other, will unite for the compromise bill, as the difficulties which separated them have been composed by C. P. Huntington and Tom Scott. Huntington and his company are to build the Pacific end of the line under the name of the Southern Pacific, and Scott will build the Texas Pacific line westward. Huntington will thus continue to hold the lines of communication with California by controling the Pacific end of them all. The guarantee of bonds and the extent to which the credit of the Government will be involved have been frequently explained in THE TIMES. The hope of the managers now is to take advantage of the lull in political discussion to push the bill quickly through the House. There are the following encouraging conditions for their attempt: A good many members end their career in Congress and politics with this Congress. They are supposed to be, and experience shows that this class generally are, less careful of their reputations than other members. Then there are those elected for two years longer, and they may be persuaded to trust to time to cover up their votes in this session. Besides the political excitement is such that it is supposed a lobby can work with less than the usual prospects of observation. Some of the same people who were here when the last great effort was made to pass the bill are already on hand, and in a day or two every member of the House will be taken in hand by some personal friend and enthusiastic advocate of the Railroad bill. The belief is general that the bill will not pass the House, but the railroad people may have assurances that others know nothing of. The bill will now find no parliamentary obstacle to getting before the House, and can be passed by a bare majority. It will not be treated at all on either side as a party measure, but will, nevertheless, receive its principal support from the Democrats.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

The House Sub-Committee, in charge of the various bills concerning the Texas Pacific Railroad, held meetings last night and this morning. They expect to submit their report to the full committee to-morrow, until which time the committee adjourned, after discussing, without action, the bill to extend the time for the completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad. It is generally believed that the sub-committee will so arrange the details of the proposed compromise in the Texas Pacific bill as to make it satisfactory to San Diego interests, and all others that have heretofore supported either the Scott or Huntington propositions, but no more positive statement can yet be made upon authority.

THE ASTORIA ROBBERY.

TWO OF THE THIEVES ARRESTED IN THIS CITY—A PORTION OF THE STOLEN PROPERTY FOUND IN THEIR POSSESSION.

On Saturday night, Dec. 23, 1876, there were a number of burglaries committed at Astoria, which for boldness and daring compared with the exploits of Dick Turpin and other heroes of the highway. The occurrence is of such recent date, and the story was so fully told at the time, that it will be unnecessary to give more than a brief outline. Between 11 and 12 o'clock on the night mentioned, a boat containing five men approached the Astoria shore, and two hours later four masked men entered the residence of Mr. William H. Green, and by threatening to take his life they managed to steal everything of pecuniary value on the premises. The residence of Mrs M. L. Miller, on Vernen avenue, was entered on the same night by the same party, and also despoiled of its chief valuables, amounting to about $2,000. The exploits of this band of ruffians included highway robbery as well, and meeting William Woods, a butler in the employ of Edward Woolsey, they robbed him of his pocket-book and his outer clothing.

On New Year's Day Capt. Murray, of the Fourth Precinct, obtained a clue, which, though slight, led to the apprehension of the robbers. A gold pencil, which was identified by Mrs. Green as her property, was found in the possession of a man whose name is withheld for the present, and was traced to James, alias "Fatty," Farrel, a notorious river thief. Capt. Murray and Detective Carr went to Brooklyn on Wednesday and obtained the co-operation of Chief of Police Campbell, who detailed two detectives from the Brooklyn Central Office to aid Capt. Murray. A warrant to search the house of "Jack," Roberts, the proprietor of a notorious thieves' den at No. 99 James street, at whose residence "Fatty" Farrel was known to be stopping, was obtained from Judge Walsh, of Brooklyn, and on Wednesday night the officers surrounded the house, which is near Green-Wood Cemetery. After a thorough search they failed to find anything which would implicate Roberts or Farrel in the robbery. Four detectives were detailed to guard the house and to allow none of the inmates to communicate with any one outside. The Captain and Detective Carr immediately returned to this City, and arrested Jack Roberts at his place in James street. The officers next went to a liquor saloon kept by a man named McGuire, and there found Jeremiah McCarty and James Reilly, alias "Juggy." The Captain attempted to arrest McCarty, but he escaped through a window, and fled through Water into Roosevelt street. He was pursued by the Captain, who finally arrested him in the rear yard of a house in Roosevelt street. When Detective Carr attempted to arrest Reilly he showed fight, but was reduced to terms by the detective. On searching the two men in the station-house two pocket-knives which were subsequently identified by Mr. Hiller as part of the property stolen from his house, were found on Reilly's person. A meerschaum cigar-holder, which was also identified by Mr. Hiller, as the property of one of his sons, was found in one of McCarty's pockets. Capt Murray again went out, and together with the detective, watched Roberts' place in James street, which has entrances communicating with both James and Roosevelt streets. Their vigilance was soon rewarded by seeing "Fatty" Farrel come along Roosevelt street and enter Roberts' den. No sooner had he entered than the barkeeper whispered to him, and he immediately walked rapidly out of the James street entrance, when he was arrested by Officer Meakam, of the Fourth Precinct. Farrel made a desperate effort to escape, and drawing a large navy revolver placed it against the officer's breast, at the same time saying, "If you don't let me go, I'll shoot you." Capt. Murray and Detective Carr came to the officer's aid and soon subdued Farrel.

ACCIDENT ON THE GRAND TRUNK.

PORTLAND, Jan. 4.—The Montreal express train on the Grand Trunk Railway, due here at noon, was thrown from the track near Gilead, 90 miles from here, by the engine striking a heavy snow bank. The entire train, consisting of an engine, baggage, express, smoking car, and one passenger car, went over an embankment 15 feet high. N. B. Mitchell, the fireman, is believed to be fatally injured. James Doyle, the engineer, Frank Roes baggage master, R. E. Larrabee, brakeman, and Mr. Small, agent of the Canadian Express Company, are all more or less hurt. The passengers were terribly shaken up, but none are reported as injured. Assistance was telegraphed for, and trains have gone thither, so that the passengers and the wounded will probably reach here to-night.

CORNELIUS VANDERBILT.

A LONG AND USEFUL LIFE ENDED.

THE RENOWNED COMMODORE DIES AFTER EIGHT MONTHS' ILLNESS—HIS REMARKABLE CAREER AS A MAN OF THE WORLD—HIS WEALTH ESTIMATED AT $100,000,000—PARTICULARS OF HIS ILLNESS AND DEATH.

Commodore Vanderbilt died at his residence, No. 10 Washington place, yesterday morning, after having been confined to his rooms for about eight months. The immediate cause of his death was exhaustion, brought on by long suffering from a complication of chronic disorders. He was surrounded by his family and friends and his attendant physicians, and received religious consolation until the last moment from his friend and Pastor, Rev. Dr. Deems, of the Church of the Strangers. Although the family had been convinced for months that the Commodore could not long withstand the attacks of the maladies with which he was afflicted, his death yesterday took them by surprise. Only the evening before he had been moved from his bed-chamber to his sitting-room, and there reclining in his large wheeled chair, he had passed the time until 10 o'clock in chatting pleasantly with his family and one or two intimate friends. His son, Mr. William H. Vanderbilt, who spent part of the evening with him, apprehended no immediate danger, and returned to his home shortly before his father's bed-time. Even his physicians had no apprehensions of any sudden change, although they had noted that their patient had been rapidly growing weaker during the past few days. About 2 o'clock A. M. a change for the worse took place, and at 4 o'clock he was decidedly weaker and failing rapidly. Shortly after daylight his family were summoned to his bedside to bid him farewell. He was too weak to say much, but expressed much gratification at having them around him, and after they had been with him a short time requested them to join in singing his favorite hymns. Prayer was then offered, in which he tried to join, and shortly afterward, gradually becoming weaker and weaker, he quietly passed away without a struggle. His death, which had been long expected in financial circles, had little or no effect on the stock market, although the announcement of it created a decided impression throughout the City. It is estimated that Commodore Vanderbilt left property to the amount of $100,000,000, principally in shares of the New-York Central and Hudson River Road and other railway corporations; but, although it is known that he left a will, it is not known how he has disposed of his wealth. The funeral services will take place at the Church of the Strangers on Sunday at 10:30 A. M., and the remains will then be carried to Staten Island and deposited in the family vault in the Moravian churchyard, near New-Dorp.

THE SCENE IN THE SICK ROOM.

THE COMMODORE DIES SURROUNDED BY HIS FAMILY AND FRIENDS—HE RECEIVES RELIGIOUS CONSOLATION FROM HIS PASTOR—HIS LAST WORDS, "THAT WAS A GOOD PRAYER."

On Wednesday afternoon Commodore Vanderbilt seemed to be rather better than usual, and in the evening was placed in his rolling chair and taken to his sitting-room. There he conversed pleasantly with his family and his friend Mr. William Turnbull, and also with his son, William H. Vanderbilt, who called later in the evening. At 10 o'clock he retired for the night, but at 2 A. M. he became suddenly worse, and died of exhaustion at a few minutes before 11 o'clock yesterday morning. A gentleman who was present when he died, and who has spent much time with him during his illness, gave a TIMES reporter the following account of the Commodore's last hours. He said that on Thursday last it seemed to him that he was entering upon death as he had never done before. He had been in a constant state of weakness for the last month, with one or two periods of rallying. On Wednesday evening he saw one or two of his friends, with whom he talked cheerfully until nearly 10 o'clock, and it was thought by those who were with him that he was brighter than he was in the morning. After the company went away he conversed with Mrs. Vanderbilt upon religious subjects very earnestly. His faith seemed very great, and he expressed himself deliberately and decidedly. Among other things he said: "No, I shall never cease to trust Jesus. How could I ever let that go?" He spoke also of his consciousness of his ignorance in regard to spiritual things—for instance, the existence and operations of the Holy Ghost: but he said that his ignorance did not stand in the way of his faith. He said he read the Bible, and tried to understand it as well as he could, and whatever it said he firmly believed. About 9 A. M. a change came again and at 4 he had grown much weaker. Later in the morning his children and Pastor were sent for. Dr. Deems arrived about 9 o'clock and his family arrived a little after. Among those who came, and who were all in the room when the final scene occurred, were Mr. and Mrs. William H. Vanderbilt and their son W. K. Vanderbilt; Mrs. D. B. Allen, Mrs. George A. Osgood, Mrs. N. B. Laban, daughters of the Commodore; Mr. and Mrs. Cross, and Mr. and Mrs. Parrance, sons-in-law and daughters; Mr. Elliot F. Shepherd, son-in-law of Mr. William H. Vanderbilt; Mr. C. V. Deforest; Mr. Samuel Barton, nephews, and Mr. E. D. Worcester, of the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad. Mrs. Crawford, Mrs. Vanderbilt's mother, and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Crawford were also present. The Commodore found great difficulty in speaking, and could make but few utterances during the last hours of his life. He took interest in passages of Scripture repeated from time to time, and upon one of the ladies making a suggestion in regard to singing, he misunderstood her, and made no sign of assent. A little later he turned to his wife and said: "I thought you would sing." A few of his favorite hymns were then sung, with pauses between. The first hymn sung was "Show pity Lord, oh Lord forgive;" and the next "Nearer, my God, to Thee." He showed great interest in the singing, and even attempted, with his hoarse voice, to join in a hymn which always interested him. It was the one beginning with the words "Come ye sinners, poor and needy." Before he was so low, whenever that hymn was sung he invariably tried to join in it, generally adding at the close: "I am poor, I am needy, weak and wounded, sick and sore." Dr. Deems proposed prayer, to which he seemed gladly to accede. At that time it looked as though his strength was failing so rapidly that very soon he would not be able to expectorate, so that the friends about him anticipated a struggle at the last. Among other things the Pastor prayed that God would be pleased in His mercy to vouchsafe unto the sufferer an easy departure, out of his great pain, into everlasting life. The Commodore evidently followed the whole prayer, and when it was closed with the benediction, he repeated with the minister the words: "The blessing of God Almighty—the Father—Son, and the Holy Ghost," and his voice then failed him. He afterward attempted to speak several times, but could not articulate with sufficient clearness to make himself understood. After the lapse of some time, he turned to his wife, who was sitting beside him, and his mind seemed to recur to the prayer that had been offered, and he said: "That was a good prayer." These were the last words he uttered. Mrs. Vanderbilt replied: "Yes, because it expressed just your sentiments now." He could not speak, but nodded assent. Then the obstruction in his throat apparently ceased to be so painful, and he closed his mouth for a few minutes, as he had been seen to do by his friends when thinking closely. His eyes brightened, and then his mouth opened, after which, closing his eyes, he breathed quickly a few times and expired at 10:51 A. M.

When it was known that he had ceased to exist deep sobs were heard throughout the room. Mrs. Vanderbilt was very deeply affected, as were many of those around here. The grief of the family and friends was shared by the two faithful female nurses who had been in attendance on the Commodore for many days and nights during his illness, and the two old servants of the family were also much affected. Miss Phebe Vanderbilt, the Commodore's sister, and Capt. Jacob Vanderbilt, of Staten Island, were not in the house when he died. They were detained on Staten Island by the illness of Mrs. Egbert, a widowed sister of the Commodore, 84 years of age, and now lying at the point of death.

COMMODORE VANDERBILT'S LIFE.

Cornelius Vanderbilt was born on the 27th day of May, in the year 1794, on a farm on Staten Island. His father was a well-to-do agriculturist, not possessed of any considerable fortune, indeed, but owing no debts and owning his land. The produce of the farm was sent to the New-York markets in a periagua daily, and the young Cornelius took especial delight in navigating this craft, which has now disappeared from our waters. He very much preferred sailing the periagua to going to school, and it cannot be doubted that among the Knickerbockers of those days this was a subject of commendation rather than of disparaise. He worked also on the farm, and studied in the Winter days, but never showed much love of literature, nor did he gain more knowledge than is furnished by the three Rs of the New-York Alderman. He was a faithful worker on the farm, however, and could plow and plant corn with the best. But his delight was on the sea, and while he was a mere boy he was acknowledged to be the most fearless sailor and the steadiest helmsman on the bay. All his thoughts and instincts were bent in that direction, and that he was a good farm hand was due not to any liking for the work, but to his love for his mother and his obedience as a son. His one dream was of having a periagua of his own, and sailing it as a ferry-boat between Staten Island and New-York. In those times there was no up-town region, for the business part of the City was in Hanover square and Pearl street; the Battery was a delightful park, and the strand was just being turned into State street, then the most fashionable locality of the City. When Cornelius Vanderbilt became sixteen years of age he bargained with his mother that he would plow eight acres of the farm and plant it with corn if she would give him $100 for the purchase of a boat. It is unnecessary to say that only a mother would have given such a sum for the work, but perhaps her object in the arrangement was to teach him not to neglect the occupation of husbandry, which in those days afforded a sure reward of rude comfort and domestic plenty. But from the time that he owned this periagua it may be doubted if he ever again took hold of the plow. His hand had closed firmly upon the tiller which for the next half century was to be to him a veritable sceptre.

From the 27th of May, 1810, it may be considered that Cornelius Vanderbilt put away childish things and became a man, earning his own livelihood and able to take his own part in the affairs of the world. He was but sixteen, but he had no difficulty in obtaining passengers for his ferry-boat, especially, it may be presumed, among the fairer portion of the Staten Islanders. For the young man was tall, vigorous, broad of shoulder, bright of eye, possessed of a complexion that any belle might envy, and having a very sweet and engaging smile, which all the cares of a very extraordinary and busy life never effaced from his countenance. There was plenty of occupation for him, for the times favored his business. Staten Island was divided into large estates, farmed by aristocratic families, whose scions repaired to the Battery just as naturally as the denizens of the avenues crowd to Central Park now, or the drivers of fast horses haunt the boulevards and St. Nicholas avenue. There were also continual interchangings of courtesies and visitings between the high-toned inhabitants of State street and of Broadway, which, as a street, hardly reached then to Trinity Church, although there were magnificent villas along its line up to the creek that ran through Madison square. The life and soul of the place was the Battery, and those who were not afraid of angry skies and swelling waves among the islanders used invariably to take the periagua of young Vanderbilt for their daily trip to New-York, for he was known far and near as the bravest and boldest pilot that ever handled a boat. And besides the genteel business, he had other sources of revenue, for England, plunged in the Napoleonic war, was furious with the services which America, as a neutral State, was able to perform for the French Emperor, and it was obvious that a war must sooner or later settle the power of a neutral flag to protect a cargo. The Government of the United States was in the hands of resolute men, who were resolved to maintain so important a commercial principle, nor were they terrified by the vauntings of the conquerors of Trafalgar, though it was evident that the war would be entirely a naval affair. Forts were being built on different parts of the bay and on Staten Island, and in the transportation of material Cornelius Vanderbilt was so fair and moderate in his prestensions as to obtain the greater share of the business. Not only did his periagua find constant occupation, but he purchased interests in other boats, and chartered more, so that when the war broke out, in 1812, he was quite a thriving man, and even then a personage in his own peculiar line. Young Cornele, as everybody called him, was the first person thought of when anything very dangerous or very disagreeable had to be done. When the winds were high, and the sight was blinded with driving sleet and snow, and the waves raged like angry wolves, it an important message had to be sent from the forts to the head-quarters in the City, young Cornele was sent for. When the British fleet tried to force their way past Sandy Hook to lay New-York in ashes, as the Admiral kindly promised, the forts on Sandy Hook beat them off. A fearful storm was raging, but it was absolutely necessary to notify the commanding officer in the City of the attempt and its repulse, and to obtain reinforcements and fresh supplies in case of a renewal. A messenger was sent for the only man who could take a boat through the raging waters to the Battery slip. When Cornele Vanderbilt made his appearance the staff officer asked anxiously if a boat could live in such a sea. "Yes," said Cornelius, laconically, but firmly, "if properly handled." "Will you take us to the Battery?" was the next question. "I will," replied the young man, "but you will be under water half the time." He landed them in safety at the stairs, but they were like drowned rats, and such had been the fury of the winds and waters and the incessant movements of the boat, that one of them declared he had not had time to draw one full breath.

In his carrying business he was so successful and made so much money that he thought of starting a home for himself. Regularly from the hour he commenced ferrying with his periagua-boat, he handed over his earnings to his mother, whose love for him and pride in him he repaid with the most perfect devotion. He married, in December, 1813, Miss Sophia Johnson, of Fort Richmond, Staten Island, being then nineteen years and six months old, and expanded his transactions, as if the consciousness that he had given hostages to fortune in the shape of a young, beloved wife had spurred him to increased boldness. He obtained from the Government, in the Spring of 1814, a contract for the transportation of provisions to all the forts in the bay for three months, and this entailed upon him the most extraordinary labors. For he was determined not to give up his ferriage, which was exceedingly profitable, so he carried the provisions in the night time. There were six forts, each of which received its provisions once a week, so that during these three months his only night of unbroken rest was on Sunday. But the profits of these nights were large and enabled him to build a beautiful little schooner for the coasting trade, which he called the Dorad, because he saw in it the El Dorado of future fortune. He was, however, not given to long-tailed words, so he shortened it down to Dorad. Out of this he coined money, and in the following year, in 1815, he built a very large schooner, called the Charlotte, which plied between New-York and the Carolinas, under the command of himself or his wife's sister's husband, a Mr. De Forrest.

the walk, and transferred his boats to the Sound. But when, as the time went by, the traffic increased, Drew united Vanderbilt with himself in the Sound traffic, which then began to assume very great proportions. Without acknowledged rivals, and with warm support from capitalists engaged in developing inland steam navigation, Vanderbilt built so many magnificent steamers that the public christened him by acclamation the Commodore, just as the soldiers of the First Napoleon had nicknamed him the Little Corporal. His boats were faster and better, they were more comfortable for passengers, and more commodious for freight than any which had hitherto been seen. Moreover he ran them at the lowest paying rates, being satisfied that by so doing he invited travel, while an opposite course would repel it. These things will seem trifles to the present generation, who, accustomed to see steam-boats built upon the Vanderbilt model and run in accordance with his idea, have no conception of the state of things which existed before his time. To understand how potent was the impulse which he gave, it is necessary to travel in other lands, on Rhine steamers and English river boats, where the influence of Commodore Vanderbilt was never felt, and which have never left the grooves of ordinary constructors. Here, where the influence was early given, it still survives, and the men who build in accordance with his principles obtain credit for enterprise and sound sense which by right should be shared with him. His one foible of opposition was an immense boon to the public, for wherever his keen eyes detected a monopoly he pounced down upon the offenders and literally drove them from the rivers. Nor did he, when he had vanquished them, establish a monopoly of his own. His principle of low rates, founded upon acute reasoning, was never violated, so that in every way the public were the gainers. And he was now confessedly a power in the carrying business, and men quoted the opinion of the Commodore as something that stilled argument and carried conviction.

It was impossible that such a man should remain inactive during the California gold fever, which gave such a stimulus to every form of industry. The Pacific Mail Steam-ship Company began to run its steamers in 1848, and in the following year the Panama Railroad was surveyed and commenced. Commodore Vanderbilt, having reasoned out the matter in that quiet way which says less than it knows, convinced himself that the Nicaraguan Isthmus was the true route to California. He the same year obtained a charter from the Nicaraguan Government for a ship-canal and transit company. The former grant fell into abeyance, but the latter was immediately utilized. He built a fine steamer, the Prometheus, and sailed down to Nicaragua, exploring the channel of the San Juan del Norte, and the lake beyond, and finally fixing upon San Juan del Sur as the port on the Pacific side. Part of the route was by staging, and in fact the arrangement which he established was curiously similar to the old Gibbons route between New-York and Philadelphia. In July, 1851, the new line was formally opened, and such were its intrinsic advantages and so great the reputation of the Commodore, that it at once leaped into public favor and became a formidable rival of the Panama route. It was, indeed, the shortest, the cheapest, and by far the healthiest way to the golden lands; nor can it be doubted that in the future it will be the route as soon as a man of enterprise comes to the front, or opportunities of enterprise return to the country. But during the time that Commodore Vanderbilt was connected with it it was exceedingly successful, and he reaped from it very great profits. He was now, however, so very wealthy that he determined to take a long rest. So he sold to the Nicaragua Transit Company, which he had formed, all his vessels and interest in the route, and building himself a palatial yacht of 2,000 tons, called the North Star, he started on a long cruise in the European seas with all his family.

This consisted at that time, May, 1853, of fourteen persons—himself, his wife, and twelve children. The eldest was a girl, Phœbe Jane, now Mrs. Cross, whose husband was a Captain on one of the Commodore's Pacific steamers; the second was another girl, Ethelinda, now Mrs. D. B. Allen, whose husband is a very wealthy retired merchant; the third was William H. Vanderbilt, to whom his father had given a superb education at an agricultural college, and had settled on a large farm on Staten Island; the fourth was also a girl, Emily, the wife of Mr. W. K. Thorne, a gentleman of great wealth; the fifth was another daughter, Eliza, wife of Mr. Osgood, the broker; the sixth was still another daughter, Sophia, wife of Daniel Torrance, a wealthy merchant of a leading Montreal family; the seventh was another daughter, Maria Louisa, who married Horace G. Clark; the eighth was a son, Francis, who died at the age of forty; the ninth was another son, Cornelius, still living, and who has not imitated the civic virtues of his father or his brother; the tenth was a daughter, Maria Electa, who married Nicholas La Bau; the eleventh was another daughter, who married Capt. Barker, became a widow, and in second espousals married M. Lafitte, of Paris; and the twelfth was George, who graduated with distinction at West Point, and served most creditably in the Army of the Union during the slaveholders' rebellion, where he contracted the seeds of disease of the lungs, of which he died at Nice.

The magnificent steam-ship which he modestly called his yacht excited admiration at every port where he touched, but the man himself excited more. The discovery of gold in America had turned the attention of the world more strongly toward that peculiar land in the West where a republican form of government had succeeded in maintaining itself in spite of the predictions of political prophets and the reasoning of philosophers. Here was a specimen of American production in the steamer North Star, and in its Captain, planner, builder, and owner was a still more interesting specimen of what republican institutions could develop. The English people who met him were delighted with him, and showered attentions upon him and his family. He was banqueted and complimented in every place that he visited, and as John Bull and the Russian bear were eyeing each other in a most menacing way prior to the declaration of hostilities in 1854, it is almost unnecessary to say that every attention which had been shown him in England was doubled and trebled in the Russian ports. There was a difference, however, and an extreme one. In England it was the people alone that honored the great American in every way that suggested itself to their ardent admiration. But in Russia it was the people and the Government. The Grand Duke Constantine, second son of the Emperor Nicholas, accompanied by the Admiral in Chief of the Russian Navy, visited the North Star repeatedly, and the latter obtained drawings of the walking-beam engine, which very much surprised him. In Constantinople the Pashas of Sultan Abdul Medjid were still more profuse in their expressions of esteem and regard, for they were well aware that the Russians were going to attack them, and they looked upon this country as a neutral land that might be exceedingly useful in case of prolonged naval hostilities. But what surprised all the people of Europe was that this man represented nothing in the way of official dignities. He was simply a great ship-owner sailing in his yacht for his own pleasure, accompanied by his family. It was difficult to make this believed anywhere, but utterly impossible in the Italian ports of Austria. They could not believe it. They took the vessel to be the forerunner of some dreadful attack in the name of liberty. When the Vanderbilts took their walks abroad in Leghorn, they had the honor of being escorted by a military officer, for fear of accidents, and a crowd of ununiformed sbirri hovered about them. It was a wonder that they were not arrested, but the fear of American indignation was greater then than now, and no such incident took place. The North Star was, however, placed under the most rigorous surveillance, and armed launches with loaded howitzers, patroled ceaselessly around her. This rather detracted from their enjoyment of sunny Italy, which was then, however, under a black cloud, and they were delighted to exchange the Austrian ports for the English ones of Malta and Gibraltar, where they were most flatteringly received. In fact, the English people were delighted to see a man like Vanderbilt, possessed of an ample fortune, taking his pleasure on the high seas and steering his great ship into port just as an English gentleman would do his yachting schooner.

When the Commodore returned he was met with the intelligence that the British Government had withdrawn the Cunard steamers from the Anglo-American mail service. There were in those days four steamers only per month, which sailed every Saturday. Two of these were English, belonging to the Cunard line, and two were American, belonging to the Collins line. The English paid their steamers $16,000 for carrying the mail each voyage, and Congress paid the Collins Company $33,000 for the same service. The Cunard steamers were withdrawn by England to be used as transports for troops, that country having resolved on the invasion of the Crimea. Commodore Vanderbilt immediately made an offer to Congress to fill up the vacancy left by the retirement of the Cunarders, and carry the mail for the same sum which the British Government had given. The Collins Line and its backers rose up in arms. It was not denied that one steamer per fortnight was entirely insufficient, but the proposal to save the Government so much money naturally roused the ire of those who were receiving so much more for the same service. Collins sailed upon the Commodore, and offered to back his proposal with all his Congressional influence if he would ask for the same remuneration from the Postmaster General that he himself was receiving. "For," said Collins, "you cannot possibly do it for less. Why, I'm not making any money by my steamers, as all the world knows." "No," said Vanderbilt. "I'm patriotic in the matter. If an Englishman can do it for $16,000 I'm sure I can, and I won't admit that a Britisher can beat us in anything." "That is not business, Vanderbilt," remonstrated the subsidy man. "I can't make it pay as it is." "Then," retorted Vanderbilt coldly, "you've got into a business that you don't understand. Let me have the opportunity, and I'll make it pay." The interview was at an end, and the subsidy party resolved to show the Commodore that if they were not a match for him in conducting a steamer line, they were in Congressional tactics. The session of 1854 dragged out, and nothing was accomplished. At the commencement of the next session the Commodore laid another proposal before Congress, which was to establish a line of steamers between New-York and Havre, to carry the mails for $19,750 the round trip, and to beat the Collins boats twenty-four hours every trip or forfeit payment. He could not secure the contracts, however, in spite of this offer, but by his letters on subsidies he convinced Gen. Pierce, then President, that they were wrong in theory and rotten in practice, whereupon the President vetoed the Collins subsidy. Then arose a cry to heaven, and many papers gravely asserted that the arrogant Vanderbilt had bribed the President with a sum of $50,000 to do this thing. The Commodore wrote in answer an open letter to the President, which was published in pamphlet form and distributed by myriads, in which he conclusively disposed of the lie, and added a few more hard hits at the subsidy system.

Occupation always comes to a man that loves it, and while his contract was hanging fire in the Congressional committee rooms he found himself engaged in trouble with the Nicaragua Transit Company. The gentlemen who had the controlling interest having, like Jeshurun, waxed fat, like that nation also began to kick and refused to fulfill their engagements. The Commodore wrote them a note of tremendous brevity, which ran: "Gentlemen, you have undertaken to cheat me. I won't sue you, for law is too slow. I'll ruin you. Yours truly, Cornelius Vanderbilt." In a few months he had organized another fleet and commenced an opposition line on the same road, and was fast redeeming his word when Walker burst upon the place, and, having established himself as ruler, annulled all contracts and stopped all traffic. This he did to be avenged on Vanderbilt, who had very curtly refused to help his enterprise in any way, or to allow any of his men or stores to be conveyed on his steamers. When the gray-eyed man of Destiny had been removed from the scene by shooting, and the agents of Vanderbilt resumed operations, it was found that the harbor on the Pacific side, San Juan del Sur, had become choked either by intention or accident, and the route was now impracticable, and was therefore transferred to Chagres. But the original transit line was irretrievably bankrupted and annihilated. In the California shipping business the Commodore remained for nine years more, making plenty of money, but not satisfied. He used to say that things were all right on the Atlantic side, but very unsatisfactory on the California half. "For," said he, "the swindling in the business of supplying steamers is outrageous. If my Captain is a smart man he cheats me, and if he is a dull man the dealers cheat him, so that in any event there is a swindling drawback." But in spite of this he continued in the traffic until 1864.

Long before that time, however, he had turned his attention to the subject of Atlantic steamers. The Government did not give him the mails, but he avenged himself by creating a New-York and Havre Line, which was fitted with the fastest steamers that had ever been seen. In this line were the Ariel, the Harvest Queen, and the never-to-be-forgotten Vanderbilt. This last was built in 1860 at a cost of $900,000 in gold, and it had a tonnage of 5,000 register. It was the pride of his heart, the idolized result of his matured knowledge of ship-building, and it answered all the expectations that he had formed of it. For there was intense emulation excited among the rival lines, the Cunard and the Collins, but the Vanderbilt beat them all, and made incredibly short passages. The war of the slaveholders' rebellion broke out shortly afterward, and instead of ruining everybody, as was supposed, it gave an intensely febrile activity to every form of production and every effort of enterprise. But the unerring brain of the Commodore saw that it would end in taking from the reluctant hand of Columbia the sceptre of the ocean, and would give to Great Britain the carrying trade of the world. Yet the decline of American shipping was invisible to all but him, for just as the setting sun is larger in appearance and more splendid in color than the same orb at its meridian height, so did our carrying business seem more prosperous and destined to greater triumphs for the last few years before it disappeared. And his tireless brain was now taxed to consider these things, and to discover what form of enterprise was the most capable of development. But while he slowly matured his views for leaving the shipping business and accepting new tolls and new responsibilities, the exigencies of war sought him out and brought him as a chosen counselor to the President of the nation. The Merrimac iron ram of the Confederates, coming out of its shelter at Richmond, had sunk the Cumberland and wrought such havoc with the Union fleet as filled loyal men's hearts with gloom. The triumphant career of the ram had been stayed by the Monitor, but naval men were of opinion that this had been a lucky hit and might not occur a second time. The President had consulted with Secretary Stanton, and they both had talked with naval men. The latter were unanimous upon the point that if the ram could be fought and smashed there was but one man that could do it, and his name was Cornelius Vanderbilt.

To this man came a telegram asking for his presence in Washington. He came to the house of the Secretary of War, and was greeted with enthusiasm. "Will you," said Stanton, "see the President?" "Certainly," was the reply, and to the President's presence the pair went. "Now," said Mr. Lincoln, "can you stop that rebel ram, and for how much money will you do it?" He answered, "I think I can, Mr. President, but I won't do it for money. I do not want the people of this country to look upon me as one who would trade upon her necessities and make blood-money out of her wounds." Mr. Lincoln shook his head, and evidently thought that the Commodore was a Confederate sympathiser, for he said: "What's the use of further talking! You won't do anything for us, I see." Vanderbilt said: "I don't know about that, Mr. President. I place myself and all my resources at your disposition without pay, and I believe I can protect the fleet and prevent the Merrimac from passing Old Point Comfort. I have a ship which I give to you for this purpose. You will place a crew on it, and fit it up for sailing as your expense, and I will take charge of it. Only let me be free from the control of your Navy Department, and I'll answer for it that the Merrimac won't pass Old Point Comfort." Joyfully the patriotic proposal was accepted, and in thirty-six hours the Vanderbilt, with the Commodore in command was at its station in Hampton Roads. The officer in charge of the fleet sent a boat asking to see the veteran, who was at that time more than sixty-eight years of age, and Commodore Vanderbilt went on board the flag-ship. His reputation as a skillful pilot was known to every one, and when he said that he would run down the Merrimac as a hound runs down a wolf, and, striking her amidships, would send her to the bottom, they all believed that he would do it, and looked admiringly at his huge steamer, the shadow of whose black hull loomed upon the water like the reflection of a great cloud. "How can we help you?" said the chief officer. "Only by keeping severely out of my way when I am hunting the critter," was the amusing response, at which every one laughed. But the coursing match never came off, for the spies who swarmed about the Federal council carried the story to Richmond, and when the Merrimac had repaired damages from her brush with the Monitor, her Captain, who had been in Vanderbilt's employ, and knew his antagonist, declined to come out from his hiding-place. Nor did the Confederates ever dare again to send her up the Roads. But the idea of the Commodore bore fruit, and when the gallant Farragut stormed the forts and rebel fleet at Mobile the frigates put the ram Tennessee hors du combat in the manner that he had proposed. Everybody knows the story, and how the wooden frigates battled against the mail-clad ram so fiercely that the seamen could not keep their feet and had to surrender, being knocked senseless by the incessant concussions.

Although the brave old gentleman could not remain long at the station, he left behind him a Captain possessed with his ideas and trained in his school. When the pirate Alabama commenced her ravages the Vanderbilt steamer was dispatched in quest of her, and hunted her for more than a twelvemonth. Then the magnificent engines and boilers, by such a strain, were rendered momentarily unserviceable, and they were taken out and the vessel sold to a firm in the grain business, who called it the Three Brothers. (It is in active use to the present hour.) The reward of the Commodore for his patriotism was the Congressional vote of a large gold medal and a series of complimentary resolutions. This was well enough for what he had personally done—for the services he had rendered and the counsel he had given. But it must strike the impartial mind that it was rather an inadequate return for his magnificent steamer, which had only been given for a purpose, and when that purpose had been accomplished ought certainly to have been returned to him. When the medal was voted, which was in January, 1864, some months before the destruction of the pirate by the Kearsarge, the value of the Vanderbilt must have been more than one million and a half in currency. Mr. Vanderbilt had his medal, and could say when he looked upon it, "This is all I received in exchange for the finest steamer that was ever launched."

This transaction certainly did not place any restraint upon his previously-arranged determination to withdraw from the steamer business altogether. He arranged with Messrs. Allen, C. K. Garrison, and Wheeler, that they should buy his steamers for three millions, one million down, the remainder in amounts as the ships earned them. In eighteen months they had wiped out the indebtedness, the Commodore had his three millions and the firm the steamers. While this business was being carried to a successful close the Commodore took a little turn in Wall street. It was his seventieth year, and his long, useful, and patriotic life had been passed among ships and steamers, but the reasoning of his brain had shown him that the day was done for the carrying trade and that the night was at hand. He began to acquire stock in Harlem, and quietly bought up all the shorts which the bears, Drew and others, were selling freely. The shares were ranging from eight to sixteen at that time, and as the amount of the total stock was not large, the great operators sold very much more than existed. When settling day came there was a dreadful yell from the gentlemen who wanted to cover their shorts, for all the stock in the market was in the hands of the old Commodore, to whom they had sold it. Drew was squeezed to the amount of a round million, and the rest in proportion. The Wall street men said, "Another king has come to reign over us," but the overwise ones shook their heads. They muttered about his being loaded up with unprofitable stock, and said he could never get rid of it. But he did not want to get rid of it. He had bought the stock to keep. Assuming the management he dismissed incapable and dishonest officers, introduced reforms, checked expenditures, and in an incredibly short time made the road a paying institution, a sound investment security. Then he went in for Hudson River, which was going for about 25. It had never paid, and was a foot-ball for the street. Everybody sneered at it, and John Tobin, a heavy dealer, sold him an enormous amount of the stock in one transaction. There was no secrecy about his dealings in Hudson River shares. He bought everything in the open market, and acquired a majority of the shares without the least concealment. Nobody understood the man. He was seventy-one years of age, but hale and hearty as a youngster of twenty. The world accepted him as the greatest steam-boat man that ever lived, but they did not comprehend that he was great at everything. And yet no one can reproach their blindness, for it was according to the dictates of common sense to believe that a man who was so superlatively superior in one line would not be able, when past the ordinary extent of life, to acquire all the details of a totally different calling. But the man was an extraordinary man, not to be judged by ordinary rules or average mental measuring rods, and those who applied them were woefully mistaken in their reckoning.

When he had Hudson River within his grasp he applied the same remedies to it as to Harlem, and very quickly the road was all right, and earning a dividend. It would have earned more, but the New-York Central, running from Albany to Buffalo, fought against it, and threw all its weight in favor of the Albany boats, owned by Daniel Drew. The fact is, that though Henry Keep, of New-York, was the President, the line was in the hands of an Albany clique, of whom Dean Richmond was the chief. Commodore Vanderbilt wanted to know whether there was to be peace or war between the two roads. Mr. Keep said peace, and there was peace during the Winter time, when the boats could not run; but as soon as the river was open Dean Richmond said war, and the freight of the New-York Central went to the boats as usual. Once only this trick was played, for the next Winter the stern mandate went from the lips of the Commodore, "Take no freight from the New-York Central." He was inexorable as fate itself, and as immovable as he had been when, at the helm of the Vanderbilt, he had vainly waited for the appearance of the Merrimac at Point Comfort. The stock of New-York Central went down at a blow fifteen per cent, and the American public at last realized that this was a man of the real heroic grain, to whose leadership all could trust implicitly. Hudson stock kept rising, and the holders of Central murmured loudly. Finally Mr. Keep resigned, Mr. Baxter taking his place until the election, which was not until the 12th of November, in the year of grace 1867, and upon that morning Mr. Vanderbilt received the following letter:

NEW-YORK, Nov. 12, 1867.

C. Vanderbilt, Esq.:

DEAR SIR: The undersigned stockholders of the New-York Central Railroad Company are satisfied that a change in the administration of the company and a thorough reformation in the management of its affairs, would result in larger dividends to the stockholders, and greatly promote the interests of the public. They therefore request that you will receive their proxies for the coming election, and select such a Board of Directors as shall seem to you to be entitled to their confidence.

They hope that such an organization will be effected as shall secure to the company the aid of your great and acknowledged abilities. Yours respectfully,

EDWARD CUNARD,
JOHN J. ASTOR, Jr.
BERNARD V. HUTTON,
JOHN STEWARD,

and others representing over thirteen millions of the stock.

The election was held in due course, but there was no opposition to the Vanderbilt tickets, which represented moreover six millions of his own besides the above.

And now began a series of improvements in the railroad system of the City of New-York which fairly transformed it. Commencing with the consolidation of the Hudson River and Central, and the leasing of the long line of the Harlem, (extending to Chatham Four Corners,) Mr. Vanderbilt next projected the building of the Forty-second Street Depot, and in due order followed the introduction of steel rails, the laying of a quadruple track from one end of the line to the other, and the wonderful engineering feat of sinking the City part of the track and arching it over for the prevention of accidents, and the improvement of that fine district along Fourth avenue. The speed of the trains was so greatly increased that to go from New-York to Albany in four hours became a common occurrence, yet the distance is fully 150 miles. The price paid, too, was and is smaller than on any other line in the country, for all the year round fares are two cents per mile, which is the average rate of the cheap Summer excursions on other lines. The system of the four tracks, two exclusively for passenger traffic and two for freight, is so superior as to have given indefinitely expansive powers to the carrying of western productions. By this plan the freight trains can be run continuously like an endless chain, and can carry grain enough to load 200 vessels per day. By it also the safety of passenger travel has been brought to a maximum, and whenever an accident has taken place it has been by a combination of unforeseen circumstances impossible to foresee or to prevent. The depot at Forty-second street was in a great measure constructed according to the Commodore's own ideas, and the observant traveler will notice with surprise that the immense roof is supported upon trussed arches of iron, the one pregnant fact in the development of the use of iron in buildings. It is hard to realise that a man who had already lived far beyond the time allotted to mortals should still preserve such activity of brain as to be constantly accessible to new ideas. Here was a man who had made a life-long study of ship-building and the management of ships. At seventy years of age he saw clearly that America has lost the carrying trade of the world. He looked around him for something that may be improved and developed. He took the railroad system of his native State, put together the isolated pieces, rescued them from poverty and debt, and then created a scheme of improvements which places those railroads at the head of locomotive traffic in the universe. And these things he evolved out of a brain covered with the white hairs of more than eighty years. Nor was he in his eighty-third year less active. Little by little, and everything in its turn, the great plans of improvements were carried out, until the people who have been for a few years out of town can hardly recognise the old familiar things. Commodore Vanderbilt never stopped improving, but went on developing, maturing, and ripening his system, until death called him away from the scene where he had so long reigned without an equal.

In his private life the Commodore was always distinguished by three things—overwhelming affection for his family and his friends, hatred of ostentation, and love of solid comfort. He had lived for many years past in a great double brick house on Washington place, handsomely furnished, but without the least pretension. There are more gold and silver models of famous steam-boats in it than famous pictures, and indeed the fine arts are represented only by portraits. In the place of honor is a likeness of his mother, whom he cherished all his life with the fondest love. Opposite is a very fine portrait of his second wife, a very handsome and accomplished Southern lady, from Mobile, Ala., formerly a Miss Crawford. His first wife died in the early part of 1868, which left the Commodore alone in his big house, for all his children were married, and some of them had grandchildren even. So in the Fall of 1869 the house in Washington place received a new mistress, who has done its honors with much sweetness and grace. The master of the house was all his life surrounded by friends who repaid his affection by a love "this side idolatry," as Ben Jonson said of Shakespeare. Every day they called upon him, or drove with him along Eighth avenue and across Macomb's Dam to Sibbera's Clubhouse, on Jerome avenue. For Mr. Vanderbilt was a great admirer of trotting-horses, and his team, Plow Boy and Post Boy, have been considered the fastest in the country. Iron in opposition, he was in private life entirely governed by his affections, nor did age take from him the sweet-smiling look of his boyhood. Before his second marriage he used to play whist and Boston every night at the Manhattan Club, but latterly his friends have dropped in of evenings and played with him.

The eldest son, William H. Vanderbilt, will perhaps take his father's place as a railroad man, though to compare him with his father would be idle. But had his father never been known the son would certainly have been among the foremost men, for if he has not a creative and original genius, he has an immense power of absorbing details. He is as much master of the facts of every department as the chief of it, and he is a model of hard-working industry. No man possesses the technique of railroad management in as full a measure as he, and he is training up his sons in the same path. The elder son, Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., is Treasurer of the Harlem Road, and the second, William K. Vanderbilt, assists his father in his office. So the Vanderbilt lines will probably be managed by Vanderbilt actions for generations to come, to the great content of all interested. It is a fair prophecy that the line will not lose one cent by the death of Cornelius Vanderbilt, for the system which he created, and which his son William is now carrying out so thoroughly, will live long after him. And herein was displayed another proof of the transcendent powers of his genius, since he so vitalized the Vanderbilt lines and infused such energy into them that they will retain the effects for fifty years to come. That he did this in steam-boats is notorious, for though he left the business long ago, the impetus of his energy survives, and the stamp of his building genius is on every boat that leaves the slips.

THE MAN AS HIS PASTOR KNEW HIM

GRIEF OF REV. DR. DEEMS AT THE DEATH OF HIS OLD FRIEND—HE HAD NEVER KNOWN A GRANDER MAN.

Rev. Dr. Deems, Pastor of the Church of the Strangers, was called upon by a TIMES reporter at his residence in Twenty-second street last evening. He was evidently deeply grieved at the death of his old friend. He said that after all, notwithstanding the long illness of the Commodore, his death had seemed to come upon him like a surprise. He had looked for it so often, and it had so often been postponed, that he could hardly realise that his dear old friend had gone. He had seen him every day, but eight, since April 26, and had seen more to admire in him in his sickness than he had ever seen when he was well. "He must have been a great man," said Dr. Deems, "for like all things that are truly great, he grew and grew upon your regard." He had never known a grander man, he said; he could take in so much so quickly. He had such immense daring, and yet he had the best kind of womanly tenderness, and in matters of faith he had the simplicity of a little child. He had never been able to find that he had complained once during all his sickness. In the beginning he was nervous, irritable—sometimes as he would say—ugly. He had gone into his room just after a paroxysm of pain, and he had taken his hand and burst into tears, saying: "Doctor, will God forgive me? I have been so bad and ugly toward these people who have nursed me so faithfully." But that passed away, and even then he never prayed that the pain might be taken away, but would often say, "Dear God, don't take it away if it be necessary for me." He had never met Dr. Deems said, even in the ranks of the clergy, a man who had more thorough belief in the divine authenticity of the Bible than Mr. Vanderbilt. The public, of course, knew of the gift of the Church of the Strangers made to him by the Commodore, and would not believe that he was ungrateful, but they never could know of the personal affection he had for the man, founded on his knowledge of his character. It was his desire that he should be buried from the Church of the Strangers.

THE NEWS ON THE STREET.

The news of the Commodore's death had been so long expected that it made but little stir on Wall street. It had been anticipated that the intelligence of his death would produce at least a slight fall in what are known as the Vanderbilt stocks, and accordingly large quantities of these securities, as well as of other stocks, had been sold short, in expectation of such a movement. It is said that the amount sold in this manner aggregates 100,000 shares of Western Union, 100,000 shares of Lake Shore, besides large blocks of other stocks. Jay Gould is said to be short 73,000 shares of Western Union, and "the Twenty-third street clique" are said to be "short" 27,000 shares of Michigan Central. During the day the office of Davis & Freeman, Mr. Vanderbilt's brokers, was crowded with inquirers concerning Mr. Vanderbilt's death, and for a time it was supposed by many that the report was one of the manufactured ones to which the public has of late been so frequently treated. Later in the day the details of the event became generally known in the street, and formed a frequent topic of conversation. Personal anecdotes, reminiscenses, &c., of the deceased were freely exchanged, and the various episodes in the Commodore's long and eventful career were canvassed with more than ordinary interest. To the younger generation he was little known except by reputation; but few were to be found even in the theatre of his most famous exploits who were personally intimate with him. The disposition of his immense railway property was a topic of frequent discussion. It is rumored that the interest of his second wife, née Miss Crawford, in the estate, will be confined to a certain annuity, stipulated in her marriage bond, and that the greater part of the $70,000,000 invested in railway shares has been willed to the eldest son, William H. Vanderbilt.

THE COMMODORE'S SICKNESS.

AN ILLNESS LASTING NEARLY EIGHT MONTHS—HIS PERSISTENT STRUGGLE AGAINST DEATH—HIS DENUNCIATION OF WALL STREET SPECULATORS WHO SOUGHT TO MAKE MONEY BY SPREADING FALSE RUMORS.

On the afternoon of Wednesday, May 10, of last year, a rumor was spread in Wall street that Commodore Vanderbilt was so sick that his death might occur at any moment. The reporters, of course, went immediately to the residence of the Commodore to learn the truth. One of them, while conversing with Mrs. Vanderbilt, who told him that her husband was by no means dangerously sick, was startled by the vigorous voice of the Commodore, rolling from up-stairs, and conveying the injunction: "Tell the gentleman that even my slight local disorder is now almost entirely removed; that my doctor says I shall be rid of it in a very few days; that even if I were dying I could knock all the truth that there is in the wretches who start these reports out of them; and that, vigorous as I am at present, I would, were they within easy reach, knock all the lies forever hereafter out of them, thereby causing the biggest job for the undertakers that both Wall and Broad streets have afforded for a very great number of years." Yet the Commodore, though he was so fierce and vigorous in mood, was sicker than he knew. "The slight local disorder," of which he spoke to the reporter, did not disappear as he thought it would. It lingered with him, and from day to day sapped his strength. It rendered movement painful to him, and, about the 13th of May, compelled him to remain in his bed altogether. He was not seriously ill, the doctors said, and he was expected to be rid of his troublesome complaint within a few days. The most startling rumors as to the aged financier's bodily condition were daily circulated on Wall street. There it was thought that the demise of the Commodore would affect Central and Hudson River, and also Lake Shore stock. So, to produce temporarily the anticipated excitement in the market, reports of the Commodore's death were spread daily. Yet none of these canards produced the desired result. It soon became known that Mr. Vanderbilt had so placed his affairs that his death would have no appreciable effect upon the securities of the great railway enterprises with which he was connected. Then the press undertook to stop the cry of "wolf" in the money markets by publishing bulletins of the Commodore's condition, and, when the cry had ceased, continued to print them. This practice was begun on May 18. His condition was not materially changed until about noon on Thursday, Aug. 3, when he experienced a relapse, which was so severe that his physicians, Drs. Linsley and Elliot, feared that he could not recover. Their fears were at once communicated to his family and friends, and his son, Mr. William H. Vanderbilt, Vice President of the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad, who was on his way to Saratoga, was telegraphed for. During the day and evening his condition gradually became worse, until at midnight his recovery was despaired of. About 3 o'clock the next morning a slight improvement took place, and he continued to rally slowly, and on Saturday he was much easier and was able to converse with his friends. The illness with which Commodore Vanderbilt was afflicted was not of an acute character by any means, but was the culmination of a complication of disorders, from which he had been suffering for many years. During his long life he took excellent care of himself and lived abstemiously, always taking an abundance of exercise in the open air and invariably keeping regular hours. Gifted with an iron constitution and a strong and robust frame, with an admirable muscular development, it is not surprising that he should have been able to withstand the inroads of disease as well as he did. The attack which resulted in his death came on about the middle of April last. When first taken ill he called his family physician, Dr. Jared Linsley, to his assistance, but this gentleman was thrown from his carriage on the next day, and injured so severely that he was compelled to keep his room for four weeks. During that time Dr. William Bodenhamer took charge of the case. As soon as Dr. Linsley was able to attend to the duties of his profession, the Commodore sent for him again, saying that as he had been with him for 19 days and nights on one occasion in New-Jersey, and had saved his life, he wanted him to be with him during his present trouble. At first it was supposed that the attack, like many others that he had experienced, would readily yield to treatment, and that the old gentleman would be about again in a few weeks. Unfavorable symptoms continued to make their appearance, however, and notwithstanding the efforts of Dr. Linsley, assisted by the counsels of a number of eminent physicians of this City and other places, who were called in consultation, the desired improvement did not take place. Among the medical gentlemen who were invited to take part in these consultations were Dr. William H. Van Buren, Dr. Austin Flint, Sr., and Dr. Ellsworth Elliot, of this City, and Dr. Geschidt, of Hastings-on-the-Hudson. The attack was peculiar in its character, and was marked by many abrupt changes, the patient sinking rapidly at times, and rallying with almost the same quickness. During the whole time, except when unconscious from the effects of the severe chills, or rigors, which made their appearance from time to time, Mr. Vanderbilt not only retained his mental powers, but was able to give his attention to business matters, and to engage in long and pleasant conversations with his family and friends. At one time he seemed to take special pleasure in recalling incidents of his early life, and many times surprised those around him by the accuracy with which he recounted scenes witnessed by him many years before. From the time the Commodore was first taken ill, down to the day of his death, Mrs. Vanderbilt was most devoted in her attentions to her husband, and seldom or never left his room, except to take the repose absolutely necessary for the preservation of her health. His son, Mr. William H. Vanderbilt, was also very constant in his attendance at his father's bedside, always visiting him once, and often twice, every day, notwithstanding the multitudinous engagements forced upon him by his position as Vice President of the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad, the entire management of which was in his hands. Messrs. C. V. De Forest and J. P. Barton, nephews of the Commodore, were with him almost constantly during his illness, one or the other of them sitting up with him every night. His sister, Miss Phœbe Vanderbilt, visited him almost daily, often remaining with him for hours. His brother, Mr. Jacob Vanderbilt, of Staten Island, was also a constant visitor. Among the gentlemen who frequently called on him were his old friend, Mr Minthern Tompkins, son of Gov. Tompkins, Hon. Thurlow Weed, Mr. Edwin D. Worcester, Secretary of the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company, Capt. Albert Dagnett, and Mr. John Nowell, of Chicago. He also occasionally received others of his friends who called to inquire after his health.

Rev. Dr. Deems, of the Church of the Strangers, his friend and Pastor, was always a welcome visitor. This gentleman spent hours at his bedside, and on occasions when aggravated symptoms made their appearance, frequently spent the night in the house. The Bible had long been the Commodore's favorite book, and during his last attack the religious side of his character was more fully displayed than ever before. About August last he manifested a desire to have hymns sung at his bedside, and frequently called his family around him, requesting them to join in singing religious songs. His life, during the last eight months immediately preceding his death, was exceedingly quiet and peaceful. All his vast interests in the several railroads, in the affairs of which he had been the ruling spirit for so many years, were disposed of to his satisfaction, and as he repeatedly said that he was prepared to die, there were no disturbing influences surrounding him. He knew that the reporters of the morning papers were in the habit of calling at his house in the late hours of the night to inquire about his condition, and he often sent kindly messages to them, telling them how he felt, and asking that they would, in their turn, tell him what was going on in the City. After the severe attack of Aug. 3, the Commodore rallied considerably, and throughout the months of August, September, and October, although confined to his rooms, was comparatively free from pain. There was no marked change in November, but since the 1st of December he grew weaker every day.

THE COMMODORE'S EVERYDAY LIFE.

HOW HE EMPLOYED HIS TIME—HIS ADVICE TO A JOURNALIST.

Of late years Commodore Vanderbilt gave himself up almost exclusively to home life, and did not take an active part in the management of the great business which he controlled. His son William H. was well acquainted with his father's wishes, and under his direction the vast business was carried on. Occasionally great questions arose, and they were submitted to Mr. Vanderbilt. He decided them quickly, and, once decided, he dismissed them from his mind. He lived in the large, comfortable mansion on Washington place, his wife and his wife's mother being his only constant companions. Mr. Vanderbilt generally rose at about 8 o'clock, and after a leisurely toilet breakfasted with his wife. His breakfast was very light—it hardly deserved the name of breakfast. He prolonged the stay at the table that he might glance over the morning papers. From breakfast he proceeded to his private office on Fourth street, where he got the important contents of the morning's mail, and received his friends and business acquaintances. His office was always thronged. The hour of 11 o'clock coming round, the Commodore would leave his office and pay a visit of inspection to his horses in the adjacent stable. He was very fond of his horses, and nothing but an extraordinary press of business would persuade him to give up his morning visit. It was the greatest courtesy he could extend to a friend to invite him to join him in the inspection of the stable. After having visited the stable, the Commodore returned to the house to dress for dinner and to chat with his wife and his grand-children, or perhaps to receive such persons as arrived too late for the office hours. Dinner was served at 1 o'clock, and it was generally a good dinner. The Commodore ate sparingly, and rarely took wine, but insisted that the little he did eat should be good and well prepared. After dinner, driving was in order. Mr. Vanderbilt was a fine driver, and drove none but fine horses. His turn-out was one of the most striking on the road. It was worth an afternoon just to catch sight of the stalwart old man, in the height of his pride and dignity, guiding his spirited horses along the Boulevard. Supper was served at about 6 o'clock, and it was a rare thing for Mr. Vanderbilt to leave the house in the evening. He seldom visited the theatres or other places of amusement. He retired early, scarcely ever remaining up later than 10 o'clock. Always when at home Mr. Vanderbilt was besieged by visitors. He used to say that he was never alone except in his afternoon drive. Hundreds of people called upon him every day, on every conceivable business. He was sometimes inwardly impatient at this unceasing train of callers, but he never refused to see anybody who might call. Persons calling on business were counseled, however, to speak quickly and be off. The Commodore never allowed himself to be talked to after he had heard enough. A lady who knew him intimately tells the following story of him. It was at the beginning of the panic of 1873 that a reporter of a City journal waited upon the Commodore to get his views of the situation. The inexperienced journalist plunged in medias res as soon as he was shown into the Commodore's presence.

"Good morning, Commodore," said he, "What do you think of the panic?"

"I don't think about it at all."

"What do you intend to do about it, then?"

"I don't intend to do anything."

"Well, haven't you got anything to say about it?"

"No, Sir, not a word."

The poor reporter was on his beam-ends. He was just leaving the room in despair when the Commodore turned full upon him and said: "Look-a-here, sonny, let me give you a little advice. Pay ready money for everything you buy, and never sell anything which you do not own. Good morning, sonny."

Mr. Vanderbilt was eminently a jolly man when surrounded by his friends. He was a young man to the last. He was fond of stories, and caught a good point with marvelous quickness and zest. He was a good-story teller himself, but he told stories like a business man. His stories were noted for their sharp, pithy sentences, and they were as pointed as needles. He was given to the inculcating of sound business principles in all persons whom he cared for. He used frequently to say, "Never take more than eight per cent. interest for your money. You have a right to eight per cent., but if you take more you are a robber." His interest in the welfare of the passengers of his railroads and his steam-boats was always cropping out of the firm, said yesterday that Mr. Vanderbilt's estate, as held by him previous to his making conveyances to his son William H., amounted to about $100,000,000, consisting mostly of stocks, comprising mainly those of New-York Central and Hudson River, Harlem, Lake Shore, Canada Southern, New-York and New-Haven, and the Western Union Telegraph Company. Some years ago he conveyed all his real estate on Staten Island to his son William H., for the nominal sum of $1. The question of whether he had entailed property in his securities for two lives could only be definitely ascertained from the provisions of his will. The exact amount of each kind of the principal securities held by Mr. Vanderbilt or conveyed by him was not definitely known except by very few persons, but it was sufficient to give him control of the leading lines in which he was interested.

HIS PROPERTY ON STATEN ISLAND.

THE OLD HOMESTEAD OF THE VANDERBILT FAMILY—VARIOUS TRACTS OF LAND.

Commodore Vanderbilt's property on Staten Island, the place of his nativity—he having been born at Port Richmond, May 27, 1794—and the early scenes of many of his business triumphs, is in no way proportionate with the colossal fortune he accumulated in this City. At the time of his death he owned in fee the old homestead residence, a small frame house and garden at Union place and Bay street, originally the property of his mother, which is of but small intrinsic value, but which the Commodore would not sell for any price. The cottage is of primitive appearance, and bears no signs of having been an object of solicitude to its owner, as certain needed repairs, apparent to the passer-by, seem to be neglected or overlooked. Commodore Vanderbilt was also the owner of eight lots on Union place and Bay street, and a square of eight more lots fronting the cottage, which he originally bought from the estate owned by his mother for $13,000. The property at the present time is worth $25,000. Besides the property above mentioned he held other valuable tracts of land, which he deeded to his eldest son, William H. Vanderbilt, five years ago, such as fourteen acres of land, called "The Lawn," on Vanderbilt avenue, between Bay and Cross streets, valued at $100,000; also 100 acres of farm land in New-Dorp, the estimated value of which is $50,000; and a tract of ground on the Richmond road known as Mount Hope, comprising about fifty acres, worth $18,000; also the Simonson estate, between Townsend and Simonson avennes, which he inherited from his first wife, a small farm, worth at least $25,000, together with twenty lots on Amos street, valued at $10,000. Commodore Vanderbilt also gave in charity fifty acres of land on the Richmond road to the Moravian Church of Staten Island, for a cemetery, and at his own expense built a stone wall inclosing the cemetery, all of which could not be purchased for $20,000. This is the family burying-place, and in the cemetery is erected a handsome shaft pointing out the family vault. His brother, Capt. Jacob Vanderbilt, has been until recently the President of the Staten Island Railroad Company at a large salary, and owns the controlling shares of the company. It is a noticeable fact that the property owned by the Commodore, and now held by his son, has never been leased or sublet, nor any sort of improvements made, or buildings erected thereon. It remains a barren and unprofitable waste, without bringing recompense or emolument to its owner.

THE FAMILY VAULT.

On the outskirts of the village of New-Dorp, Staten Island, in a north-easterly direction, is an old Moravian Church and cemetery. The figures on some of the moss-covered and crumbling tombstones would indicate that the grave-yard has been used as such for at least a century and a half, the oldest legible date being 1740. Near the middle of this burying-ground, and on a knoll overlooking the Lower Bay, is the family vault of the dead millionaire. It occupies a rectangular plot forty-two feet long by thirty-six wide, and is inclosed by a plain iron railing painted black. Fronting the middle of the eastern side of the lot is a granite monument, which was erected about twenty years ago. It was designed by Mr. C. F. Anderson, and was built by Messrs. Beals & Jaynes. The monument is constructed of granite, and is almost perfectly plain. The base is twelve feet square and fourteen feet high, and is surmounted by a column of the same material twenty feet in height, making a total from the ground of about thirty-five feet. Over the centre of the pediment is a life-sized marble statue of a female, heavily draped. About midway up the column, on its four sides, are wreaths carved from the granite. The only inscription on the structure is the simple name, "Vanderbilt," which is made of raised letters, on a triangular piece of polished granite, near the top of the eastern side of the pediment. A door, also on this side of the pediment, leads down to the vault, which is lined with brick, and is so ventilated that there is no collection of foul air. The vault has a capacity for about one hundred coffins, and already contains the remains of the Commodore's father, his first wife, who died in 1868, his son George, and several other relatives.

THE VANDERBILT MANSION.

DESCRIPTION OF THE COMMODORE'S LATE RESIDENCE AT WASHINGTON PLACE.

The house in which Commodore Vanderbilt resided during the last twenty years of his life, No. 10 Washington place, was built by himself, and under his own direction. It was commenced in May, 1845, and finished in November, 1846, Benjamin F. Camp being the mason employed. It is a large double house, with a frontage of 40 feet on Washington place, and a depth of 65 feet. The stables are built in the rear, with an entrance on Fourth street, the lot occupied by the buildings extending through the block from one street to the other. Between the house and the stable is a small paved court-yard. The house proper is built of red brick, with brown-stone trimmings. It is four stories high, with a basement. The edifice cost about fifty-five thousand dollars when completed, and the ground on which it stands cost $9,500. It is reckoned to be one of the strongest and best constructed buildings in the City. During the time in which it was being built the Commodore resided on Staten Island, and moved into his new house some time in December, 1846. The parlors, which are very large and commodious, are on the first floor. They are two in number, situated on the right of the entrance, opening into each other and connecting with a small extension in the rear, from which a door leads into the dining-room. On the left of the main entrance to the house is a small reception-room, the door of which is at the foot of the staircase in the main hall. The dining-room is in the rear of the reception-room and staircase, and extends across the building as far as the back parlor. The parlors are elegantly furnished, but contain very few works of art. The most valuable of these is a bust of the Commodore, in white marble, by Powers. In a niche in the lower great hall is a statuette in Parian marble, a copy of the statue, in heroic size, cast in bronze, by Capt. Albert De Groot, for the Vanderbilt memorial in front of St. John's Park Depot. In the dining-room is a picture of the Commodore in a road wagon, wearing a white hat and driving a favorite span of horses. Immediately upon reaching the landing of the upper hall the right-hand door leads into the library, a room about twenty feet square, frescoed, and surrounded by bookcases five and a half feet high. These contain rather a miscellaneous collection. The Commodore never collected a library, but his favorite books were historical and devotional. The book he valued next to the Bible is Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, a work he frequently carried with him on his travels. The library opens into a large sitting-room, twenty by twenty-five feet. These two rooms face on Washington place. The sitting-room is plainly, but elegantly furnished with an obvious air of domestic comfort. This was the Commodore's favorite place, and here he mainly received his friends. The walls are ornamented with three oil portraits, one of himself and two of his present wife. There are also two magnificent photographs, one of the former Mrs. Vanderbilt, and one of himself taken in the costume he wore when he visited Russia. There is also a medallion portrait of his friend and Pastor, Rev. Dr. Charles F. Deems. But the picture he most valued is one of his mother in oil colors, hanging over the mantelpiece. Out of the sitting-room, in the rear, is a dressing-room which lets into Mrs. Vanderbilt's boudoir, which is on the south side of the building. The suite with the boudoir is a larger room, which was the Commodore's own chamber. Connecting with this is a room which he always used as his house office. In this room he probably elaborated the great schemes which he accomplished during the last quarter of a century. The third floor is divided into four large bed-chambers, used by the family. On the fourth floor are the rooms for the domestics. In the basement there used to be a billiard-room, but the table was taken down some years ago, and in this portion of the house are now the kitchen, laundry, servants' sitting-room, &c.

THE COMMODORE'S HORSES.

A LARGE AMOUNT OF MONEY SPENT UPON THEM—NAMES OF THOSE NOW IN THE STABLES.

Commodore Vanderbilt was always celebrated for his love of fine trotting horses, and never spared expense in procuring the very best in the country. His favorite mode of driving was in a road-wagon with a team. He was a bold and skillful driver, always kept his horses under perfect control, and never lost his presence of mind under any circumstances. There is hardly a citizen of New-York who does not remember seeing him either driving through the streets or Central Park and the roads beyond. Even those who did not know him were attracted by the erect figure and handsome clear-cut face of the old gentleman, and seldom failed to ask who he was. His favorite horse, and the one which he esteemed, perhaps, more highly than any other he ever owned, was one he called Mountain Boy, a bay Hambletonian, fifteen hands high, that could make a half mile in 1:06. During the epizootic which prevailed a few years ago this horse died. He was then in his prime, being only eleven years old. The Commodore felt this loss severely, and was never able to replace the horse with one which he considered his equal. In fact, fine horses were the objects on which the Commodore was always willing to spend any amount of money, provided they came up to his standard of excellence. The horses now in his stable, the entrance to which is on Fourth street, immediately in the rear of his dwelling, are as follows: Mountain Maid and Arthur Boy, a bright bay Hambletonian team, the first twelve years old, and the second ten. They stand fifteen hands high, and can make their mile together in 2:24 to a road wagon. Small Hopes, another Hambletonian, is a brown gelding, fifteen hands and one inch high, eight years old, who can trot a mile in 2:19 in harness. This horse was raised in Kalamazoo, Mich. Mrs. Vanderbilt's coach horses, a handsome brown team, seventeen hands high, Hambletonians, can make their mile together in three minutes. Commodore Vanderbilt had at one time another fine team in his stable, Prince and Rob Roy, bay Hambletonians, a little over fifteen hands, who could cover a mile in 2:26. These he gave as a present to his brother, Capt. Jacob Vanderbilt, of Staten Island, in the early part of last year. The last time the Commodore drove out was on the Saturday preceding the day on which he was taken ill. He held the reins himself in a road wagon, with Small Hopes between the shafts. Competent judges estimate the value of the horses now in the stable at about one hundred thousand dollars, and the team he gave his brother is considered to be worth $20,000. The stable is large and well ventilated, and in a large open space in the centre, under the same roof, there is an oval dirt track on which the horses may be exercised when the weather is too inclement for them to be taken out. In the way of equipages there are three family coaches, six road wagons, and two sleighs in the coach-house attached to the stable.

VANDERBILT'S STOCK OPERATIONS.

AN ACCOUNT OF THE COMMODORE'S SPECULATION IN RAILROAD SECURITIES — ORIGIN OF THE CELEBRATED HARLEM POOL.

Mr. Vanderbilt's gigantic operations in Wall street began with the famous "Harlem Pool" of 1864. Previous to that he had been a large dealer in Erie, Harlem, and New-York and New-Haven stocks, but the "Harlem Pool" was the first affair of the kind in which his name was brought prominently before the public as a speculator in stocks. In the Winter of 1863-4 Vanderbilt and a few friends quietly bought Harlem with a view to realise from the rise in its price, which it was anticipated would be brought about by the passage by the Legislature of a bill allowing them to run a street railroad through Broadway to the lower part of the City. The stock was purchased at prices ranging from 75 to 150, the stock rising rapidly with the prospect of the bill's success. Certain members of the Legislature, however, banded together to kill the bill, and sold large quantities of the stock "short" with the object of realising largely from the fall which would take place on its defeat. The measure was effectually killed in the Legislature, and Harlem fell from 150 to 100, inflicting more or less loss on Vanderbilt and his party. The great "Harlem Pool" was then formed by the latter, its chief member being Vanderbilt himself, the late Oliver Charlick, and John Tobin, a Wall-street speculator, who from the position of a gate-keeper on Vanderbilt's Staten Island Ferry, had risen through lucky speculations on the street to be the possessor of a fortune of $3,000,000. Shortly after the fall in Harlem, Vanderbilt, who was smarting under his losses, present and prospective, from the defeat of the bill, sent for Tobin, and asked him if he too had not been badly hurt by the fall in the stock. Tobin replied that he had not lost much, and that all the stock he had bought had been paid for and was locked up in his safe, and that a temporary fall in it would not damage him to any great extent. Then the Commodore asked him whether he did not think "those fellows," i. e., the members of the Legislature in question, ought to get a dressing out for the way they had "gone back on them." Tobin answered in the affirmative, and the two set to work to arrange the preliminaries of the campaign. Tobin agreed to put in $1,000,000. Vanderbilt wanted him to give more, but the former said that it was all he cared to put up, and the Commodore told him that he would send him word in half an hour when to commence work. This conversation took place at Vanderbilt's office, No. 5 Bowling Green. Half an hour later Tobin received orders to buy, and the work of pushing Harlem upward commenced. The object of the pool was twofold; first to realize a splendid profit for themselves, and second, to punish the perfidious legislators, who in the Commodore's vigorous vernacular, "had gone back on them," in such a manner that future law-makers would be careful how they trifle with them. In both aims they were successful beyond their expectations. Tobin bought immense "blocks" of Harlem at constantly increasing prices, and before the outside world knew the nature of the plot Harlem was once more above 150 and rising rapidly. Still the pool kept on buying until they had contracted in the aggregate for more than one and a half times the entire capital stock of the road, (110,000 shares at a par value of $50 a share,) and carried up the stock to the extraordinary price of 285. Vast profits were reaped by Vanderbilt, Charlick, and Tobin, while the prudent legislators who had gone "short" of the stock in the expectation of its further fall, were left in a most deplorable condition. In the language of one of the successful operators: "We broke the entire Legislature, and scores of them were forced to go home leaving unpaid board bills behind them." In the sudden flurry of April, 1864, otherwise known as the Chase panic, in which Rock Island fell from 149 to 100 in two hours, and Fort Wayne tumbled from 150 to 75 in the same time, Mr. Vanderbilt became quite anxious for the safety of his Harlem pool venture. He called a meeting of the principal members, and told them that he was afraid they could not pull through in safety. Tobin, however, thought that by standing firm they could come out all right, and the end justified his prediction, Harlem standing firm at 160, while other stocks were sinking on all sides. Among the operators who were fighting the Harlem pool at that time, to their loss, was the venerable Daniel Drew, who in the end "laid down," as the phrase goes; in other words, refused to meet his contracts, and finally compromised at sixty cents on the dollar. A "Uncle Dan'l's" losses in this affair amounted to $138,000, of which his creditors ultimately got $75,000.

The Commodore's first venture in Hudson River was brought about through the agency of Tobin, who was then a Director on that road. Vanderbilt had already got deep in Harlem, and appeared to have found it a profitable investment, but he shrank at first from investing in Hudson River, on the ground that it was too expensive a stock and was selling above its real value. His aides was then (1864) in the neighborhood at 120, and Tobin assured him that even at this figure it was the cheapest and most valuable stock in the market. Vanderbilt could not be brought to believe it, however, until Tobin had purchased 35,000 shares on his own account, and the stock had gone up to 150. Then the Commodore, convinced that "there was money in it," went in too, but timidly at the start, his first purchase being only 2,500 shares. He then got Tobin to put five of the Harlem Directors into the Hudson River Board, and at the ensuing election, Tobin having control of the majority of the stock, was elected President of the Company. This was in June 1864. After the election some of the old Hudson River directors, dissatisfied at the growing influence of the Harlem clique and the Hudson River Board, resigned their positions, which were filled with Vanderbilt men, thus giving the Commodore the ascendency over Tobin. Vanderbilt himself was chosen a director, to fill one of the vacancies. Things ran along smoothly until the year following when Tobin resigned and Vanderbilt succeeded him in the Presidency. The Commodore now had two of the most valuable and profitable roads in the country under his control, but he still longed for further conquests. His eyes were then turned to the New-York Central as the richest and most important thoroughfare between the East and the West, and which under proper management might be made a mine of wealth to its possessor. The Central was then controlled by Dean Richmond and Peter Cagger, the remnants of the old Albany Regency, who were disposed to hang on to their property, but who were hardly able to cope with the all-conquering Commodore. Vanderbilt, however, began his purchases of stock, and in a short time succeeded in getting four of his Harlem Directors into the Central board, and was in a fair way, if let alone, to acquire possession of the road, when the controlling interest in it was purchased by Henry Keep, Legrand Lockwood, and others, who were bent on keeping it out of his hands. This last change occurred in December, 1866, and great was the Commodore's wrath when he discovered that the Keep-Lockwood "crowd," as he called them, had got the start of him. At the annual election in December, 1866, Keep was elected President, and then the war between Vanderbilt and the new owners was begun in earnest. The Winter of 1866-67 was filled with quarrels and bickerings between Vanderbilt and the Keep management, the former using the Hudson River and the Harlem Roads to cripple the Central in every way possible. The Hudson River and Harlem would not take the Central's freight and passengers, and the Central retaliated by threatening to shut out the Hudson River freight from passage over their road. At one time the Commodore went so far as to land his passengers at East Albany, and refused to send his freight over the bridge to Albany unless the managers of the Central would agree to his terms. Finally, after several conferences between the two Presidents, the matter was temporarily settled by Keep agreeing to give Vanderbilt the same amount of south-bound freight as the latter furnished west-bound freight, and for a time there was peace between the two roads. In the end, however, Keep was forced to resign, and during the panic which followed in the Fall of 1867, Vanderbilt and his friends purchased the controlling interest in Hudson River. At the election in December following, the Keep party were voted out and Vanderbilt installed as President.

The great rival of the Central at this time was the Erie, then controlled by Fisk, Gould, and Drew, and the Commodore soon found that fighting that wily trio was likely to prove a harassing as well as an expensive occupation. So he determined to "absorb" Erie after the fashion in which he had "absorbed" Hudson River and New-York Central, thus giving himself complete control of the two great northern outlets from the Metropolis to the Great West. The scheme would have been feasible enough had he been dealing with ordinary men, but in this instance it came to naught, in a manner totally unexpected by the attacking party. Work was commenced in the usual manner, the Vanderbilt brokers buying in large amounts of Erie stock, and sending the price gradually upward in the neighborhood of 80, and even higher. When the stock reached 84 the Vanderbilt clique had nearly two hundred thousand shares in their possession, and the stock was virtually "cornered." The danger to Fisk and Gould was imminent, but they had a resource in store which was destined to surprise and confound their adversary at the moment of his seeming triumph. When the decisive moment came, three large books of certificates of stock, signed in blank, were taken from the Erie office by Fisk, who conveyed them in a carriage to an office in Broad street, where they were filled out and sold broadcast for cash. This was the famous "share mill" which became so noted in future railroad wars. Its effect on the Erie Central war was immediate, the price of Erie dropping to 70 within an hour, and Vanderbilt and his friends gave up all hope of gaining control of the road. Fourteen millions worth of the "manufactured" stock was thrown on the market, and many of the purchasers were ruined. Tobin, the ex-President of the Central, lost $2,500,000. Vanderbilt's own losses were over $3,000,000, but he succeeded in instituting negotiations with Fisk & Co., whereby his purchased stock was taken off his hands at the original figures, so that he lost nothing in the end. Augustus Schell, Richard Schell, Frank Work, and others, who had also purchased largely of the products of the share mill, succeeded in effecting compromises by which they recovered the greater portion of their losses.

By an act of the Legislature passed in 1869, Vanderbilt effected a consolidation of the New-York Central and Hudson River Roads, and then proceeded to water their stock by enormous dividends of new shares. Eighty per cent. was added in one lump to the value of Hudson River, and 107 to the value of New-York Central. Altogether the capital stock of the two roads was increased from $32,000,000, their original capital, to $86,000,000, thus putting enormous profits in the pockets of the Commodore and his friends. Among the latter were currently reported to be a considerable portion of the State Legislature, who had amounts of stock "carried" for them in such a way that they realized the amounts at the several dividends in full.

Mr. Vanderbilt's connection with the capture of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern was not so direct as his share in the absorption of the Hudson River and Central, being principally carried on through the agency of his son-in-law, Horace F. Clark, together with Augustus Schell and others. About 1868 Clark, Schell, and others purchased largely of Michigan Southern, and succeeded in getting into a collision with Legrand Lockwood, then the Treasurer of the Lake Shore Road. Lockwood was a friend of Keep, and Vanderbilt made war on him in the old-fashioned style, bringing everything to bear to harass Keep as much as possible, and make his position an uncomfortable one. In the Black Friday panic of 1869 Lockwood & Co., to save themselves, used the securities of the Lake Shore Road, but even with this assistance they failed, and had to give way to Vanderbilt, who placed his son-in-law, Clark, in control of the road. In August, 1873, Clark died, and the Commodore was chosen in his place.

INCIDENTS IN HIS CAREER.

HIS CLOSENESS AND OTHER PECULIARITIES—CHARACTERISTIC ANECDOTES.

Like Astor, Stewart, and other great money-getters of his day, Vanderbilt was what was termed a "close" man at a bargain. He looked after the cents as well as the dollars, and believed thoroughly that "a penny saved was a penny earned." Many anecdotes are told illustrating this feature of his character. In making out certificates of stock he would always lump as many shares together as possible in order to save the twenty-five cents tax on each certificate. Whatever came in his way in the shape of profit he was always on the alert to grasp, and small amounts as well as large were accumulated whenever the opportunity presented itself. Much of this apparent "closeness" was, doubtless, attributable to the comparatively straitened circumstances of his youth, and the economy he was obliged to practice in the early years of his career. He was solicitous, too, about the way in which his money was spent, and never allowed other men to subscribe or pay out money for him, although he was not unwilling to transact that office for others, even without their knowledge or consent. Once when an application was made to him for a contribution for political expenses on the part of some politician who was running for the Assembly in one of the river counties, he gave $100 for himself and another $100 for a wealthy friend who was then connected with him in the management of New-York Central. A few days later the Commodore met the friend in question and told him that he (the friend) owed him $100, which the latter duly paid. Shortly afterward the friend had a similar call made on him, and remembering Vanderbilt's action in the former case and that the Commodore was equally interested in the second contribution, subscribed $100 for himself and another $100 for Vanderbilt—an obligation which the latter refused to honor on the ground that "when he gave anything, he gave it himself." As a speculator he was in his early operations cautious to a fault, and often betrayed great anxiety as to the results of a venture. In the "Chase panic" of 1864, when he thought his Harlem pool endangered, he would rise at 5 A. M. and come down to business with an anxious face and troubled in spirit. On such occasions he was usually gross, and the man who disturbed him was very apt to get a rough reception. He was not over particular about the class of men from whom he reaped profits in his financial operations. Friends or foes were pretty much on the same level in his estimation, and if a friend undertook to get in his way, he was obliged to look out for himself. Among the men whom he found around him in his later years was one who had once been very wealthy, and who had been the means of putting him in the way of very profitable operations. In a generous moment, he told the friend that he would carry 1,000 shares of Central stock for him, and give him the profit on it whenever he wished to "realize." The friend agreed, and the stock, after rising to 115 dropped again to 109, with the prospect, however, of rising to a much higher rate within a few months. The friend had no wish to sell, but Vanderbilt told him one day that he had better let him have that stock now; there wasn't much prospect of its rising, and as he [Vanderbilt] happened to have an order for 1,000 shares, it would save the expense of brokerage to sell it to him. The friend was somewhat taken aback at this, and consented only with reluctance. Shortly afterward an eighty per cent. dividend was declared on the stock, and he found himself minus the $80,000 which would have fallen to him had he kept it.

In his career as a railroad and steam-boat proprietor, Mr. Vanderbilt discovered at an early day that the most effectual way to succeed was to crush out opposition. This policy, which he pursued throughout with all his native shrewdness and industry, was not always successful. In one instance at least, he found that even the weaker opponent was sometimes more than a match for the stronger. In the early part of his career as a steam-boat owner and manager, there was a little town on the Hudson River whose entire trade with the Metropolis was carried on by one man—an honest, kind-hearted, and hard-working river Captain, whose sole property consisted of two small sloops which plied between New-York and the town in question. He was an enterprising man, and when he found that the people wanted more rapid transit, he sold his sloops and put every dollar he was worth into a smart little river steamer. Vanderbilt, seeing that the place was a growing one, and likely to develop a good trade, determined to crush his weak opponent by having one of his large steamers call at the town and take passengers and freight at rates which would infallibly ruin his poorer rival. He did so; but to his astonishment, found that he could get no traffic, while the native owner's boat got even more than her full share. The secret was soon discovered. The inhabitants were a kind-hearted and sympathetic people, and they did not propose to let their enterprising fellow-townsman, who had gone to such an expense to benefit them, be "killed off" by a rich stranger, and so the Vanderbilt boats were obliged to give up their trips and leave the field clear for the poorer competitor.

HOW THE COMMODORE WHIPPED "YANKEE" SULLIVAN.

Among the stories told about Commodore Vanderbilt is the following, related by an old and well known resident of Staten Island.

"During the warm and closely contested Presidential campaign of 1844, when James K. Polk and Henry Clay were running as the respective candidates of the Democratic and Whig Parties, there was great enthusiasm and intense excitement on Staten Island relative to the issue. Commodore Vanderbilt, who was then in his prime, took a great interest in the fight, and was an ardent supporter of Henry Clay, for whose success he exerted himself with all the vigor for which he was so well noted. He was among the foremost in getting up meetings and processions, and organized and commanded a magnificent troop of horsemen composed of about 500 of the finest men in the Whig Party on the Island. When the grand Clay and Frelinghuysen procession took place in New-York Commodore Vanderbilt and his troop of horsemen occupied a very conspicuous position in it, drew encomiums from all who saw them, and were greatly cheered. The Commodore, especially, presented an imposing appearance on account of his magnificent physique. At that time the notorious prize-fighter, "Yankee" Sullivan, who was a "Tammany worker," and frequently boasted that he could "whip any Yankee Whig on sight," kept a notorious bar-room in Chatham street, just opposite City Hall Park. He was in his bar-room with a gang of roughs as Commodore Vanderbilt's troop passed by, and hearing the applause and noting the fine appearance of the Commodore, he thought it a fine opportunity of exhibiting to his friends how he could "take the Commodore down," and rushing out he seized the reins of his horse and tried to compel him to alight. The horse reared, the Commodore cut "Yankee" Sullivan across the back with his whip, and then, leaping to the ground, so badly beat him that his friends took him away in a nearly senseless condition. Commodore Vanderbilt remounted and proceeded, and was not molested again that day. As every one knows, Clay was defeated. The result was, so far as Commodore Vanderbilt was concerned, that he went out of politics, and kept entirely clear of party strife ever since.

THE VANDERBILT FAMILY.

THE COMMODORE'S SIXTY-THREE CHILDREN, GRANDCHILDREN, AND GREAT-GRANDCHILDREN.

The family of Commodore Vanderbilt is a very numerous one, and, including his own children, together with his grandchildren and great-grandchildren, number sixty-three persons. The children of the Commodore are ten in number, and are all by his first wife. They are as follows, given in the order of their birth: Mrs. James M. Cross, Mrs. D. B. Allen, Mrs. George A. Osgood, William H. Vanderbilt, Mrs. William K. Thorne, Mrs. Daniel Torrance, Mrs. Horace F. Clark, Cornelius J. Vanderbilt, Mrs. N. B. La Bau, and Mrs. Lafitte. All the children are married and all have families, with the exception of Cornelius J. Vanderbilt, who is a widower, and Mrs. George A. Osgood. The families are as follows:

Mrs. James M. Cross has two sons and two daughters, as follows: C. Vanderbilt Cross, Norman H. Cross, Sophia Vanderbilt Cross, and Ethlinda Cross.

Mrs. D. B. Allen's family consists of William, Franklin, Harry, Vanderbilt, Dexter, and Annie. They are all married excepting Dexter.

The family of William H. Vanderbilt consists of four sons and four daughters, who are all married save the first and third son. They are Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., Mrs. Shepherd, W. K. Vanderbilt, Mrs. Sloane, Florence Vanderbilt, Frederick William Vanderbilt, Lila Vanderbilt, and George W. Vanderbilt.

Mrs. Thorne has one son, William K., and two daughters, Emma (now Mrs. King) and Helena.

Mrs. Torrance also has one son, Alfred, and two daughters, Marie and Adelaide, now Mrs. Howland.

Mrs. Clark has one daughter, Maria Louisa, whose married name is Mrs. Collins.

Mrs. N. B. LaBau has one son and two daughters. The son's name is Walter, and that of one of her daughters is Edith, of the other Lilian.

Mrs. Lafitte has a family of four, two sons and two daughters, Oakley Barker, Clarence, Adele, and Virginia.

HONORS TO THE DEAD.

MOURNING AT VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY.

NASHVILLE, Jan. 4.—On the news of the Commodore's death the Chancellor of Vanderbilt University sent information to all the the Professors, who were at the time in the midst of their lectures. The classes were immediately dismissed and the bell tolled as the students slowly defiled from the building. The Faculty were called together and resolutions were passed in honor of the founder's memory. The University exercises are suspended for the remainder of the week. The chapel is draped with mourning. Bishop McTyeire has been requested to deliver the funeral discourse in the University next Sunday, and suitable arrangements are being made for the impressive service.

HOW THE NEWS WAS RECEIVED AT THE CLUBS.

The death of Commodore Vanderbilt excited but little comment in the various clubs of the City last night. For several years the Commodore had known but little of club life. When he married for the second time, several years ago, he resigned from the Manhattan and Union Clubs, and ever afterward found all his enjoyments in the home circle. Some time ago, however, the Commodore resumed membership in the Union Club, but he rarely visited the club-house. When he did go there he stayed but a very short time. He was a regular habitué of the Manhattan Club-house for years, and there spent many hours with congenial companions previous to his second marriage. The flags of the Union and Manhattan Clubs were at half-mast yesterday. It is not thought that any other special marks of respect for the deceased Commodore will be evinced by the clubs, but as to this no decision has yet been reached.

THE FUNERAL.

THE SERVICES TO BE PERFORMED IN THE CHURCH OF THE STRANGERS—THE COMMODORE'S WISH THAT THERE SHALL BE NO POMP TO BE OBSERVED.

All the preparations for the funeral have not been made, but it will certainly take place from the house, whence the body will be carried to the Church of the Strangers, in Mercer street, near Waverly place. Some time before his death the Commodore requested Dr. Deems to avoid all pomp and abstain from all eulogy at his funeral. Many years ago he also named a number of gentlemen whom he wished to act as his pall-bearers, but so many of them have since died that it has been determined by the family to have none. The immediate family only will meet at the house on Sunday morning at 10 o'clock, and will accompany the body, which will be carried to the church on a bier, on foot. In order to avoid all inconvenience from snow, a force of laborers will be at once set to work to clean the streets between the house and the church. Besides the family, only their personal friends and the employes of the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad will be admitted to the church edifice. It is said that Mr. William H. Vanderbilt has desired that the railroad officials and employes will refrain from sending flowers to the house or church, as his father had always been of the opinion that such contributions on the part of the rich made the poor feel poorer. Next Sunday will be the anniversary of the Church of the Strangers, and it has been usual to celebrate the anniversary and administer the Holy Communion on this day. These ceremonies will be postponed, however, and the entire morning will be devoted to the funeral services. After the performance of the last rites in the church, the remains will be placed in a hearse and taken to the Staten Island Ferry, where boats will be in waiting to carry the hearse and carriages to Staten Island. Upon arriving at Staten Island the procession will be formed and proceed to the Moravian Cemetery, near Newdorf, where the body will be placed in the family vault and the last rites of the church performed.

NAVAL AFFAIRS.

ADVICES FROM THE FLAG-SHIP RICHMOND AT MONTEVIDEO—THE SHOOTING OF MICHAEL JOYCE AT THE NORFOLK NAVY-YARD.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—A communication has been received at the Navy Department from Commodore Caldwell, on board the United States flag-ship Richmond, at Montevideo, Uruguay. The Richmond left Montevideo on Nov. 1 for Buenos Ayres, and remained there one week, during which all of the prominent officials of that city were at Tacuman celebrating the completion of a railway between that city and Buenos Ayres, a distance of nearly 800 miles. Commodore Caldwell thinks that the day cannot be far distant when travelers can cross the Continent by rail instead of passing through the Straits of Magellan. Upon his return to Montivedeo, Commodore Caldwell called upon the Provisional Governor, who accepted an invitation to visit the ship. Instead of sailing from Montivedeo to St. Catharines, as was intended, it was decided to leave for Rio de Janeiro, making all the official calls, and leave within 10 days before any cases of yellow fever should occur. From Rio de Janeiro he intended to sail for St. Catharines.

The Navy Department has received a communication from Commodore J. B. Creighton, Commandant of the Norfolk Navy-yard, giving a report of the shooting of Michael Joyce. It appears that about 7 o'clock on Monday evening the ship-keeper and watchman of the Canandaigua discovered a boat alongside of the ship in which there were two men, and that something was being passed into the boat through the air-ports. The boat was hailed, and ordered to remain alongside, and at the same time the watch on the wharf was called. The people in the boat, however, shoved off from the ship's side when they were fired at, but apparently with no effect. While they were in the act of firing, a man rushed by from the fore-hatch with the evident intention of getting into the boat when he was seized. He proved to be Michael Joyce, an employe in the construction department and formerly one of the ship keepers. He was found to have been wounded in the left shoulder and the Surgeon of the Worcester was sent for who rendered all the aid in his power.

A ST. LOUIS POLICEMAN MURDERED.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 4.—Charles Bielefeld, a member of the Mounted Police, was found dead at about daylight this morning on the track of the St. Louis, Kansas City and Northern Railroad, near the crossing of the Manchester turnpike, four miles from the centre of the city. The body was cut and mangled beyond recognition, and was only identified by the clothing and the policeman's star which he wore. Another policeman named Purcell was very badly beaten, having several ribs broken and being otherwise seriously injured. The death of Bielefeld is shrouded in mystery, and the Police authorities are very reticent regarding the matter. The theory is that he was murdered and his body placed on the track to conceal the deed. Numerous highway robberies have been committed during the past two or three weeks in the western and north-western suburbs, and Bielefeld and Purcell, disguised as farmers, had been endeavoring to ferret out the robbers. It is expected that the facts in the case will be brought out at the Coroner's inquest.

A COLLEGE SOCIETY AT DINNER.

The thirty-third annual dinner of the Delta Kappa Epsilon Fraternity took place last evening at Delmonico's, the following college chapters participating: College of the City of New-York, Columbia, Bowdoin, Cornell, Rutgers, Yale, Amherst, Lafayette, University of Virginia, Hamilton, Troy, Harvard, Williams, Wesleyan, Chicago, and Rochester, being 16 of the 30 chapters composing the fraternity. The following gentlemen acted as officers of the dinner: President, Hon. Dexter A. Hawkins, of Bowdoin; Vice Presidents, A. M. Bigelow, of Amherst; V. Dabney, of the University of Virginia; Royal S. Crane, of Dartmouth, and Secretary, Charles Hallock, of Amherst. The following toasts were responded to after the removal of the cloth: "Our Fraternity," Charles Hallock, Amherst; "Our Absent Brothers," Henry S. Carr, College City of New-York; "Our Departed Brothers," in silence; "Our Brothers at the Bar," A. M. Bigelow, Amherst; "Our Brothers in the Medical Profession," Dr. W. Y. Laird, Hamilton.

BIRDS IN THE PRIZE-RING.

The Harrisburg (Penn.) Telegraph of Wednesday says: "For some days past a lady in the upper portion of the city has been feeding the English sparrows, those canny little feathered fellows who swarm the streets in the vicinity of the Capitol yard, and are the only birds who stay with us all Winter. By some mysterious manner (bird-talk, probably) the fact that a free lunch house was open was communicated to a great number of sparrows, and yesterday morning at the hour of feeding there were gathered in the yard almost 500 to partake of their daily food. But it was remarked that they were shy of a large piece of bread in the yard, and that none of them would eat while it lay there. The sparrows had divided into two bodies, who stationed themselves on either side of the yard and eyed the bread, but did not commence on it. Suddenly, as if by agreement, a champion from each body advanced to the middle of the yard and simultaneously began an attack upon each other, both endeavoring to possess themselves of the food. When one champion was exhausted another stood ready to take his place, and so the thing went on until four or five battles had been fought, when the defeated side flew away, leaving the victors in quiet enjoyment of the swills."

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THE INTERNATIONAL REVIEW. January, February, &c. New-York: A. S. BARNES & Co.

There seems to be just now a more than usually good opening for a review like the International. The English reviews are hardly of a kind that could become popular in the United States, while America affords only one serious competitor in the North American Review. It must, then, be the fault of the editors, if they do not succeed in establishing a successful periodical. The Penn Monthly is a modest publication in Philadelphia, which has always sought to occupy the position of a review like the International, and has done well in its humble way, without apparent outlay for its articles. If a magazine on a non-paying basis can do so creditably, there is no excuse for failure in a review that pays for its contributions, and has Europe as well as America to aid it with famous names and able essays. In view of these facts, and considering the ambitious title, the present number, which covers the two months of January and February, is a little disappointing. The lightest essay is that by M. Charles Giudrez on the "Paris Salon of 1876," and it is not too much to say that it is the ablest. Not only is the art criticism of a very high order, but its literary merits are conspicuous. Mr. Bryant has a sonnet that will bear reproducing. It is called "The Dangers of Manhood."

"Youth! whose ingenious spirit, just and kind,
Looks from that gentle eye, that open brow,
Wilt thou be ever thus in heart and mind,
As rureless and as merciful as now?
Behold this streamlet, whose sweet waters wind
Among green knolls unbroken by the plow,
Where wild flowers woo the bee, and wild birds find
Safe nests and secret in the cedar bough.
This stream must reach the sea, and then no more
Its purity and peaceful mood will keep,
But change to bitter brine and madly roar
Among the breakers there and toss and leap,
And sash the hopless bark against the shore,
And whelm the drowning seamen in the deep."

A very welcome essay comes from Japan. It is by Prof. J. Warren Clark, of the Imperial University, Tokio, and gives light on a subject which has been somewhat obscured by kindly illusions. The extraordinary changes from the feudality of recent Japan to the democracy of to-day's Japan are stated at their worth, and the old adage that nature never makes a leap is once more attested. In spite of Japanese embassies, treaties, free press, and modern machinery, we learn that the Western reforms are only superficial, and that Japan is no more Western at heart than it was two centuries ago. The article is dispassionate, and gives the Japanese ample credit for those virtues which have always distinguished them.

Mr. David Dudley Field discourses on a home subject about which he certainly ought to understand himself. "Political Corruption —The Root of the Evil" is the title of his essay. The root that he offers can hardly be said to have been discovered by him, since it is that old grievance, the indifference of the voter; but then, that is a truth that cannot be too often repeated. Asking himself what is the cause of the corruption just stated, Mr. Field answers:

"Men are intent on making money; that is,

The three richest men in the United States—Astor, Stewart, and Vanderbilt—have died within fifteen months. The first inherited great wealth, and the possibility of making vast additions to it without very much effort of his own; the other two were the architects of their own vast fortunes. The combined wealth of the three would probably aggregate $250,000,000, or four times the amount of the public debt of the United States before the war. There is no evidence that any one them has left a blank in the field of effort which he occupied so successfully which cannot be filled. The Astor property, the Stewart dry-goods business, and the Vanderbilt roads are managed with the same comprehensive grasp of principles and the same keen attention to details as when the eye and brain of those with whom they were so long identified were undimmed. There is no reason to believe that all three are not as capable of indefinite expansion as they would have been under the men who made them what they are. Fortunately for the world, there are but two or three men in a century whose greatness is so unique that their places cannot be supplied.

Will some Democratic authority tell us why Gov. Grover, of Oregon, is to be specially honored at the national capital? He is a Governor, to be sure, but many a Democratic Governor has gone to Washington, and has come away again, without so much as a horn being blown in his honor. But Grover, a man of no reputation, a small politician, and the Governor of a distant and comparatively unimportant State, is to have a serenade, a speech, and the usual refreshments. If he is to be serenaded because he gave Cronin his certificate, he only, according to Democratic doctrine, did his whole duty. Is this such a rare performance on the part of Democratic Governors that this model Governor should have music, fire-works, and champagne? On the other hand, if Grover's action was merely a sharp trick, the less said about it the better.

The fact that Mr. C. P. Huntington and his Central Pacific lobby have struck hands with Tom Scott and his Texas Pacific lobby to push through a compromise bill for the purpose of pledging the credit of the Government for the construction of a new road connecting the two oceans, shows the necessity of increased vigilance to resist a dangerous and costly piece of jobbery. The further fact that a considerable proportion of the present House of Representatives retires with the close of this session, and are, therefore, less careful about smirching their reputations than they might otherwise be, affords a further reason for watchful criticism of a scheme which public opinion in the North has emphatically condemned. The vast majority of the people of this Union are united in condemning a policy of further subsidies to railroads, whether under the form of guarantees of bonds or of extravagant land grants. The combination between the Texas and Southern Pacific Railroad jobbers represents a very formidable "strike" on the Public Treasury, and the almost solid Southern vote which may be expected for the bill will more than ever tend to disarm any slight hostility which it has been likely to receive from the Democratic Party.

A dispatch from Philadelphia says that the developments concerning the mail robberies of which Tom Thums has published full particulars, have caused much perturbation in that city. The method pursued by the thieves, when they procured the money for stolen checks, is thought to be ingenious. Where the ingenuity comes in, however, is not so clear. It appears that the Philadelphia banks have been in the practice of paying checks to persons unknown to the officers of the concerns. If the simple and almost universal precaution of requiring identification of the presenter of a check is neglected, all the rest of the business is plain sailing for the forger of the indorsements. In the meantime it may be worth while for New-York officials to inquire what system of checks is employed by Dodd's Express Company, carriers of the mail-bags. It seems to have been possible for bags to be stolen from the wagons without immediate detection. The mails should be transported through the City with more care than this would indicate is exercised.

We fear that we have done ex-Mayor Wickham unintentional injustice by some allusions to his business affairs in a local paragraph of yesterday. The basis of truth in the paragraph certainly does not justify the inferences which our usually accurate law reporter incautiously drew from facts which were brought to his notice. That two judgments, at somewhat distant dates, were obtained against Mr. Wickham may be explained without any imputation on his solvency, or any reflection on his fitness to act as Receiver for the Security Life Insurance Company. Any talk about appointing a Receiver to take care of Mr. Wickham's own affairs must have been prompted by personal malice, to whose utterances we are very sorry to have given either countenance or currency.

The kind of progress toward local "reform" which was secured by the Tammany triumph in November is becoming daily more apparent. For Chief Clerk Mayor Ely has selected ex-Alderman John Hardy, somewhat notorious as Clerk of the Common Council under the Coman régime in 1870 and 1871. County Clerk Gumbleton appears to have reappointed "Capt." Isaiah Rynders, of Empire Club fame, as Clerk in Chancery, whatever that may mean. It will be observed that the leading officers of Tammany Hall are being well provided for by Controller Kelly, and altogether our City Government is becoming quite a happy Democratic family, into whose little schemes no jarring public criticism will be allowed to intrude.

INTIMIDATION AS A POLITICAL WEAPON.

It is a little curious that the Democratic and "independent" critics of the Election laws of Louisiana are keenly alive to the wrongs for which these laws give opportunity, but are wholly blind to the wrongs they are intended to correct. It is argued that because you cannot tell exactly how much a voter needs to be frightened to keep him away from the polls, nor how many voters in any given district were so frightened, therefore it is useless to try to correct any attempt at intimidation. Some of the "independents" go further than this, and reason that because a Returning Board may, in its discretion, declare that an amount of intimidation exists which, in fact, does not exist, therefore it is wrong to give such discretion.

These arguments are, practically, based on the assumption that a wrong which cannot be computed exactly in figures ought not to be remedied, and an act of justice which cannot be brought about without reposing discretion in those who are required to carry it out ought not to be undertaken. But it is only needed that such a view should be clearly stated to show its absurdity. No one will deny that the blacks, as they are now related to the whites in the South, may be intimidated to an extent that would completely change the result of an election. Such an event, any one can see, is quite possible. If it occurred, it would certainly be a great wrong. The question is, not are the remedies for that wrong imperfect, or may they do harm, but are they reasonably efficient, and do they do more good than they do harm?

It is a perfectly well-established principle in law, that where damage has been done, and it cannot be exactly stated, it shall be calculated by the best data that can be had, and then adjusted. This is simple common sense, and it applies directly to the condition of affairs in the South. Take Louisiana, for instance. The possibility of intimidation is well known. The law requires that it shall be the duty of certain officers, when intimidation occurs, to certify to the fact, and that then it shall be the duty of the Returning Board to investigate the matter in each district, and if they discover that there has been intimidation enough to change the result, they are to throw out the vote of such district. This is a rude remedy, no doubt, and one to which we at the North are not accustomed. But how much better would it be to have no remedy at all? It is by no means certain that the law-makers of Louisiana have not opened the door for serious injustice in their attempt to protect the State against the use of violence in elections; but the injustice is mostly toward the very class which it was intended to protect. Thus, in the last election, the Democrats unquestionably planned to gain advantage from the action of the Returning Board. They chose five parishes with heavy negro and Republican majorities, and they deliberately set to work to carry out intimidation in those parishes to an extent which would compel the board to throw out the the entire vote. They expected that, this being done, they would have a majority on the remainder of the vote. In that they were mistaken; but had their schemes worked as well as it was believed that they would, the very law they are now denouncing from one end of the land to the other, would have given them the Electoral vote of Louisiana and the Presidency of the United States.

Again, as to the abuse of the discretionary power given to the Returning Board. Of course, there is a chance for its abuse, and it is unfortunate that it is so. But we have the testimony of a number of very acute, honorable, and well-informed observers that as a matter of fact, there was no abuse in the late proceedings in Louisiana, and that is the point in which the country is mainly interested. That the Returning Board should be made up of impartial and highly-respected men, with ability enough to perform their duties well, and integrity enough to withstand all corrupting and misleading influences, are conclusions which no one will dispute. We fear, however, that it will be a good while before Louisiana will be sure of such a board from either party, and judging from what the Democrats did in 1872, we see no reason to suppose that they would improve on the present tribunal. Meanwhile, it is for the country to make up its mind how far the board, as it is, did justice in its findings, and on that question there is no longer any room for doubt. As Gen. Van Alen, in his admirable speech Wednesday evening, pointed out, even the Democratic visitors at New-Orleans do not attempt seriously to impeach the evidence on which the board acted, but only deny its technical regularity. But the country cares nothing for technicalities, and is concerned greatly in what the evidence shows. There is no doubt that the evidence shows intimidation far more than enough to change the result, and to justify the board in throwing out the districts in which it took place. Against this fact it is quite useless to bring the flimsy arguments to which we have referred. It is of no consequence whether the exact number of voters who were wronged can or cannot be ascertained. It is sufficient that the perpetration of the wrong has been proved, and that its extent has been so clearly established as to guide the action of the board with perfect safety, and to enable them to provide a substantial remedy.

CORNELIUS VANDERBILT.

When men review the career of a prominent citizen like Cornelius Vanderbilt, their most natural inclination is to look therein for some special lesson. Vanderbilt's life was one of material success. To young men who are entering the field of activities in which he wrought so long, what he did, and how he did it, may be safely commended as an incentive if not as an example. If they need anything to add fever to their thirst for great riches, they may find it in the contemplation of the doings of one who amassed in his lifetime a fortune more enormous than is usually accumulated by a single individual. In the domain of commerce he secured a vast power; he grasped it early, and he held it firmly during a long life. His methods, or at least their general characteristics, were known to all; wherever there are ambitious young spirits about to attempt similar achievements, the details of his career may be studied with profit. Beyond this the world need not concern itself with the life and character of the man who has just given up his part and lot in its struggles. Like others, he had his friendships; those who were his friends will revere him, now that his personal belongings have been refined by the mysterious alchemy of death, as one of the great men of the age. Those who admire the heaping up of great riches will consider that a man who made so much money is worthy to be ranked very high in the roll of genius. For a time, the disposition and management of all this wealth, and the prosperity of these vast schemes of business, will engage the curious attention of the public. It will be presently seen that the single will which gave vitality to his enterprises is no longer behind them; their informing purpose is changed; the bold originality which constantly renewed, supplemented, and adapted new combinations and inventions to meet new exigencies, sleeps at last. But the complicated machinery which this man set in motion will continue to run with the momentum which he gave to it. So, gradually and without any great shock, the influence of Vanderbilt's personality will fade. In many hearts he will be sincerely mourned as a good parent and a genial companion. The world will look on and wonder why so much riches were given to one man. The next generation will recall his memory as a dim tradition of untold wealth.

Vanderbilt, as a young man, started out in life with the determination to make money. He made it. Given a robust physique to wait upon his indomitable spirit, he extended his operations over a period nearly equal to two lifetimes. It is like a chapter out of ancient history to read of his sailing a ferry-boat between Staten Island and the Battery during our last war with Great Britain. The man who, in 1810, had earned his first one hundred dollars by planting corn for his mother, died yesterday with his grasp on a railroad property whose revenues could generously support a State. Vanderbilt's beginnings, however, were not in penury; there was nothing sordid in the education of the youth, who enjoyed the adventure of his calling on the water, while his heart rejoiced over his growing riches. And it should be said to his credit that in the origination and conduct of enterprises of pith and moment he found a satisfaction which the mere scraping together of profits could never bestow. His was not that fierce joy which the gambler feels when he sees his gains increase by dazzling chance. He availed himself of the machinery of the Stock Exchange just so far as was necessary to enable him to control legitimate business schemes and operations. Some men seek this power of control for the purpose of securing better facilities for gambling. Vanderbilt's financial plans always moved on a solid basis. What he bought he bought to keep, to build up, and to make more productive. In this view of his career, he was of great use in the material development of the country. Moreover, it was something to be identified, as he was, with the era of the world's progress in which steam was chained to the car and harnessed to the flying wheel of commerce. Without having linked his name to any great invention to utilize the tremendous power of steam, he combined material and economic forces in such a masterly manner that it may be fairly claimed for him that he left the impression of his genius on the present system of steam transportation in this Republic. His management of affairs was necessarily autocratic; the interests which he wielded were, in the nature of things, a monopoly. In the wide empire of his activities rivalry could not be tolerated, and concessions would have been fatal weakness. But, on the whole, he used his power without oppression.

It required skill, patience, and that mental quality which we call forethought, to conduct successfully such vast concerns as those which employed Vanderbilt's energies. He gave his undivided attention to one branch of business until he saw it was time to leave it. When other men would have followed a line until it began to droop, he resolutely left his in its apparent vigor and seized upon another. In this way the sail-boat was replaced by the steamer, the steamer by a marvel of mechanical skill; the stage-coach gave way to the railway train, and the thin, poorly-equipped railroad line was in turn transformed into the most complete iron highway on the continent. Whatever he did was done well. On all his methods might have been written "Thorough." This was more conspicuous because his achievements were public rather than personal. He was not a shop-keeper, buying cheap and selling dear; his successes were not in the narrow routine of the counting-house. Every movement of his will was perceptible in the fleets which covered the waters, or in the network of rails which enmeshed the land. By him, therefore, the movements of population, the currents of trade and travel, and the requirements of commerce, must have been clearly seen and understood. It was his business, in a large way, to anticipate and meet all these requirements and changes. He did this so well that he is now set down as a highly successful man. Besides this, he was a man of detail—careful in little things. Not a profuse giver; when he did give he gave magnificently. He could endow a college, present a costly steamer to his country, or build a church, without ostentation or self-gratulation. His life was well ordered, temperate, and serene, though active. His lease of time was extended far beyond the limit usually allowed to man. His eye was not dim nor his natural force abated until, in the midst of his plans, his light flickered and went out. Though there is nothing in his career to arouse a noble enthusiasm, there is much to challenge the respect and admiration of mankind.

PACIFIC RAILROADS IN CONGRESS.

In one form or another, the various Pacific railroads are now before Congress, and though the questions to be settled in regard to them differ essentially, the desirableness of applying to them the same general principles of equity ought not to be overlooked.

The measure under discussion in the Senate, declaring the true intent and meaning of the acts of 1862, 1864, and 1866, with special reference to a claim set up by the Union Pacific on account of its Central Branch, involves considerations which should be postponed until the larger question of the indebtedness of the company to the Government has been settled. There is something like impudence in the proposition championed by Mr. Ingalls, for enabling the company to obtain judicial action upon a claim over which Congress appears to have absolute jurisdiction, at a time when the company, in common with the Central Pacific, is resisting the just demands of the Government whose further favor it seeks. Whether the Union Pacific shall or shall not be declared entitled to an additional subsidy, however small, is an inquiry that may well remain unanswered so long as the obligation of the company to provide for its debts remains undetermined. It should not be allowed to plead for a generous construction of its rights until it has evinced an honest desire to deal with expenditures made in its behalf.

The contest waged last session between the Union and Central Companies, on one hand, and the advocates of legislation intended to protect public interests, on the other, remains unfinished. It was ended in the House in a manner which, though not perfect, substantially satisfies the equities of the case. The bill which passed that body in July authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to withhold payment of any money due to the companies by the United States to the extent of payments due to the United States from the companies. It requires the companies, and others to which bonds have been issued, to provide a sinking fund for the payment of the principal of the bonds and the repayment of disbursements by the Government for interest on the bonds; the several contributions to the fund to be over and above the five per cent. of net earnings and the one-half of sums earned by service to the Government called for by the law as it stands. The House bill also makes the Secretary of the Treasury the custodian and manager of the contributions for the purpose of the sinking fund; and it forbids the payment of dividends on the stock of the companies as long as they remain in default under the plan to be enforced. All these are on their face just provisions. They exact nothing which the companies should not willingly concede. That the construction of the Union and Central Pacific has in many ways been advantageous to the country, no one denies. When, however, they press this consideration as an argument for additional benefits, they presume a little too much upon popular forgetfulness of the magnificent favors that have been heaped upon them. Not content with being subsidized with lands and bonds on a scale which, with prudent management, would have gone far toward defraying the whole cost of construction, they have allowed the Government to go on, half year after half year, paying interest upon so much of the bonded indebtedness of the companies. In their early stage they were no doubt unable to increase by direct contribution the slow accretion of moneys derived from the reserve on account of transportation. But this stage has long been passed. Neither the Union nor the Central managers, in their intercourse with stockholders, would be willing to admit that theirs is other than a prosperous and wealthy corporation. Both pay dividends. That fact seems to determine the essential point in dispute. A company which can, out of its surplus earnings, pay dividends to its shareholders cannot justify the non-payment of its debts. And if the law be so lax that a technical pretext may be found for withholding what is due to the National Treasury, then Congress is bound to avail itself of its reserved power to "at any time alter, amend, or repeal" the act whose loose phraseology is used in support of bad faith.

But the bill we have epitomized was not disposed of by the Senate. A foundation for Senatorial action was laid by Mr. Thurman's report from the Judiciary Committee, whose conclusions are positive as to the power of Congress to pass the bill. The report argues that the reservation of right to alter or amend the existing acts was necessary to secure to the Government the benefits which the subsidies were designed to promote, and that in the public interest the right should be liberally construed. Decisions of the Supreme Court are cited in the report to show that the requirement of a sinking fund is not in excess of the power which Congress may properly exercise. The recommendation of the committee as to the annual payment to the sinking fund differs from the provision of the House bill only in reference to the amount. This is a matter of detail. The material point is that the Senate Judiciary Committee sustains the only principle involved in the measure adopted by the House. The remainder of the work required should be easy. It will be resisted at every step. The companies will once more insist that their dishonesty has the approval of the Supreme Court; and having thus suggested that they may run in debt with impunity, they will make a virtue of submitting propositions so absurdly inadequate that they cannot be for a moment entertained. For these tricks and hindrances the Senate should be prepared. And we hope that the session, brief as it must be, will furnish opportunities for finally settling a dispute involving an enormous amount of the public money and the application of just principles to the doctrine of corporate responsibility.

It is amazing that with the experience which the Treasury has had with the subsidized roads already in operation, and with the all but unanimous hostility of the country to the use of public money or land for the creation of grasping and arrogant monopolies, any encouragement should be given to the promoters of the Texas Pacific scheme. At the time it was rendered, the aid given to the Union and Central Companies admitted of defense. But the public policy which sanctioned the aid is no longer in force. There is no more reason for granting bonds or credit to the Texas Pacific than to the Northern Pacific. One has accomplished quite as much as the other, and has as valid a title to national succor. No man, however, now pretends that the Northern Pacific should be finished at the public cost. The most its managers ask is that the time covered by the charter shall be extended. Even to this extent the House committee apparently demurs. How, then, shall we interpret the confident activity of Messrs. Scott and Huntington, and the legion of lobbyists they have retained in behalf of the Texas Pacific—the most audacious scheme of plunder that has been heard of at Washington in many a year? On its merits the scheme could not obtain a hearing. If it have any chance of acceptance in the House, the explanation must be sought in the potency of corrupt influences, and to these, let us trust, the Senate will prove an insuperable barrier.

THE SOUTHERN STATE DEBTS.

An effort is making to remove the cloud of bad credit from the defaulted bonds of the Southern States. How far it will be successful remains to be seen. The first meeting was held yesterday at the Clearing-house, and the bonds considered were those of the State of North Carolina. A large number of well-known bankers and capitalists were present, as will be seen from our report in another column. Two or three points in regard to the plans proposed are worthy of special attention. The Chairman, Mr. Taylor, of the firm of F. Butterfield & Co., stated one of these points very clearly. He said that the object in view was to make an impartial and equitable adjustment of the debt of the State, taking into account the amount of the obligations and the ability and resources of the people, with such other circumstances as fairly demand consideration. With a view to accomplish what was designed, it was necessary, he said, to appoint a Board of Arbitrators who should be able to command the respect of the State authorities, on one side, and of their creditors, on the other. No class of men offered such qualifications as were desired so conspicuously as the Presidents of our City banks. These gentlemen were not personally interested in the ownership of the defaulted bonds. They were accustomed to trusts and financial negotiations, and they were respected and esteemed by a large circle of financial and mercantile firms who were in daily contact with them in business. From the circle of bank Presidents, therefore, it had been resolved to select the Board of Arbitrators in the present case. The board of five comprised three members from New-York—Mr. George S. Coe, Mr. B. B. Sherman, and Mr. J. D. Vermilye with Mr. B. B. Comegys, of Philadelphia, and Mr. Enoch Pratt, of Baltimore.

A second point of interest in this movement is that it originated in the Centennial Exposition. Mr. Coe, in the able and eloquent address in which he accepted from the meeting yesterday the trust confided to himself and his colleagues, gave a brief history of the initiation of the project. Two or three weeks ago, he said, a gentleman who had been prominent in the arrangements of the Centennial Exposition, called upon some of the bank officers in this city, and suggested that a meeting should be summoned to confer upon the general subject of the Southern State debts, and that the Centennial year could not be better closed than by an attempt to restore to the Southern States that financial and commercial credit which they ought to enjoy. It was to this gentleman that the suggestion was due of a Board of Arbitration, consisting of five bank presidents of known experience and high character, who would be accepted as a competent, impartial tribunal both by the defaulting States and by their creditors at home and abroad. When a sufficient number of bank Presidents had consented to serve, on condition that the plan would be adopted by a sufficient number of creditors of the defaulted States, and would be concurred in by the authorities of the States themselves, another step in the preliminary negotiations was the preparing of a written request from some of the largest holders of North Carolina bonds, that the board would at once accept the trust which was offered them. The third step was a request to the gentlemen who originated the scheme to visit the States of North Carolina, Virginia, and Tennessee, and confer with the executive authorities of those States and ascertain whether the proposed plan of adjustment would meet their approval, and whether they were disposed to recommend it to their respective Legislatures. He was also instructed to ask for some authoritative expression of the concurrence of the State authorities in the general effort which was being made. That gentlemen has not yet returned from his important mission, but the work he may have accomplished will be reported in a few days. Meanwhile, the expectation is evidently very strong that the mission will be productive of good; and that if it does not accomplish the whole of the benefit intended, it will commence a movement which before long will, of necessity, comprehend the defaulted bonds of most, if not all, of the Southern States.

There are many reasons why this enterprise should be successful. In all the financial centres of Europe the defaulted bonds of our discredited States have been a source of trouble and mischief to our commerce and trade. During the last few months the success of the Centennial Exposition, and a number of other circumstances, have greatly tended to increase the prestige of the United States in foreign countries. If to these salutary movements favorable to our credit abroad we can add the advantage aimed at in the meeting at the Clearing-house yesterday, we shall materially aid in the revival both of our credit and of our commerce in foreign countries. Our defaulted State bonds have been long enough a reproach to the country among other nations. Few things can so powerfully tend to restore the financial position, the reputation, and the prosperity of the defaulted States as the adjustment of their public debts. For, as one of the speakers at the meeting observed, "such an adjustment will serve more than all political, or even religious and moral, movements, to re-establish the whole country in the eyes of the world, to rehabilitate our public credit, and to give a new impulse to the recuperation of commercial confidence and to the revival of trade."

A RECENT PAINFUL INCIDENT.

There is no doubt that when an event of public interest occurs from which an important lesson may be drawn, it is the duty of the press to comment upon the incident and draw the appropriate lesson. While this is true, as a general rule, there are cases in which the rule seems to require modification. It is the opinion of most intelligent foreigners that "personalities" are a very bad thing, and that the American press is shamefully addicted to "personalities." So far as the meaning of this word has been ascertained, it is equivalent to saying something to which somebody can object. Now, an incident may happen which cannot be commented upon without saying something objectionable to the person affected thereby. In such circumstances, the press must either pass the incident by in silence or run the risk of being guilty of "personalities." The mental struggle which such a state of things induces is one of the reasons why the conscientious journalist frequently wishes that either he or some one else were dead.

If there is one subject which is more unpleasant to write about than another it is the personal woes of an editor. If an editor—let us say a young and enthusiastic editor—were to charter a special train and travel four hundred miles to attend a Governor General's ball, only to be refused admission on the trivial plea that he had not been invited, what newspaper with a heart in its fourth page could coldly mention the affair? Of course, it would not be possible to deny the fact—if fact it were—but it would be the duty of a well-conducted newspaper not to mention it to any greater extent than the occasion would justify. It will be remembered that, in point of fact, very little was said about it at the time, and it is generally thought that forbearance called for more gratitude than was displayed by— But this is a delicate topic.

As to a more recent event which was not wholly unconnected with an instrument primarily designed for accelerating the speed of horses, it is excessively difficult to comment upon it without incurring the reproach of using "personalities." The whole affair is greatly to be regretted, and there is no doubt that some one was more or less deserving of censure; that is, up to a certain point. The spectacle of a young and vigorous man undergoing what may be cautiously described as something which the law would probably decide to be at least constructive assault and battery, is one from which humanity turns with a shudder. No fearless and independent journal can fail to take the ground that for one man to introduce a rawhide into a private argument with another man is to take a liberty. And that there are circumstances in which such a liberty would be unjustifiable must be conceded. Of course, it would be premature to decide that the late tragedy was or was not characterized by circumstances of the nature just hinted at. Still, at first glance, it does seem as if it must have been the conviction of one of the parties that the other was taking a liberty with him which was not altogether justifiable. A man may be young and healthy, possessed of a giant intellect as far as polo is concerned, and the undoubted chief of a staff two-thirds European; but he may still be unwilling to be made passably acquainted with the properties and uses of a common riding-whip. This, however, is a branch of the subject of which delicacy forbids the further discussion.

To what extent the sad event illustrates the influence of the principle of heredity is an interesting question. A man may undoubtedly inherit qualities and things from his ancestors. If his ancestors were addicted to consumption, he might inherit the disease. If they were in the habit of being smashed in railway accidents, or of coming hastily in contact with other people's canes, he might feel an unconquerable tendency to become addicted to the same habits. Viewed in the light of this principle, the recent lamentable affair takes on a new aspect. The question of moral accountability is at once raised. Can a man be blamed for indulging a —, that is to say for being —, in short for having a liberty taken with him, if he inherits a tendency in that direction? Similarly, can the assailant who is concerned in the affair be held to a strict moral accountability if he is merely the blind instrument of the workings of the powerful principle of heredity? Were it proper to speak plainly of the facts in the painful affair to which allusion is here delicately made, the discussion of its relations to the doctrine of heredity would be full of interest. But, of course, plain speaking on such a matter is impracticable, since it would necessitate the use of "personalities." The interests of science and humanity are undoubtedly important, but they must, in this instance, be subordinated to the holiest instincts of the human heart.

The race is not always to the swiftest pedestrian, nor the battle to the best polo-player. Of this melancholy truth, the recent semi-private calamity, to which none but the most distant and guarded allusion is permissible, affords a striking illustration. When a powerful athlete is approached by a man with a whip in his hand and an evident intention to use it gleaming from his eye, the athlete ought to take the latter under his arm to some vacant lot and there throw him away. To most men it would appear a violation of good taste for the athlete to be quietly made acquainted with the nature of the whip, and to be subsequently stood on his head in a snow-bank; but human judgment is often at fault. In the present instance, the athlete unquestionably failed to meet public expectation, and it is said by those who witnessed the harrassing spectacle that the unhappy victim—but this is touching upon delicate ground.

Without mentioning in an indelicate and personal way what actually did occur, let us earnestly hope that it will never occur again. This sort of thing interferes with an editor's usefulness and strikes a blow at his dignity. The opinion of the Alumni of Trinity College, Dublin, is clear on this point. It is the feeling in that large and influential body that "begorra, it's got to be shtopped," and leading articles to that effect will doubtless soon be published in the —, that is to say, where they will do the most good. Let the victor be content with his laurels, such as they are, and let the vanquished—whoever he may be—have our sympathies. Above all, let the ribald and licentious press abstain from indelicate allusions to the matter, and treat it with the reserve and delicacy which it deserves.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

THE REASONS WHICH OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE GIVE FOR NOT ACCEPTING THE CHALLENGES OF CORNELL.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Permit me to state to the public through your columns that the Cornell Navy has just received formal refusals in answer to the challenges sent to the University Boat Clubs of Oxford and Cambridge.

Oxford's reason for declining is: "It would be impossible to get a really representative crew together during our long vacation." Cambridge gives several reasons, the first of which is the same as that stated by Oxford; secondly, "By accepting yours we lay ourselves open to innumerable challenges, which we should be quite unable to meet;" thirdly, "It has hitherto been our invariable practice to row against no other university than Oxford." The letter closes as follows: "If it should not be inconvenient to you to enter for the Annual Henley Regatta, we can insure for you there not only competition with the best English eights, fours, and pairs, but a hearty welcome." Inasmuch as Oxford and Cambridge enter crews in this regatta, there is still an opportunity for Cornell to row the English Universities. Such an undertaking, however, is out of the question, inasmuch as the Henley Regatta takes place in June, about Commencement week. For this reason the crew could not expect to arrive in England more than a day or two before the race, and under such conditions defeat would be inevitable.

It seems highly probable from this that no American University will ever succeed in making a race with Oxford or Cambridge without sending a graduate crew to the Henley Regatta. In this way the oarsmen could go over early enough to secure the practice which would be absolutely necessary in order to make the chances of success equal.

WARMING STREET CARS.

While the Presidents of the city railroad companies are considering the question, they can without any expense to their corporations, do something toward keeping the traveling public who patronize them, from freezing.

There are on each side of every car seven ventilators, and one in front, back of the driver. They were designed to let out hot air and introduce cool air in Summer. But some of the conductors, either because they are not reasoning animals or because they are indifferent to meteorological influences, persist in keeping them open in the coldest weather, pouring down draughts of air at times of a temperature approaching zero, on the heads of the passengers, among whom there are usually a considerable number of ladies. Thus the street-cars produce more cases of bronchitis, diphtheria, and pneumonia than all other causes combined. On the coldest day of last Winter, when the conductor of a Fourth Avenue car was compelled to take refuge inside of his vehicle, he had two ventilators open, one on each side, producing a current of air which made everyone shiver. When I requested him to close them he replied: "We must have a little fresh air." This man was obviously incapable of distinguishing between January and June. Last Saturday (the worst day of this Winter) I went up town in a Sixth Avenue car which had the ventilator in front open, producing a draft of cold, damp air from one end to the other. Unless the Superintendents of the street railroads will take some means to abate the nuisance, they may rest assured that they will drive their passengers into the omnibuses. If they would nail up these ventilators from November till April, it would be the most effectual remedy; and with a door at both ends of the car there would be no want of ventilation. Let them try the experiment, and the public may perhaps be satisfied with this very obvious and economical method of warming without clamoring for artificial heat.

STILL HANKERING AFTER THE POLE.

In your editorial of the 29th inst. on the Polar question, you unintentionally do injustice to the large number of competent and trustworthy men who, since the publication of my letter of suggestions in your issue of the 27th, have proffered their services to aid in carrying out the suggested scheme of temporary colonization. Those men are not only willing but anxious to go, and if they were permitted to go, could be relied upon to stick and to give an honest, truthful report of their operations. Some of those who have tendered their services already have had the experience of years of Arctic life, and therefore know the probable risks to which they would be exposed. Others are less well informed practically, but equally inspired with a generous spirit of adventure, and a desire that the American flag should be the first one unfurled at the Pole. With such material as this to work with, an enterprise would start out with reasonable assurance of success.

THE CENTENNIAL FUND LITIGATION.

Philadelphia, Jan. 4.—In the litigation instituted by the Centennial Board of Finance to obtain judicial decree of the manner in which the fund remaining in their hands shall be distributed, Mr. Eyster, the Assistant Treasurer of the United States, at Philadelphia, to-day filed, through District Attorney Valentine, his answer claiming for the Government payment in full of the sum of $1,500,000 before any disposition is made to the stockholders. Judge Strong, of the Supreme Court, and Circuit Judge McKennan are expected to sit in this city on Saturday next to hear arguments.

THE EASTERN TROUBLES.

APPREHENSIONS OF A RUPTURE DIMINISHING—PROTEST OF ROUMANIA AGAINST THE PORTE'S CONSTRUCTION OF THE NEW TURKISH CONSTITUTION—PROCEEDINGS OF THE CONFERENCE.

LONDON, Jan. 4.—A dispatch to Reuter's Telegram Company from Constantinople, dated Wednesday evening, says: "Apprehensions of a rupture continue to diminish. It seems probable, from the more conciliatory feeling now prevalent, that the Porte will not reject the proposals of the powers. The plenipotentiaries also seem disposed to make further slight concessions. If these anticipations are realized, negotiations will be resumed to-morrow. It is believed a pacific solution of the Eastern question may yet be looked for."

A dispatch from Bucharest says that in the Chamber of Deputies last night the Foreign Minister in reply to an interpellation said he had asked for explanations from the Porte respecting its interpretation of articles 1, 7, and 8 of the new Turkish Constitution. The Porte replied that the first two referred to Roumania and all other tributary States. The Chamber of Deputies unanimously passed a motion approving the conduct of the Cabinet, and demanding that the Government energetically protest against the Porte's construction. The President of the Council assured the Chamber that the Government would not rest until the Porte declared, in as formal a manner as the new Constitution was proclaimed, that Roumania does not form a part of Turkey. The Chamber resolved not to adjourn for the customary New Year's recess. Article 1 of the new Turkish Constitution declares that the Ottoman Empire, including its privileged provinces, forms an indivisible unity from which no portion can ever, on any ground, be detached. Article 7 relates to the Sultan's sovereign rights, including the right of investiture of rulers of the privileged provinces.

A dispatch from Vienna says it is positively stated that Austria's representatives at the conference are instructed to leave Constantinople if the Porte does not accept the proposals of the powers.

A Reuter's dispatch from Constantinople reports that at to-day's sitting of the conference Savfet Pasha read a statement of motives in support of the Turkish counter-proposals, and explaining in detail the grounds for opposing certain portions of the proposals of the powers. The European Plenipotentiaries, nevertheless, endeavored to induce the Turks to agree to debate upon the points which have been rejected by the Porte. The European Plenipotentiaries themselves opened discussion upon some of these points. When the conference adjourned, it was to meet again next Monday. In the meanwhile the Plenipotentiaries will continue to use their influence to make the Porte understand that a modification of the proposals can only be brought about by further discussion.

A special dispatch to the Vienna Political Correspondence, dated Constantinople, Jan. 3, says it is alleged that the Porte intends to address a manifesto to Europe. One report says the paper will take the form of a protest. The Plenipotentiaries, however, are endeavoring to dissuade the Porte from giving it that shape.

LONDON, Jan. 5.—A Reuter telegram, dated Constantinople, Thursday noon, and dispatched before the meeting of the conference, says: "The Porte at to-day's sitting will base its reasons for the rejection of the proposals of the powers upon the integrity and independence of the Empire. Among the proposals objected to as a violation of these principles is the nomination of Governors of Provinces by the foreign Ambassadors. If the Plenipotentiaries present an ultimatum, the Porte intends to summon a meeting of the Grand Council, and lay before it a statement of the position of affairs. The Porte categorically refuses to cede territory to Montenegro or Servia."

The Standard's Belgrade dispatch reports that 900 Russian volunteers are about to return to Russia, unwilling any longer to fight under the Servian banner. Prince Nikotine has just received orders from St. Petersburg to remain in Belgrade to advise the Servian Government in military affairs. Prince Milan wishes to withdraw from Russian influences, but cannot.

The Standard's correspondent at Vienna states that the military authorities of Galicia and Transylvania have received orders to bring their armaments and accoutrements up to the full complement as soon as possible.

The Berlin correspondent of the Times telegraphs that the Russian Government has ordered the preparation of 150 railway carriages for the transportation of sick and wounded.

The Times' special from Vienna says that on Tuesday the European Plenipotentiaries held a confidential meeting, when modifications in their demands were adopted, with the hope that the Turkish Plenipotentiaries would accept the amended proposals as a basis for discussion. The propositions for an international and foreign gendarmerie were somewhat modified; those for fixing the boundaries of two separate governorships in Bulgaria, and allowing the Turks only to occupy certain garrisons, were dropped. The question of surrendering Little Zwornick to Servia is to be referred to arbitration. Other minor alterations were agreed to. It seems that these modifications are the result of the interview between Lord Salisbury and Midhat Pasha.

A Pera dispatch to the Daily Telegraph says, that at the conference to-day the Turks explained that they could not discuss the proposals for a gendarmerie, and international commission, because they believed that such organizations would impair the independence of the Empire. The European Plenipotentiaries agued that Turkey had already, when she accepted Count Andrassy's note acknowledged the principle which was now embodied in the suggestions for a commission. The Turks rejoined that the Andrassy note had no reference to Bulgaria. The discussion throughout the sitting was almost like an amicable conversation.

The Daily News' dispatch from Berlin says that for two days the entire diplomatic corps in Constantinople have been preparing to leave the city.

The Vienna correspondent of the News reports that according to diplomatic advices received in Vienna, the European plenipotentiaries have agreed, if the Porte continues obstinate, to sign a protocol throwing all the consequences upon Turkey. It is stated that Salisbury and Ignatieff have been trying to induce the Sultan to dismiss Midhat Pasha as the chief cause of the Porte's resistance, but the Sultan refuses to do so.

The severity of the financial crisis in Russia is shown by the fact that the municipality of Odessa, one of the richest in Russia, is unable to pay the salaries of officials.

A dispatch to the Times, telegraphed from Vienna before the meeting of the conference on Thursday, says that everything seems to indicate that the Turks have taken a desperate resolution. The only chance now lies in a change of Cabinet above all, in the resignation of Midhat Pasha. In the event of the failure of the conference—the European powers seem as yet only agreed to recall their representatives. It is doubtful whether they would break off all intercourse with the Porte, although Russia would certainly do so.

A Pera dispatch to the Daily Telegraph reports that Admiral Hobart Pasha and Col. Valentine Baker have started to inspect the Gulf of Boorghas, which would form a second line of defense should the Russians force the Balkans. The Turkish official journals are very warlike.

MISCELLANEOUS FOREIGN NOTES.

NEW ISSUE OF TURKISH PAPER—THE LONDON STOCK EXCHANGE—SILVER—NAVIGATION OF THE BALTIC.

LONDON, Jan. 4.—A dispatch from Constantinople to Reuter's Telegram Company announces that a decree has been published designating the purposes to which the new issue of paper to the amount of 7,000,000 Turkish pounds is to be applied. The principal of these are the urgent expenditures of the Government and the liquidation of a portion of the floating debt.

On the Stock Exchange to-day international stocks have been steady throughout. Russian and Turkish have just advanced to their best point of the day, indicating the receipt of favorable private advices from Constantinople. Turkish were quoted at 4 P. M. to-day at last Saturday's closing prices.

The Russian Imperial yacht has arrived at Constantinople.

Silver is quoted to-day at 57¼d. per ounce.

A St. Petersburg dispatch says: "The ports of St. Petersburg and Leban are free from ice, and navigation to and from Baltic ports is nowise impeded, except in Reval Roads, which are full of drift ice."

LONDON, Jan. 5.—Reuter's Madrid telegram states that the Spanish Congress has passed the bill re-establishing the constitutional guarantees.

The Standard's Vienna dispatch announces that the Grand Duke Nicholas has completely recovered from his illness.

EXTRADITION WITH SPAIN.

A COMPREHENSIVE TREATY CONCLUDED BETWEEN SPAIN AND THE UNITED STATES.

LONDON, Jan. 4.—A dispatch to Reuter's Telegram Company from Madrid announces that an extradition treaty between Spain and the United States has been concluded, and will be signed to-morrow. The treaty specifies 26 offenses for which persons accused may be surrendered, and is the most comprehensive which has yet been entered into by the United States.

SPAIN AND CHINA.

OFFICIAL RELATIONS BROKEN OFF—THE CAUSE OF THE RUPTURE IN DOUBT.

LONDON, Jan. 5.—Reuter's Bombay dispatch contains the following: "The Shanghai Courier states that the Spanish Minister has broken off relations with the Chinese Government, and a Spanish fleet has been ordered to China. The cause of the rupture is not positively known. Some say the difficulty has grown out of unsettled claims, and others that it is connected with the Cuban Coolie question."

THE MAIL ROBBERIES.

MODE OF OPERATIONS PURSUED BY THE CHECK THIEVES IN PHILADELPHIA—INGENIOUS COUNTERFEITING OF SIGNATURES AND INDORSEMENTS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 4.—The revelations made in THE NEW-YORK TIMES this morning concerning the systematic robbery of the mails from this city had a demoralizing effect on our business men and the banks to-day, and those doing business with Boston houses immediately began to overhaul accounts to ascertain who were the victims. It will require several days to ascertain correctly the amount lost. The money obtained here from the banks on checks, will foot up, it is supposed, about $30,000. The institutions victimized were the Commercial National, the First National, Girard, Union Manufacturers, Corn Exchange, Southwark, and Farmers' and Mechanics' banks. The checks were usually presented for payment on Saturday, two days after they had been stolen, and the method pursued was like this: The officers would take a check sent by a firm in this city to the order of a firm in New-York or Boston. It was payable at one of the Philadelphia banks. The indorsement of the Eastern firm was forged upon the back of the check, and beneath, the signature of the Philadelphia firm was counterfeited most admirably, to give the bank evidence that the drawers of the check indorsed the indorsement of the drawee. Thus fortified, one of the gang presented the check in this city at the proper bank, and received the cash. The officers are now endeavoring to ascertain who the person was who presented these checks, and the skillful forger who indorsed the names of the Philadelphia firms, as a check which would be presented and refused payment, because the Philadelphia firm's signature was not appended would be taken away by the presenter, and he would return soon after with an indorsement the exact fac-simile of the signature at the bottom of the check. These checks made their appearance about two weeks ago.

AMUSEMENTS.

LOCAL MENTION.

Miss Thursby gives a concert at Chickering Hall on Thursday evening next.

Mr. Burbank, the well-known elocutionist, read at Steinway Hall, last evening.

The second rehearsal previous to the third concert of the Philharmonic Society may be attended at the Academy of Music this afternoon.

The public rehearsal prior to Mr. Thomas' third symphony concert, which occurs to-morrow evening, took place yesterday afternoon. Steinway Hall was crowded in every part.

Mr. C. C. Miller will give a concert at Steinway Hall this evening, with the co-operation of Mr. Thomas' orchestra, and that of Mme. Bertucca Maretzek. The programme is to consist wholly of compositions by Mr. Müller.

A promenade concert of uncommon promise is to occur at the Twenty-second Regiment Armory to-morrow evening. Gilmore's Band, the combined choirs of Trinity Parish, Mme. Pappenheim, and Mr. Arbuckle will interpret the programme, and the proceeds of the affair will accrue to the fund of the St. Ignatius' Guild.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

The revival of "Robert le Diable," at the Paris Opera-house, has attracted much attention.

Herr Paul Hiller, a son of Dr. Ferdinand Hiller, has made his début as a baritone vocalist at the Schwerin Court Theatre.

Mr. H. J. Byron's new comic drama, called "Old Chums," is coldly referred to by the critic of the London Telegraph. "Old Chums" was brought out at the Opera Comique.

Mme. Judith, ex-associate of the Théâtre-Français, has been engaged at the Porte-Saint-Martin to play the part of Catherine de Médicis in "La Reine Margot," by Auguste Maquet and Alexandre Dumas.

At the eighth Leipzig Gewandhaus Concert, a new symphony in D minor, No. 3, by Jadassohn, performed under the composer's direction, was well received, especially as to the first movement. Mme. Schumann was the pianist.

At the Paris Odéon, "Hetman," a five-act drama in verse by M. Paul Deroulède, is in rehearsal. The action of the piece lies in the Ukraine, among the Cossacks, in 1646, and deals with the revolt of the latter against the Poles, their oppressors, under Vladislas IV. The respective conditions of the two nationalities at the epoch named are of a nature wholly to upset received traditions.

At the Paris Théâtre Lyrique, "Giralda," with Mlle. Marimon in the principal part, had been given for the last time. In awaiting the representation of the "Timbre d' Argent," for which a tenor named Eyraud, from Rouen, has been engaged, and who is favorably spoken of, M. Visentini produced the "Barbier de Séville" and the "Troqueurs."

RAILROAD AND STEAM-BOAT TRAVEL STOPPED.

PROVIDENCE, Jan. 4.—The Old Colony Railroad on the island of Rhode Island is completely blockaded by drifting snow. No train has reached Newport from Boston to-day. Two trains are snowed up near the coal mines at Portsmouth. The steamer, Newport, has not arrived, and no steamer for New-York leaves Newport to-night.

NEW-HAVEN, Jan. 4.—The Fall River steamer Newport, Capt. Simmons, one of the largest steamers plying on the sound, still lies in this harbor stuck fast on the beach, about 25 passengers remaining on board. This afternoon the steamer Traveler, of the New-Haven line, went down to her and began to take off freight. She is still at this work and it is hoped that by the removal of freight the Newport will be sufficiently lightened to float at high water at 9 o'clock to-morrow morning. If unable to get off in the morning more freight will be removed and the aid of steamers called for to pull her off. She lies easy and is not known to have been damaged. The Newport went aground owing to a pilot mistaking a buoy from which one ice had rubbed off the paint.

WORCESTER, Jan. 4.—Trains on all railroads are being delayed by snow, which blows in as fast as it can be removed. On the Boston and Albany Railroad this afternoon an engine and snow-plow ran into a freight train at East Brookfield. The snow-plow was completely wrecked and one locomotive badly damaged. The lookout on the plow saved himself by jumping. A train arrived on the Boston, Barre and Gardner road to-night, having occupied 24 hours in running eight miles. Another train on the same road is delayed at Princeton, after having run 20 miles in 16 hours.

THE LAKE SHORE WRECK.

INVESTIGATING THE CAUSES.

A FEW MORE ARTICLES RECOVERED—A RIGOROUS INQUIRY REGARDING THE CAUSE OF THE DISASTER BEING MADE—INEFFICIENCY OF THE ASHTABULA FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CLEVELAND, Jan. 4.—The workers at the wreck to-day were rewarded by the discovery of four watches. Three of these are very badly burned, and there is probably nothing left by which they can be identified. The fourth is somewhat discolored by the fire, but the name "Willie H. Bradley" can be plainly read. There was no person bearing this name upon the train, and the watch is supposed to have been carried by Mrs. Bradley, of California, and will be forwarded to her. A few bones and pieces of charred flesh, together with a seven-chambered revolver of the United States Arms manufacture, No. 30, in good preservation, are all the remaining articles that rewarded the diligent search. State Engineer Williams was to-day on the ground, examining every clue that might lead to the discovery of the cause of the disaster. It is intended, both by the State and railway officials to probe the matter to the bottom, and, both in the interest of the public and of science, to ascertain whether iron bridges can be trusted in the future. The Village Council, at their regular meeting last evening passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Fire and Water be, and are hereby, instructed to investigate the reason why the Lake Erie Fire Engine was not drawn out and put to work; and why the Protection Engine and Steamer did not throw water on the burning cars on last Friday night.

From this it will be seen that the feeling in the village is running high against the inefficient Chief Engineer and his men. The better class of citizens feel much chagrined that their town has had so inefficient a Fire Department, and desire, for the safety of their own property, that a thorough investigation be made, so that the blame may rest where it belongs. The work at the scene of the wreck is being pushed as fast as could be expected. The scaffolding is rising toward the top of the gloomy abutments, and the railroad company promises that a new bridge will be in place within a few days.

THE CORONER'S INQUEST—TESTIMONY OF ASHTABULA FIREMAN—WHY WATER WAS NOT THROWN ON THE BURNING CARS.

CLEVELAND, Jan. 4.—An Ashtabula special to the Leader gives the following account of the inquest: The Coroner's jury reassembled at 9 o'clock this morning. E. W. Lockwood was the first witness, and testified that he was at the pumping-house, near the depot, just before the accident; James Manning, engineer at the pumping-house, had just been telling him what a good engine he had; they had facilities for attaching hose in four or five places; did not say anything about attaching the village fire-hose at the pump-house; left the pump-house at 6:30 o'clock to go home; on his way met Train No. 5, which seemed to be all right; did not hear the crash as the bridge went down, the night being very stormy, but saw the light of the burning wreck immediately; did not go back till the next morning, when he examined the track and ties, but saw no indications of a train having jumped the track. There was no snow on the bridge when he passed over it.

The next witness was George Brake, who resides in Ashtabula. He heard the alarm of fire on the night of the accident, and being foreman of the Protection Company, hastened to the engine-house. Witness said: The team usually employed could not be obtained, and, as some delay was experienced in starting, it was probably three-quarters of an hour before we arrived at the railroad crossing. I asked why the engine already there was not at work, and was told by Mr. Strong that there was no use, as water could do no good. I still made endeavors to get the engine into operation, and asked Mr. Culver if I should take the engine down upon the ice. He answered that he had no authority in the matter. I examined and found no drag ropes or anything else to get the steamer down with, and I finally abandoned the idea. Neither the orders of Mr. Strong, nor those of any one else had any influence upon my action. I think then as now, that the fire could have been checked better by engines than by the use of buckets; I received an order from the Chief Engineer not to set the engine; some 20 or 30 buckets were being used in throwing water; Mayor Hepburn gave me no orders.

E. A. Hitchcock testified that he is foreman of the steamer Neptune; has been connected with the Fire Department nine years; met Mr. Strong before reaching the scene of the accident; asked him if the Fire Department was needed; Mr. Strong replied: "I don't think we want any water;" I then told the driver he had better not try to take the engine down, as the snow was very heavy; went immediately to the wreck; wondered that they did not want water on the fire; had not seen Chief Knapp or Fireman Brake up to that time; met Mr. Strong, and said, "Is there any need of water being thrown?" Mr. Strong replied that he thought water was of no use; this was his reason for not putting on water; his opinion is that by using water as soon as it might have been used more lives would have been saved; the steamer was ready for use soon after it was on the ground, and if it had then been used thinks the fire could believed been extinguished and more bodies might have been identified. He would have proceeded to throw water on the fire if not for the order of Mr. Strong.

THE FUNERAL OF P. P. BLISS.

ELMIRA, Jan. 4.—The funeral services over the remains of the late P. P. Bliss, one of the victims of the Ashtabula disaster, are to be held at Rome, Bradford County, Penn., about 25 miles south of this city, on Sunday next. He was born and reared in that vicinity. Rev. Drs. Goodwin and D. W. Whittle, of Chicago, are to conduct the exercises.

MORE VICTIMS FROM ROCHESTER.

The Rochester Union of Wednesday evening says: "More victims have been added to the list of those from our own city who perished in the direful calamity at Ashtabula. One was the wife of Mr. G. E. Palmer, who resided at No. 48 Caledonia avenue. Some months ago her husband went to Milwaukee to establish himself in business. Having succeeded in perfecting his arrangements, his wife made preparations to join him there. In the interim she had passed a good portion of the time in Binghamton, from which place she originally came. She returned to Rochester recently, had all their household goods packed up and shipped to their new home, and then started on the train leaving here on that unlucky Friday morning. Mr. Palmer, on learning of the disaster, repaired immediately to Ashtabula, and after waiting until Sunday identified the remains of his wife among the dismembered and blackened corpses, recognizing them by the jewelry which she wore. Mrs. Palmer was the daughter of Hon. James Van Valkenberg, of Binghamton, and was brought up under the most cultivated and refined influences. She was an unusually intelligent, well-educated, and bright woman. She was a member of the Congregational Church and an earnest Christian. Mr. and Mrs. Palmer had been married eight years. The bereaved husband left Cleveland yesterday with the remains of his late wife for Binghamton, where the funeral will take place. The other victim from this city just discovered is Miss Martha Volk, whose parents reside on Hollister street. She was a young lady of 16 years, and much respected among those who knew her. She left on the fatal train in charge of Mr. Charles Vogel, of Albany, who was also killed. Her father went to Ashtabula Monday, and through him her remains were identified. The body of Mr. Vogel was also recognized by articles of clothing."

AN OSWEGO LADY PROBABLY LOST.

The Oswego Times of Wednesday evening says: "It is feared that Mrs. Thomas T. Reed, of this city, was among the victims of the terrible calamity at Ashtabula last Friday. She was visiting relatives in Syracuse last week, and on Thursday started for Cleveland, Ohio, to visit a sister and brother-in-law. Her husband, knowing of her intention to visit Cleveland, immediately on hearing of the accident, telegraphed and wrote to Syracuse to find out whether she was on the ill-fated train. It was not until yesterday that he became certain that she was upon the train. He then telegraphed to Cleveland, and to-day received a reply from Thomas Hitch, his wife's brother-in-law, that his wife had not arrived in Cleveland; and had not been heard from. Mr. Reed is a mate of terrible anxiety, left for the West on the 1:10 P. M. train to make further inquiry. It seems but too probable that his wife was among those who perished at Ashtabula."

THE MAY-BENNETT AFFAIR.

THE RUMORED PROSPECT OF A DUEL—STATEMENT OF A FRIEND OF MR. BENNETT—BOTH GENTLEMEN IN THE CITY LAST NIGHT.

The reports in circulation about town yesterday afternoon to the effect that Mr. Bennett and Mr. May had left the City for the purpose of fighting a duel are entirely without foundation. Notwithstanding the assertions to the contrary on the part of Mr. Bennett's friends, it may be stated on most excellent authority that that gentleman was in town last evening, while Mr. May was seen on the street as late as 9 o'clock. It cannot be affirmed with any degree of certainty, however, that a hostile meeting between the two gentlemen will not take place. On the contrary, such an unfortunate result is more than likely to occur. A personal friend of Mr. Bennett stated to a TIMES reporter yesterday afternoon, that he had argued long and earnestly with Mr. Bennett to dissuade him from allowing himself to be drawn into any hostile act against Mr. May. He had tried to impress upon him the absurdity of such a course, and that he had assured him the whole affair would soon be forgotten. "In short," said he, "I tried my best to prevent Mr. Bennett from sending Mr. May a challenge, but after all it may be that he has." Other of Mr. Bennett's friends have also been putting forth their utmost endeavors in a similar direction, but it is feared they have met with but indifferent success at best. Should Mr. Bennett challenge Mr. May, there are strong grounds for saying that the gauntlet thus thrown down will be promptly taken up.

Those most intimately associated with Mr. Bennett stated yesterday that that gentleman had gone, or was going, to Washington, and the fact, as received by telegraph last evening, that a dispatch was awaiting the gentleman at the Arlington House, gives color to the assertion. There are several historic dueling grounds in the immediate vicinity of the national Capitol, such for instance as Bladensburg and the Chain Bridge, and it cannot be stated positively that the principals in this unfortunate affair will not exchange shots upon one of these. The May family are natives of Washington, and are widely known throughout that section of country, where they have a host of warm friends. For this reason, if for no other, Mr. May, who would have the choice of ground as well as weapons, would naturally seek that locality for the transaction of any unpleasant business of the nature evidently contemplated. At all events the next 24 hours will doubtless throw a deal of light upon the affair.

ALLEGED PREPARATIONS FOR A DUEL.

It was rumored late last night that preparations had been made for a hostile meeting in Canada, between James Gordon Bennett and Frederick May, his assailant of Wednesday afternoon. The report is that the arrangements for the meeting were completed on Wednesday night, and that John G. Heckseher and another gentleman immediately departed for the North. It is asserted they are to act as seconds to Mr. Bennett. Furthermore, it is reported that when Mr. Bennett went to his home after the rencontre on Wednesday afternoon he sent for his counsel, Mr. John Townshend, and upon that gentleman's appearance dictated to him the terms of his will. Thus, if a duel takes place, and Mr. Bennett is mortally hurt, the disposition of his property appears to be provided for.

SKETCH OF JOHN G. HECKSHER.

Mr. John G. Heckseher, the gentleman who, it is said, will act as Mr. Bennett's second in the proposed duel, is well known in this City. He is well qualified to act in such an affair. Several years ago he had some experience at dueling in Canada, his adversary then being Mr. Winnie Gray. Neither of the participants in that affair was hurt, but, from what can be learned, the cause of the meeting between them was of such a scandalous nature that their breach is not yet healed. Mr. Gray was, previous to his duel with Heckseher, a very wealthy man. He has since become reduced in circumstances, and is now in the employ of Mr. James Gordon Bennett. Mr. Heckseher was in his youth an officer, with the rank of Captain, on the Staff of Gen. Philip Sheridan, and as such served during the war.

JAMES GORDON BENNETT SAID TO HAVE GONE TO BOSTON.

HARTFORD, Jan. 4.—James Gordon Bennett and a friend passed through here on the express this noon, closely closeted in a drawing-room car. They had tickets for Boston.

SLEIGHING IN WASHINGTON.

A THRONG OF GAY TURN-OUTS ON PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—The intense cold, which commenced here some days ago, still continues. The snow is fully 15 inches deep, and to-day all the gay world of Washington appeared on Pennsylvania avenue in sleighs of every conceivable form and fashion. Many of the attachés of the foreign legations and others drove really magnificent turn-outs, but the majority of people were in old-fashioned cutters that had done service in the days of Jackson—light wagons and other vehicles, and even old packing-boxes set on runners. At 4 o'clock there were several thousand people on the avenue to witness the unusual display. One sleigh, which attracted a great deal of attention and excited much amusement, was drawn by four mules and contained eight or 10 persons disguised as plantation negroes. A number of the other sleighs were occupied by persons masked and in fancy costumes. Among the pleasure-seekers were a number of Congressmen and two or three well-known Senators.

THE WEATHER.

INDICATIONS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5—1 A. M.—In the Middle States, falling barometer, south-west to south-east winds, and warmer, partly cloudy weather.

In New-England rising barometer, stationary or slowly rising temperature, westerly winds, and generally clear weather, probably succeeded in the western portions by falling barometer and winds shifting to southerly.

OVER ONE HUNDRED PRISONERS POISONED.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Jan. 4.—Over 100 prisoners at the Penitentiary are ill with symptoms indicative of poison. An investigation of the subject has developed nothing except a surmise that the sickness was caused by eating bread compounded of a certain kind of baking-powder which had been on hand for some time. None of the cases are considered serious.

A FALL THROUGH SIX STORIES.

BOSTON, Jan. 4.—John Stout, an employe in the Revere Sugar Refinery at Cambridge, fell through the elevator opening, from the sixth to the first floor, and was instantly killed.

PARDONED BY GOV. HARTRANFT.

POTTSVILLE, Jan. 4.—Ephraim Phillips, who was convicted last Summer of issuing false tax receipts in Newcastle Township, Schuylkill County, Penn., was pardoned to-day by Gov. Hartranft.

ARMY MATTERS.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 4.—It is understood that the military authorities have orders to transfer 3,000,000 pounds of ordnance and ordnance stores from Baton Rouge to New-York, including 400 barrels of powder, guns, shot, shells, &c.

THE LYKENS VALLEY MINE.

HARRISBURG, Jan. 4.—Advices from Lykens up to 10:30 P. M., state that the fire in the Lykens Valley Mine is still raging.

A PASTOR INSTALLED.

Rev. Alexander McFarlane was last evening installed as Pastor of the Hanson Place Baptist Church, Brooklyn. The installation sermon was delivered by Rev. Dr. P. S. Henson, of Philadelphia, "the welcome to Brooklyn" by Rev. Dr. J. W. Searles, the "charge to the Pastor" by Rev. Dr. Thomas Armitage, of New-York, and the "charge to the church" by Dr. J. B. Thomas. The newly-installed Pastor delivered the benediction. The church was crowded.

THE MUNICIPAL SOCIETY.

IMPORTANT MATTERS DISCUSSED.

A VALUABLE PAPER BY MR. C. L. BRACE ON THE SCHOOL AMENDMENT—AN IMPORTANT REPORT ON THE EXTRAVAGANCE OF THE CITY GOVERNMENT IN THE MATTER OF WAGES TO PUBLIC SERVANTS—OTHER MATTERS OF INTEREST.

A regular meeting of the New-York Municipal Society was held last evening in the rooms of the society on Madison avenue, the President, Hon. Dorman B. Eaton, in the chair. It was announced that no change had taken place in the financial condition of the society except that a prominent corporation, which objected to the publication of its name, had contributed $2,000 to its treasury. Mr. Woodbury Langdon, Mr. W. L. Strong, Mr. E. Van Valkenburgh, Mr. E. H. Perkins, Jr., Mr. Theodore Mead, Prof. Henry Draper, Mr. Henry E. Pellew, Mr. Jonathan Edwards, Mr. Charles Lanier, Mr. George H. Yeaman, and Mr. James H. Dunham were elected members. Ex-Mayor William H. Wickham, Herman H. Camman, Mr. Levern D. Moulton, George Nash, and Morris K. Jesup were proposed for election. Mr. C. L. Brace read a paper on the school amendment, which was substantially as follows:

After alluding to the fact that in the English cities the attempts of the school boards to sweep away industrial schools and merge them in board schools had proved unsuccessful, he said that the industrial day and night schools of the Children's Aid Society now number 21 day and 14 night schools, and contain an aggregate number of children reaching 10,345, with a daily average attendance of 3,629, of whom 2,293 are the children of drunken parents, and 1,254 have been little beggars. They are exceedingly poor, many half-clad and barefooted, some ragged and verminous and unclean, others nearly starved or weak from the want of proper food, all ignorant, uncared for, and inclined to vagrancy. They need peculiar treatment and management; much patience must be shown them, and great efforts be made to improve their moral ideas and habits, and irregularity of attendance must be permitted. They must be cleaned, and means of bathing and washing be provided. They require, besides common school teaching, some industrial instruction. As they are improved by these industrial schools, they are forwarded to the public schools or to places of work, or they find situations themselves. Without the help they receive in food and clothing, their poor parents could not afford to send them to school. As it is, they are allowed each day to be absent a portion of the time for newspaper selling, or whatever is their ontside occupation—a thing not possible in a well-regulated public school. Nor could any public school authorities be safely intrusted with such eleemosynary duties as are thrown on these schools.

Were it attempted to force these street children into the ward schools, the effect would often be that the children of the decent mechanics and respectable poor would leave the school. Nor would such children long remain themselves in our public schools, if they were arrested for truancy, the courts would have an army of poor children on their hands who were partly supporting their families, and who would be imprisoned for trying to keep themselves above pauperism. The courts would inevitably, after a time, turn them loose again upon the streets. What is needed for them is schools adapted to their habits and their wants. To the 10,000 children in the industrial schools, through the year, of the Children's Aid Society, must be added some 5,000 more in similar schools of the "Home of the Friendless." These, and a few other schools of the private charities, are supported partly by private charity and partly by the tax known as the State "School Fund." This is a tax laid upon this City in proportion to its property and its number of children of school age; the proceeds are then distributed, a certain sum being allotted to the average attendance at the schools each village, town, or city. Owing to the great concentration of property in New-York City, and the large number of children of school age, more money is raised by this tax than is allotted to the City. We thus send away every year several hundred thousand dollars of the school moneys from our schools to the country schools. By an act of the Legislature, passed April 17, 1862, the schools of the Children's Aid Society are permitted to share in the school fund precisely as the public schools. They are also under the rules and regulations of the Board of Education; they are examined by the Assistant Superintendents of the board; their teachers are mainly licensed by the same authority; all sectarian or religious instruction is strictly forbidden, and the sessions are opened by the Lord's Prayer and a reading of the Bible without note or comment, precisely as in the ward schools. The average expense per pupil in the Industrial Schools of the Children's Aid Society in 1876 for teachers' salaries, rents, books, food, and clothing, with the daily average attendance of 3,629, was $75.194, or less than $20 for each child per annum; of this sum, $36.995 came from the school fund tax. We learn from the report of the Board of Education for 1875 that the whole number of children in attendance in the City schools that year, including those in the corporate schools, was 228,697, the average daily attendance being 168,543. The total expense for the year, including the corporate schools, was $3,375,104, making the average yearly expense for each child a little over $31, this expense not including interest on capital, or any outlay for food or clothing.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

During the last session of the Legislature, a form for the "School Amendment" was presented, drawn up by the President of your society, so long known for his public efforts, and approved by most of those interested in reform. This amendment was only excluded rightly from a share in the public moneys all church schools, on all schools where sectarian instruction was given, and required any that received these moneys to be under "the rules and regulations of the authorities of education." This amendment passed the Senate, and secured satisfaction in the House, but in the very last form it changed, excluding all schools from a share in the public moneys which were not "wholly under the control and supervision, and in charge of the public school authorities." Thus amended, in the hurry of the close of the session, it was accepted by the Senate and finally passed. The present form is not more effectual than the other in excluding church or sectarian schools; indeed it does not apparently exclude private schools at all. It is feared, moreover, that this form of the amendment would shut off the industrial schools of the Children's Aid Society from a share in the school moneys and thus compel them to be closed, leaving a great body of very destitute and exposed children on the streets, and this at a time when the ward schools have not nearly enough room for the children of the self-supporting and decent poor, and when the compulsory law, if it be executed, should force in the street children to the industrial school. There would, too, in this amendment, be no gain to the burdened tax-payers of this City, for the moneys from the school tax would go to the country schools, instead of to ours in schools for the poor. The amendment in the form drawn up by your honored President would exclude all church and sectarian and private schools from any share in the school moneys, and thus secure our public school system from being invaded by sectarian bodies. All schools enjoying the benefits of public moneys would then be placed under the rules and regulations of our State and county authorities of education, which all forbid any sectarian instruction. But such unsectarian schools would be left to enjoy a portion of public support, on the ground that they were doing a needful work of charity and reform, whose cessation would be an injury to the public interests; the State wisely concluding that it is for its advantage to encourage private aid in the great charities to the needy and ignorant classes. Your committee, then, would urge that the form of school amendment passed last year by the Senate be the one which shall be recommended to the Legislature this year, as preventing abuse of public moneys, and yet preserving important interests.

Mr. Eaton expressed his appreciation of the importance of the subject treated by Mr. Brace, and said that he did not know precisely what the promoters of the amendment meant. But he supposed it meant that none of the public money should go to any school not in a building owned by the school authorities. To seat semi-barbarous children with the children of decent people would be to empty the schools. That alternative is not possible, and if the amendment proposed is adopted, the only other that remains would be to deprive the poor children of any education or improving influence whatever. And if we sit here, said Mr. Eaton, and see those men at Albany, who know little about the facts at issue, pass the amendment as it now stands, without saying something at this time, we are unworthy of the name of a municipal society.

The paper of Mr. Brace was adopted, and on motion of Mr. A. L. Whitney, it was resolved that the society recommend the passage by the Legislature of the constitutional amendment as offered by Mr. Brace.

AN IMPORTANT REPORT.

Mr. Rush C. Hawkins read the following report:

The committee appointed, under a resolution of Nov. 16, 1876, to report upon certain matters connected with labor and other services performed for the City Government, and to ascertain, what, if any, political assessments are collected from the employes of the City, submit the following report:

First—Inquiries have been made in the several departments having charge of constructions, viz.: Departments of Public Works, Parks, and Docks, and it has been ascertained that two of these departments are now paying $1 60 per day of eight hours, or 20 cents an hour for unskilled labor, and that the Park Commissioners are paying two dollars for the same number of hours. It is a notorious fact that for a long time past, and at present, the supply of labor has been much greater than the demand. Private contractors for more than a year past have paid from 90 cents to $1 25 to a common laborer for a day's work of ten hours, to men capable of using the spade, shovel, pick, and wheelbarrow; and for labor a grade higher, to men who are capable of mixing all kinds of mortar, carrying the hod, building scaffolds and laying foundations, from $1 25 to $1 50 for the same number of hours. It is believed that 20,000 laboring men could be procured within 48 hours for from 90 cents to $1 per day, and that a large number could have been procured for that pay at any time within the last two years. Mechanics are also being employed from 20 to 45 per cent. They are getting from $3 to $4 50 for eight hours from the City, while private contractors are paying from $2 to $2 50 for 10 hours. A copy of a letter concerning the pay of certain kinds of labor, signed by several gentlemen of great experience in matters connected with contracting, is submitted as a part of this report.

Second—The rates of wages paid for all kinds of service by nearly every department of the City Government, are largely in excess of those paid by private parties. Take as an example the courts, which have upon the City pay-rolls 309 employes, many of them court attendants, who stand at the doors of the court-rooms, and occasionally perform some other insignificant duties. For these services they receive $1,200 a year; for this particular kind of service $600 would be ample, and it is believed that any number of capable men could be procured for that sum. Others of these employes receive from $1,200 to $5,000 per year. A plan for the reduction of numbers of employes and their salaries, and the salaries of the Judges, is herewith submitted, which, if adopted, would bring the total expenses of our local judiciary down to about $473,600, thereby saving to the City $741,995 40 per annum. The rates of pay denoted by this plan average about 25 per cent. above those paid in any other State.

Third—The fact seems to be self evident that the clerical forces are paid about 35 per cent. more than is paid by merchants and others for like services, and in those payments there seems to be a great lack of ordinary business discretion. So-called clerks, who occupy positions of no responsibility, are, in many instances, drawing nearly as much pay as those who perform a large amount of labor and occupy positions of the greatest responsibility. Many of these clerks, who are receiving from $1,500 to $2,500 a year, could have their places filled by others equally capable for about $1,000 for the same term.

Fourth—The clerical labor performed for the City ought to be done for about 60 per cent. of the present cost; there should be a great reduction in the number of clerks employed; some of the commissions ought to be reduced in numbers and others discontinued; incapables, inefficients, and political sinecures should be expelled from all the departments and none but competent men employed, and they should be paid what their services are reasonably worth. The extravagant pay of policemen and firemen is beyond all precedent. The former should receive $800 the first year, $900 a year for the next five years, and afterward $1 000. The firemen $800 the first year, and afterward $900. In these two departments a saving of $1,200,000 could easily be made without impairing the efficiency of either service. Drafts of bills for re

MESSAGE OF GOV. BEVERIDGE—REVIEW OF STATE AFFAIRS—THE PRESIDENTIAL CONTROVERSY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 4.—The Message of Gov. John L. Beveridge to the Illinois Legislature will probably be delivered to that body to-morrow. In substance it is as follows: The Governor announces the finances of the State to be in a gratifying condition. The interest-bearing debt is $1,458,464; the bonded debt, $1,480,600. It is thought the Illinois Central Railroad fund will, in a few years, discharge the public debt—principal and interest. The Governor does not recommend taxation for the payment of bonds on the first Monday of the present month in New-York City. The amount to be raised by taxation for general purposes for the years 1877 and 1878 need not exceed $1,500,000. The Governor calls attention to the fact that the contingent appropriations of the last Assembly were not sufficient to meet the expenses of the State Government. No provision was made for defraying the incidental expenses of this General Assembly, nor for paying $285,000 of the State debt, which is payable in the City of New-York. The 12 public institutions receiving State aid have lived within their income. At the close of the fiscal year each had a surplus on hand—a condition of our public institutions unprecedented in the history of the State. The Asylum for feeble-minded children will be ready for occupancy on the 1st of July. The receipts for school purposes in 1875 and 1876 were $19,554,393 64; expenditures, $16,335,499 55. The Governor recommends the annual appropriation of $1,000,000 for the school system. The canal tolls in 1876 were reduced 33⅓ per cent., and the receipts were larger than in 1875. The net revenues of the canals and locks, he recommends, be set apart for the improvement of the State rivers. The policy of State inspection of grain, under the warehouse system, is touched upon at length, the Governor, expressing his belief in the relative rights of corporations and people, and the necessity of amicably adjusting the same. The Assembly is congratulated upon the new State-house, the amount expended on the same being $3,500,000, and an additional appropriation is recommended for its completion. The State Penitentiary at Joliet is self-sustaining, and its morale much improved. In 1875 and 1876 there were 1,560 convicts received and 1,305 discharged. There are 1,600 in the institution. The enlargement of the penitentiary is recommended, and that another be built in the southern part of the State. The Governor recommends that assistance be given the Executive in the discharge of the responsible duties of pardoning criminals. Legislation is recommended fixing the responsibility of bank stockholders, and protecting depositors. The Militia law also needs revision. The unserviceable arms in the arsenal should be sold, and the arsenal buildings and grounds repaired. On the subject of taxation the Governor dwells at length on the imperfection of the present revenue law, and calls for some remedy in the matter of over valuation and collection of assessments. To prevent non-payment he suggests a penalty by adding a certain per centum, monthly, for failure to pay after a certain time. A reorganization of the courts is recommended, so that the increasing legal business may be attended to.

In conclusion the Governor says: "At the close of my Administration, and in view of the fact that the nation has lately passed through the excitement of a popular election, and the public mind is more or less agitated by the results of the election, it may not be improper in me to express my confidence in the wisdom and patriotism of the American people, peaceably to adjust all difficulties. I advise moderation, invoke wise counsels, and supplicate peace. We want no more war. The blood of the late fratricidal strife still reddens the earth; the graves of fallen are yet fresh and visible; their widows and orphans are still living among us; the griefs and sorrow of the heart are yet unassuaged, keeping in grateful remembrance the heroic sacrifice for our country. Let us lay hands of animosity and bitterness, heal the broken hearts, build up the waste places, and bind all sections of our beloved country forever together by the bands of love and prosperity. No matter how the Presidential question may be eventually decided by the proper authorities, for one I shall willingly submit to the decision and join all persons of every party for the maintenance of law, the preservation of public order, and the protection of all citizens of every race, color, and condition, in the full and peaceable enjoyment and exercise of all their rights, privileges, and immunities under the Constitution and laws.

GOV. BAGLEY'S MESSAGE—CONDITION OF THE CHARITABLE, EDUCATIONAL, AND PENAL INSTITUTIONS OF THE STATE—THE LIQUOR-TAX LAW COMMENDED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

DETROIT, Jan. 4.—The State Legislature held its first regular business session to-day and listened to Gov. Bagley's retiring Message, which was read to the Joint Convention in Representatives' Hall by Major George H. Hopkins, his Private Secretary. Gov. Bagley was absent by reason of the death of his brother on Monday last in New-York. The Message was a long one and filled with important statistics and recommendations. The following is a condensed abstract of the document: The charitable, educational, and penal institutions of the State are valued at $3,910,500; there are 105 chartered banks in the State with a capital of $165,733,000, and individual deposits of $18,357,875. The salt product for the past two years has been 2,544,594 barrels; the iron product for 1876 was 967,000 tons, and of ingot copper 18,000 tons. The bonded debt of the State has been reduced $851,142 within the past four years, and to-day, less the funds on hand for its payment, is but slightly in excess of $650,000. The school census shows 457,782 children of school age, of whom 342,947 are enrolled in the schools. There are 5,917 school-houses, with 419,662 seats. The value of the buildings and grounds is $9,382,270; indebtedness of the districts, $1,674,175; number of teachers, 12,900; total annual expenditure for educational purposes in the State, $5,000,000. The institutions of the State are all reported as in a thriving condition. The new State House of Correction at Ionia will be ready for occupancy next May, and the new Eastern Asylum for the Insane at Pontiac is under good headway, and will be finished next year. The new Capitol will be completed by the time of the next legislative session, and will cost, with furniture, about $1,400,000. It costs the State $572,000 a year to support its poor; $722,000 is invested in county poor-houses, which cost $207,000 a year to maintain. The annual value of the pauper labor is estimated only at $8,000. The suggestion is made that the counties be authorized to unite in establishing district poor-houses, by which the expense of maintenance may be reduced. Michigan now has 35 railroad companies, operating 5,311 miles of road, 3,346 of which are in the State. The cost of the roads has been $154,532,665, representing $30,945 of debt and $27,046 of stock per mile. The charters of the Michigan Central and Lake Shore roads become amendable by a two-third vote of the Legislature, and Gov. Bagley recommends that their rate of taxation be equalized with that paid by other property, and that suit be commenced against the Lake Shore Company to compel the payment of about $300,000 of back taxes which he regards as equitably due to the State from that corporation. He also recommends that the State take effective measures to protect all holders of policies in life insurance companies organized in other States, and advises that the Legislature require all policies to be non-forfeiting, as is the case in Massachusetts, and that the State designate a form of policy as simple as a promissory note, and of verbiage of which no technical advantage can be taken. The Governor calls attention to the dangerous laxity of the State's banking laws, and recommends a surveillance similar to that imposed by the National Banking act. The gross taxation of the State is about $15,000,000, of which only one-thirteenth is State tax. The Governor commends to the cities and villages the example of the State in economical government and light taxation. He also suggests the collection of taxes semi-annually instead of annually. The Governor warmly commends the operation of the liquor tax law, which has been on trial for two years in this State, and recommends the heal ing of some minor defects in the statute. He fortifies his recommendations with some important figures. In 1875 the number of liquor-dealers assessed was 4,974, of whom 4,515 paid their tax. The remainder probably retired from business. In 1876 4,553 were assessed and 3,385 have paid. The Governor believes that the law has lessened the number of saloons in the State 2,000 below the total of 1874, and that now there are about 4,000 only. The amount of the tax collected has been over $800,000, and reports from four of the principal cities show a decrease in the number of arrests for drunkenness under the law of from 3,974 in 1874, to 2,228 in 1876. The Message was listened to with general interest. Gov. Crosswell will deliver his inaugural address to-morrow.

VARIOUS OFFICIAL DOCUMENTS.

MESSAGE OF GOV. RICE, OF MASSACHUSETTS.

BOSTON, Jan. 4.—Gov. Rice was inaugurated at 12:30 o'clock, and delivered his Message. It shows that the net reduction of debt during the year has been $336,000. Last year the net increase of debt was $4,421,360. The decrease this year is mainly to be credited to the payment of the Union Fund Loan of $1,431,000, which was provided for by the sinking fund. The increase of the debt has been $1,100,000, as follows: Worcester Hospital, $350,000; Danvers Hospital, $450,000, and harbor improvements, $350,000. The exhibit shows that there has been no increase of railroad loans, a decrease of war loans, and an increase of ordinary loans from $3,393,280 to $4,713,980, which gives a net reduction as above stated. Unless increased by special Legislative grants, a State tax of from $1,200,000 to $1,400,000 will be ample to meet all the expenses. This will be the smallest State tax raised since 1861. The Governor shows that the decrease of valuation of real and personal property is so great that extraordinary expenses may not be delayed till a more favorable time, and is of opinion that the minimum of depreciation has been reached, and that we are already on the ascending plane of resumption and increase. The four prominent suggestions of the Message may be briefly stated: First—The appointment of a special commission to collect and revise all existing statutes in regard to pauperism, crime, and insanity, whose duty it shall also be to suggest more efficient management of public institutions, with a view to their greater efficiency at less cost. Second—To make the educational advantages better adapted to the great middle class of the population, that new industries may be introduced, and that the schools may impart practical knowledge which will be useful to the people. Third—That the Legislature shall devise as speedily as possible some plan for the active management of the Troy and Greenfield Railroad and Hoosac Tunnel; and, fourth, a revision of the law relating to Coroners, their number and appointment. The Governor makes no direct allusion to national politics.

MESSAGE OF GOV. CONNOR, OF MAINE.

AUGUSTA, Jan. 4.—Gov. Connor was inaugurated at the joint convention of both branches of the Legislature this forenoon and read his annual Message. The Message states that the debt of the State, after deducting the amount of the sinking fund, $791,293 81, amounts to $5,192,107. He estimates that a tax of three and one-fourth mills on the dollar will meet the financial requirements of the ensuing year. He remarks that the substitution of imprisonment for life for the death penalty has not been followed by an increase of crime. No new savings banks have been organized during the past year. The amount of deposits in the 60 banks was on Nov. 6, last, $27,818,764 70, or an average of $306 for each depositor. Since 1875 four savings banks have become insolvent, and three others have suspended payment. The Governor suggests an amendment to the Constitution, requiring the Governor to issue a certificate of election to every person who has been declared elected a Representative in Congress, and that the authority conferred upon the Governor and Council to count and declare for any person all votes intentionally cast for such person for any office to be extended to include all officers whose election is declared by them; and further, that when a return is fatally defective it may be made lawful to substitute a duly attested copy of the record therefor. He concludes the Message as follows: "A heated Presidential contest has not been followed, as is customary, by the unacknowledged election of the candidate of one party, and the ready submission of the defeated party to the result; but there is no present reason for foreboding. Partisan clamor will be hushed in the majestic presence of the law of the land when the time comes for it to manifest and assert itself. We cannot doubt that the tribunal upon which devolves the settlement of the vexed question, composed of men chosen of the nation for wisdom and patriotism, will establish the right by clear proof of law and ancient custom, and that the general voice of a law-abiding people will accept their decision."

In joint convention, this afternoon, J. C. Chadbourne was elected Secretary of State; L. A. Emery, Attorney General; J. E. Cilley, Adjutant General; and E. H. Banks, Treasurer.

ORGANIZATION OF THE INDIANA LEGISLATURES.

INDIANAPOLIS, Jan. 4.—At 10 o'clock this morning the State Senate organized by the election of T. B. Buchanan, Independent, as Principal Secretary; R. D. Slater, Democrat, as Assistant Secretary; and Richard Huchings, Democrat, as Doorkeeper, Senator Major, Independent, voting with the Democrats, and giving them 26 votes to 24 Republican votes. The House elected John Overmeyer, of Jennings County, Speaker; Cyrus T. Nixon, of Marion County, Clerk; James Cole, of Tippecanoe County, Assistant Clerk, and D. S. Baldwin, of Grant County, Door-keeper, (all Republicans,) by a vote of 54 to 44. After the organization both Houses adjourned to 2 o'clock P. M. The Governor's Message will not be delivered until to-morrow, and the inauguration of the Governor will take place on Monday next.

MESSAGE OF GOV. PILLSBURY, OF MINNESOTA—SENATOR WINDOM RENOMINATED.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 4.—The Message of Gov. Pillsbury was delivered before the Legislature in joint session to-day. It is of considerable length, and treats of State matters exclusively. In Republican legislative caucus to-night, Hon. William Windom was unanimously renominated for United States Senator.

ORGANIZATION OF BOTH HOUSES IN MISSOURI.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 4.—Both houses of the Legislature organized to-day; the Senate by selecting J. J. O. Morrisen, President pro tem., and Daniel Able, Secretary; and the House by the election of J. Williams, Speaker, and George W. Frame, Chief Clerk. Governor Hardin's Message will not be delivered before Friday, and Gov. Phelps' inauguration will probably take place Monday next.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, Jan. 4, 1877.

There are in the national cemeteries, and in the soldiers' lots at Camp Chase, Rock Island, and Elmira, nearly 17,000 graves of citizens and Confederate soldiers, prisoners of war, whose names are known—about 6,500 of the former, and 10,500 of the latter. Of the $1,000,000 heretofore appropriated for head-stones at all the cemeteries, there will remain about $200,000 after the completion of the work now under contract. The Secretary of War asks that $60,000 of the above-mentioned sum be appropriated for grave-stones in the cemeteries at Camp Chase and Elmira.

Judging from the exceeding reticence of Treasury detectives and the principal officials of the Department, the mystery attending the recent robbery of money sent from the cash-room increases. Private detectives are at work, in addition to the force of secret agents belonging to the Department. The lips of all are sealed as to what course is being pursued, or what parties are particularly suspected.

Lieut. Commander A. H. McCormick is ordered to examination for promotion; Lieut. Edward H. Green is detached from the Constitution and ordered to the Alliance; Pay Director Joseph G. Eldridge is detached from duty as Inspector of the Navy-yard at New-York, and ordered to settle his accounts; Paymaster Edwin Stewart is detached from duty in the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, and ordered to the Navy-yard, at New-York, as Inspector, &c.

The question of the appointment of a Commissioner of Patents in the place of Judge Duell still remains unsettled. The Secretary of the Interior declines to say to whom the position has been offered. As it will probably last only for two months, some difficulty seems to be experienced in obtaining a person whose abilities are regarded by the Department as of a character to thoroughly fill the position.

Quite a sensation was created in this city tonight by the knowledge of the fact that the President to-day, through the Attorney General, addressed a letter to the Board of Police Commissioners requesting the immediate resignation of its members. No reasons were assigned for the demand. Recently very serious charges were printed in this city asserting collusion on the part of the Police authorities with the gambling fraternity by which the latter have been enabled to pursue their avocations without molestation, and the result has been an investigation of the subject by the Board of Commissioners which, though not yet concluded, has been, it is intimated, sufficient to impress the President and the Attorney General with the belief that a reorganization of the board is necessary. The board as at present composed consists of Messrs. William G. Murtagh, President; C. H. Nichols, Vice President; H. M. Sweeney, Treasurer; James G. Barrett and William H. Smith, declared

RITUALISM IN ENGLAND.

A VICAR'S DEFIANCE OF THE COURT OF CANTERBURY.

THE ST. JAMES CHURCH, HATCHAM—THE CRUSH AT THE HIGH CELEBRATION—THE CEREMONIES PERFORMED—THE REVEREND GENTLEMAN'S ALLUSIONS TO THE "CRISIS"—SEVERAL POLICEMEN PRESENT.

The London correspondent of the Manchester Examiner and Times of Dec. 18 writes: "A crisis has at length been reached in the history of the so-called Ritualistic school within the Church of England, for although the sentence of inhibition pronounced by Lord Penzance against Rev. Arthur Tooth, Vicar of St. James', Hatcham, was formally served on Saturday, and was duly affixed to the church door, yet yesterday not only was the document torn down from the outside of the building, but it was absolutely and entirely set at defiance within. In taking this course, Mr. Tooth has departed from the precedent of St. Alban's, Holborn, and St. Vedast's, Foster lane, for in those cases Mr. Mackonochie and Mr. Dale yielded at once, and absented themselves from their churches after their inhibition, whereas the Vicar of Hatcham has, it is no secret, determined to test in his own person the powers of the Judge and of the much-abused Public Worship Regulation act.

The church yesterday morning was crowded to its utmost capacity, for not only had the regular congregation assembled in full force, but a contingent had been contributed by several of the leading Ritualistic churches of the metropolis, and notably by St. Peter's, London Docks, and St. Alban's, Holborn. Among the clergy the Vicars of these churches, 'Father' Lowder and 'Father' Mackonochie, were present to testify their sympathy with Mr. Tooth, and some of the leading laymen of their congregations were also in the church. It was, in fact, anticipated by many of the people that the Bishop of Rochester, following the example of the Bishop of London in the St. Vedast case, would have come down to conduct the service, in which case a 'scene' would inevitably have ensued; and at some stalwart representatives of the Church of England Working Men's Society had arrived, resolved to defend 'the faith,' as they subsequently affirmed, it is perhaps as well for the credit of the Church of England that the Bishop did not put in an appearance. Practically, however, Dr. Claughton is no longer Bishop of Rochester, and he will probably leave it to his successor or to the Archbishop of Canterbury to deal with the case. Be this as it may, no interference was attempted yesterday, and Mr. Tooth was left to follow his own devices, his protest against the authority of Lord Penzance appearing on the doors in the place where his Lordship's inhibition of the contumacious ecclesiastic ought to have been.

'Missa' ever, 'the high celebration' commenced, and despite the gloom of the semi-penitential season of Advent, to which the Vicar alluded in his sermon, the sacrarium presented a sufficiently ornate appearance. On one of the ledges above the 'altar,' which was vested in appropriate colors, were the six candles, only lighted, the two 'altar lights' not being lit. On a ledge apparently forming part of the reredos, stood out the images of five angels, with blue bodies and golden wings, and in front of the central figure was a large cross. The walls of the sacrarium were effectively draped; and when an apparent stranger to the building and its services came up and asked the writer of this notice whether it was really an English Church, the question was by no means unnatural, the adjuncts of the Latin ritual being so fully supplied. Mr. Tooth 'celebrated' without the aid of his brother clergy, although several were present in the chancel, perhaps owing to a desire not to involve them in any responsibility for his acts. He read the Epistle standing with his back to the people, and read the Gospel turned slightly toward them; and it may be noted as a 'use' adopted in but few churches that the people remained kneeling during the reading of the Epistle. The 'celebrant' wore a violet vestment, on which, at the intersection of the arms of the cross on the back, there appeared to be a gold plate or embroidered design of considerable size. During the collection of the offertory a hymn was sung, and then while the incense was prepared and the celebrant proceeded to cense the altar and the sacred vessels, his vestment being held up by an attendant. The celebrant was next censed by the thurifer, a boy vested in scarlet cassock and alb, with scarlet girdle and skullcap; and after this censing of persons and things had been accomplished, the direct intervention of the law, the process of filling the chancel with the fumes was carried forward, the thurifer standing on the south side of the altar and swinging the incense to and fro until a fog seemed to envelop celebrant and his assistants.

The Gospel was then proceeded, and Mr. Tooth in pronouncing the absolution deliberately made the sign of the cross in the air toward the people. While he was saying the 'comfortable words' two of the boys, presumably acolytes, vested in crimson cassocks, albs, and girdles, came before him and bowed, and left the chancel, returning shortly after with two lighted candles as tall as themselves, which they held as they stood by him. When the 'Sanctus' was commenced they raised the candles above their heads, and at the 'Ter Sanctus' the boys stood still elevating the candles while the bell of the church was rung. This ceremony was repeated with slight variations at the consecration prayer. At this, the most solemn moment of the service, the celebrant's vestment was raised at the back, the candles were lifted high above the boys' heads, the church bell was rung, and the incense was freely used, until, when the priest consecrated the wine, he elevated the cup as high as his arms would reach above his head, and thus the act both of ritual and of delusion was complete. During the singing of the 'Agnus Dei' Mr. Tooth made a variety of genuflexions, and the scene was one which proved conclusively how completely it has been possible, little by little, to change the aspect of an English church until one is hardly able to distinguish it from a sanctuary of the Church of Rome.

Any attempt to comply with the rubrics, which requires that 'there shall be no celebration of the Lord's Supper, except there be a convenient number to communicate with the priest according to his discretion,' was obviously foreign to the intention of the celebrant. When he had received the sacrament himself he turned partly round and paused, perhaps for an instant; but although a lady immediately moved from her seat at the west end, and nearly reached the top of the nave, intending to go up to the altar, he did not wait for her, but proceeded immediately with the Lord's Prayer. Thus not only was there no communicant since services ceased in February, but a threatening communicant was deliberately prevented from approaching the altar, a proceeding probably seldom witnessed in the National Church. The service was then brought to a close, and so quickly was it conducted that, including the sermon, it only occupied about an hour and a quarter.

In his sermon, Mr. Tooth made several allusions to 'the crisis,' and glorified St. John the Baptist as the representative of the virtue of suffering, which the preacher was careful to show must not be confounded with penitence for sin, or as a mere remedy for sin, but must be regarded as a separate and distinct power in the economy of the incarnation. The Catholic Church of the present day was, the preacher argued, called, like St. John the Baptist, to the exercise of suffering, and he expressed his conviction that she would have strength to fight in the conflict which so evidently awaits her, a conflict not only with Protestantism but with infidelity. Mr. Tooth asked his people not to exhibit contempt toward those who differed from them; and, for himself, he argued that he was not guilty of any defiance of authority, but simply was doing his duty. 'When an unholy influence, an unhallowed thing, is brought to bear upon a priest for doing that which he has done for years, would you,' said Mr. Tooth, 'call it defiance if he resists? I call it doing his duty;' and with these words he abruptly closed his discourse.

The service over, a psalm was chanted, followed by the 'O Sacrum Convivium,' the celebrant meanwhile standing before the altar, with the thurifer and candle-bearers behind him, forming a not ineffective tableaux. When they turned to leave the chancel the organist commenced a voluntary; but the congregation were not disposed to depart, nor to be disappointed of an opportunity of giving vent to their feelings, and in lusty fashion they commenced singing, or rather shouting, 'Faith of our fathers.' With this the proceedings closed; but even then the people seemed loth to leave the church, and they congregated outside until Mr. Tooth and his friends passed through the garden to the vicarage. There were several policemen on the spot in anticipation of a disturbance, but the crowd passed away quietly, some working men asking 'where old Rochester was?' and bestowing somewhat uncomplimentary epithets upon his Lordship for what they regard as his share in, or assenting to the original prosecution. An impression seemed to prevail among the better-informed members of the congregation that as Dr. Claughton is to be translated to the see of St. Alban's the probability is that Archbishop Tait will interfere before another Sunday comes round. At present the public legally know of no incumbent, as Mr. Tooth is inhibited and no one has been nominated to take his place."

THE TEXT OF THE INHIBITION.

From the London Times.

The following is the text of the inhibition as served upon the Vicar: "James Plaisted, Baron Penzance, Judge of the Provincial Court of Canterbury, to all and singular literate persons in and throughout the said Province greeting: Whereas, in the matter of a representation made in pursuance of a Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874, in which Rev. Arthur Tooth, Clerk, Vicar of St. James' Hatcham, in the diocese of Rochester, the person complained of, a monition was issued by us, and duly served on the said Arthur Tooth, commanding him to abstain from certain practices, and to remove the second altar; and, whereas, it has been made to appear before us that the said Arthur Tooth hath failed to pay due obedience to the said monition, we do therefore hereby order that for such his disobedience, he, the said Arthur Tooth, be inhibited for the term of three months from the time of the publication of this inhibition, and thereafter until the same shall have duly relaxed, from performing any service of the Church, or ecclesiastic exercising the cure of souls within the said diocese, and we hereby do command that you, or some of you, do, on Sunday next, or on the Sunday next after the receipt by you of these presents, previous to the commencement of divine service in the Parish Church of St. James', Hatcham, aforesaid, by affixing these presents on the said church, and leaving thereon affixed, a true copy hereof, notify to him, and to all others whom it may concern, that he the said Arthur Tooth, is inhibited, suspended, and prevented from the performance of the Church or otherwise executing the cure of souls within the said diocese, and herein fail not."

ICE-BOATS.

HOW PHILADELPHIA EMPLOYS THREE OF THEM.

From the Philadelphia Ledger, Jan. 4.

Whenever a severe Winter fills the Delaware River with ice the public have their attention drawn to the ice-boats and their performance of duty in keeping the navigation of the river open. The city has three powerful ice-boats, which have been in almost continuous service since the present severe season began. We are informed by men who know the river that this has been the severest season for ice known since 1856, and that no Winter for twenty years has produced such formidable obstructions to navigation. While in ordinary seasons these three ice-boats would be able to satisfactorily meet all the demands upon them, it would take a much larger fleet in a season like this to look after every navigation interest along the city front, and in a river 105 miles long to the sea. The primary duty of the ice-boats, as we consider, is to keep the navigation of the river open; that is, they are to keep open a channel between the city and the sea, so that vessels may pass up and down during severe Winters the same as at other seasons. Subject to this, it is also their duty to assist vessels that get jammed or blockaded by the ice—a duty the performance of which every one will commend. It is also a natural deduction from their keeping the navigation open, that they shall assist vessels to pass through the channel thus opened; otherwise it might be an absurdity to open the channel at all.

The ice-boats are maintained by the city exclusively, and the Trustees who have them in charge are men who have a complete knowledge of the navigation interests of the port. The principal trouble with the Delaware River during the ice time arises from the "Horseshoe," and it is absolutely necessary to keep the channel there open. Hence the Trustees keep two of the three ice-boats employed there practically all the time, while the third one is generally employed in towing, so as to assist vessels up and down the river. The system of working at the Horseshoe is to cut the ice out upon the ebb tide, working from below, so that it may run down with the tide, the belief being that, as the tide runs down the river seven hours out of twelve, the floating ice can in this way be carried gradually down stream. The boats are not employed thus absolutely all the time, for they go to the assistance of vessels whenever necessary, but this is the general system of operations.

The actual towage of the ice-boats is proportionately but a small part of their service. In mild seasons they can do more towage than in severe ones. Their towage receipts all go into the City Treasury, and average from $10,000 to $12,000 in ordinary Winters. This season, however, they are doing so much less towage than usual, that the Trustees say their receipts will not exceed $5,000. There are very few tugs on the river that can get through the masses of floating ice at this time without the assistance of the ice-boats, and hence, if towing is to be done at all, the ice-boats have to do a large proportion of it.

There has been much difficulty at times in crossing the Camden ferries, owing to the masses of floating ice. If the river was blockaded so that the ice did not move at all, the ice-boats would have an easier task. They could keep open their own paths, and not have the moving masses to contend with. But it is impossible to keep the river open for navigation up and down without having the ice broken up and floating. An open ferry passage and an open channel thus seem to be, as it were, conflicting, and the ferry-boats consequently have greater obstacles to contend with than if the river were frozen solidly across.

A PHYSICIAN MURDERED.

The Dubuque (Iowa) Times of Sunday, Dec. 31, says: "From Conductor M. A. Wolcott, of the C. D. & M., we learn the particulars of a double homicide, which took place at La Crosse yesterday morning. About 10 o'clock, as Dr. Chamberlain, a well-known and much respected physician of that city, was driving down Main street in his cutter, a man named Oscar Weninger stepped from a store with a double-barreled shot-gun in his hand, and stopped him. After a moment's conversation he presented the gun at him and discharged one of the barrels loaded with buckshot. The Doctor sprang from his cutter and started toward the store, but when he reached the sidewalk fell, exclaiming, 'I am shot!' He was carried into the store, where he expired in about 10 minutes. When his murderer saw him fall he placed a revolver against his own forehead, pulled the trigger, and sent a leaden message of death through his own brain. He fell, and was carried into the store where his expiring victim lay. At 12 o'clock, when the train left, he was not yet dead, but his death was expected at any moment. The murdered man was a physician of fine standing, who had acquired a competence by his professional skill and had endeared himself to the poor of the city, whose friend he always was in sickness and distress. He was 60 years of age, and leaves a wife and one or two children. His murderer is about 45 years of age, and also a man of family, having a wife and four or five children. In addition to the double-barreled shot-gun he was armed with two revolvers. Six months ago, it is stated, he said that he would kill the Doctor before the end of the year, and he kept his word too well. Mr. Wolcott failed to learn the cause of the terrible deed."

HOW IT AFFECTED HIM.

The other day, the Burlington Hawk-Eye says, some of the boys induced a young man from Flint Creek to take hold of the handles of a galvanic battery. As it puckered him up he roared, "Jiminy Criminy, let up! Who ever heard of a thing that could make you taste green persimmons with your hands, before?"

DEALING WITH CRIME.

REPORT OF THE ACTION OF THE COURTS OF POLICE AND SPECIAL SESSIONS—NUMBER OF ARRESTS IN 1876 AS COMPARED WITH 1875—THE CONFLICT OF AUTHORITY BETWEEN POLICE JUSTICES AND CORONERS—VALUE OF THE STATE EXCISE LAWS.

The following is a summary of the Board of Police Justices' report for the year ending Oct. 31, 1876: Number of arrests disposed of, 87,307; of these 63,789 were males and 23,518 females, of whom 39,180 males and 17,904 females were held. These figures include 258 male and 93 female witnesses who were either bailed or committed to appear in cases. There were discharged 24,587 males and 5,612 females, and 22 cases of males and two of females are pending. There was an increase in the number of arrests over 1875 of 2,908, but deducting the excess of excise cases over 1875, the increase would be reduced to 435. The increase in the number held was composed of 2,339 males and 90 females, and is mainly accounted for by the increase in the number of excise cases. It is suggested that a revision of the laws relating to gambling and lottery cases is desirable, so that distinctions now made should no longer exist, making offenses which seem to call for equal punishment in one case a felony, and in another a misdemeanor. There were arraigned for felonies 3,947 males and 511 females; for misdemeanors, 13,745 males and 1,732 females; for gambling, 228 males and 1 female; for violation of lottery laws, 324 males and 7 females; as suspicious persons, 1,045 males and 29 females, and in summary proceedings 44,238 males and 21,143 females. The offenses charged as felonies include nearly 40 classes of cases; of those arraigned 2,656 males and 306 females were held for trial, making a total of 2,962 against 3,126 in 1875. On the charge of burglary and attempts at burglary, 754 males and 9 females were arraigned, of whom 595 males and 5 females were held for trial, making a total of 600 against 598 in 1875. On the charge of carrying concealed weapons, 27 males and 1 female were arraigned, of whom 19 males were held for trial, making 19 as against 26 in 1875. On the charge of embezzlement, 143 males and 1 female were arraigned, and 86 males held, making 86 as against 107 in 1875. On the charge of false pretenses, 197 males and 13 females were arraigned, of whom 112 males and 3 females were held, making a total of 115 against 103 in 1875. On the charge of felonious assault and felonious assault and battery, 468 males and 29 females were arraigned, of whom 333 males and 19 females were held, making a total of 352 against 356 in 1875. It is believed that the increased facility for a speedy trial of those charged with this grade of offense will tend to lessen its commission. On the charge of grand larceny, 1,077 males and 265 females were arraigned, and 691 males and 156 females held, making a total of 847 against 981 in 1875. On the charge of robbery, 213 males and 7 females were arraigned, of whom 158 males and 6 females were held, making a total of 164 against 142 in 1875. On the charge of larceny from the person, 564 males and 151 females were arrested, as against 565 males and 163 females in 1875. On the charge of homicide, 7 persons, all males, were arraigned, of whom 4 were held. In 1875 there were 10 cases of homicide. There have been occasional conflicts of jurisdiction between the Coroners and Police Justices. The Police are required to take immediately all persons arrested for any offense before the nearest sitting magistrate, to be dealt with according to law. The special and distinctive duties of Police Justices are to examine all persons charged before them with offenses against the criminal code of every name and grade, including all cases of homicide, from the lowest degree of manslaughter to, and including, murder. They cannot, if they would, escape this responsible duty in any case. But from long-time usage in this City some of the Coroners (perhaps sustained by public impressions,) seem to be of opinion that all cases of homicide come especially under their jurisdiction, even to the extent of interfering with, obstructing, and in some instances reversing the action of Police Magistrates having the cases in charge. Coroners are not sworn to inquire into the guilt or innocence of any person suspected of manslaughter or murder. The jurisdiction of the Coroner is simply to hold an inquest to ascertain the cause of death, and to issue process, if the result of that inquest shall show that anybody not already in custody is charged with crime. In cases when there is danger to apprehend the escape of the person chargeable with the offense, he may issue a warrant in advance of the inquest. His jurisdiction, however, cannot supersede nor interfere with the jurisdiction of the Police Magistrate to issue warrant upon complaint made for all felonies. A judicial interpretation of the questions at issue between the Police Justices and the Coroners, by a competent tribunal, would definitely settle all controversy. Such a determination appears desirable, and, even necessary, in view of the importance of the subject, and of the possible serious consequences which may attend improper or mistaken official action.

Misdemeanors comprise all classes of offenses, except felonies and those triable summarily by a mag strate. Misdemeanors are tried at Special Sessions, unless trial by jury is demanded, except in Excise cases, which, by statute, are sent to General Sessions. There are 45 distinct classes of misdemeanors. During the year, 13,745 males and 1,732 females were thus charged, of whom 8,962 males and 956 females were held, making a total of 9,918, of which 3,264 were Excise cases, against a total of 8,653 held in 1875. On charges of assault or assault and battery, 4,736 males and 641 females were arraigned, of whom 2,254 males and 274 females were held, making a total of 2,528, against 3,044 in 1875. On the charge of assault with intent to steal, 96 males and 6 females were arrested, making a total of 94, against 105 in 1875. Those charged with this offense were mainly boys. On the charge of cruelty to animals, 397 (all males) were arraigned and 325 held, against 227 in 1875. On the charge of keeping disorderly houses, 95 males and 137 females were arraigned, of whom 78 males and 103 females were held. There appears to be an erroneous impression that general bad character is sufficient to secure a conviction in this class of cases, and it is not unusual that discharges are granted for want of sufficient evidence. On the charge of violating the Excise laws 3,602 males and 62 females were arrested, of whom 3,177 were held, as against 990 in 1875, the excess being due to a more vigilant action of the Police authorities. On the charge of having in possession or dealing in improper literature 34 males and 1 female were arrested, of whom 32 males and 1 female were held. On the charge of petit larceny 3,874 males and 927 females were arraigned, making a total of 2,995, against 2,296 in 1875. The cases summarily disposed of consist mainly of intoxication, intoxication and disorderly conduct, and disorderly conduct alone, there being 25,296 of the first, 4,962 of the second, and 25,720 of the third class, making a total of 55,978. The remainder consist of vagrancy cases, 1,999; violation of corporation ordinances, 2,698; juvenile delinquency, 1,186; insanity, 744; abandonment, 401; disorderly persons, 149; bastardy, 101; habitual truancy, 95—to which are added 30 cases including minor offenses of various kinds, not classified, making a grand total of 65,381 summary proceedings' cases. Of those charged with intoxication, 17,888 were males, and 7,408 females, of whom 11,668 males and 5,679 females were held. Of those charged with intoxication and disorderly conduct, 3,352 were males, and 1,610 females, of whom 2,561 males and 1,339 females were held. On the charge of disorderly conduct, 16,094 males and 9,626 females were arraigned, of whom 8,989 males and 7,322 females were held. It is supposed that the State Excise laws are framed and executed for the direct and only purpose of regulating the use of intoxicating liquor in such a way as to prevent intemperance. If their efficiency in this regard is to be a test of their wisdom, they must be regarded as founded upon mistaken principles of public policy, or as imperfect in their prescribed method of execution.

In reference to cases of vagrancy, some measure should be adopted to prevent vagrants from other localities from seeking this City as the sphere of action for their peculiar mode of life. On the charge of vagrancy 2,996 males and 1,793 females were arraigned, of whom 1,960 males and 1,660 females were held, making a total of 3,620 against 3,151 in 1875. Of the total number of persons held for trial and convicted, amounting to 56,733, the several nativities are classified as follows: Ireland, 23,325; United States, 22,924; Germany, 5,929; England, 1,983; Scotland, 613; France, 527; Italy, 441; other countries, 801; not given, 191. In 1875 the total number held and convicted was 54,653. Following are the nativities of those arraigned for the special offenses named: Intoxication and disorderly conduct—Ireland, 17,636; United States, 13,531; Germany, 2,754; England, 1,281; Scotland, 456; France, 294; Italy, 124; other countries, 452; not given, 133. Felonies—United States, 1,866; Ireland, 522; Germany, 335; England, 102, Scotland, 35; France, 27; Italy, 28; other countries, 73; not given, 9. Misdemeanors—United States, 3,906; Ireland, 3,221; Germany, 2,050; England, 224; Italy, 127; France, 99; Scotland, 55; other countries, 157; not given, 67. Vagrancy—United States, 1,799; Ireland, 1,215; Germany, 276; England, 133; Scotland, 53; France, 35; Italy, 4; other countries, 45; not given, 17. The ages of persons held for trial and convicted are as follows: Under 14, males, 2,076; females, 565; total, 2,641; between 14 and 20, males, 5,069; females, 1,525; total, 6,594; between 20 and 30, males, 14,280; females, 6,946; total, 21,226; between 30 and 40, males, 10,396; females, 5,151; total, 15,547; over 40, males 6,545; females 3,576; total, 10,115; age not given, males 814; females 147; total, 961. The color of those held and convicted was white, 55,548; black, 1,536. The fines collected in the Police Courts amounted to $48,833 50, and in the Court of Special Sessions, $12,341 30. The Controller reports the amount received by him from the Warden for fines imposed in the Police Courts, and paid after full commitment, as $8,511, making a total of $69,185 80. The total fines collected in 1875 amounted to $72,495 05, and in 1874 to $71,287 25, making a total amount collected since the organization of the present Board of Police Justices, Nov. 11, 1873, of $212,971.

The Clerk of the Court of Special Sessions reports that during the past year there were received at that Court 5,604 cases, being 4,904 of males and 700 of females; that the number disposed of was 5,492, and that 112 cases were pending at the end of October. The number tried was 4,614, of which 4,020 were males and 594 females; 3,933 males and 435 females were convicted, 787 males and 159 females acquitted, and 758 cases were dismissed on account of the failure of complainants to appear, most of these being assault and battery cases, in which the parties had become reconciled or satisfaction had been made. In 1875, the number of cases received was 5,476, being 4,796 males and 680 females, and there were convicted 3,026 males and 413 females, a total of 3,439. The cases dismissed on account of failure to prosecute amounted to 835. The population and number of arrests in the several Police Districts for the past year were as follows: First District, population 102,630, arrests 15,774; Second District, population 269,391, arrests 14,932; Third District, population 286,374, arrests 10,179; Fourth District, population 270,558, arrests 6,777; Fifth District, population 75,393, arrests 1,799; Sixth District, population 36,206, arrests 327. The number of persons arrested who gave their residences as being out of the City was 4,687. A report of arrests by precincts shows that the greatest number, (7,125) was made in the Fourth, which, as to population, ranks as the Twentieth. In this precinct, which has a population of 21,621, there was a proportion of one arrest to every three inhabitants, but frequently the same person was arrested several times during the same year. This precinct is bounded by Broadway, Fulton, South, Catharine, and Chatham streets. The First Precinct, with a population of 4,000, shows 2,314 arrests; but in this, as well as in some other precincts, a large part of the arrests there made are for offenses committed by persons who live in other parts of the City. This precinct is bounded by Broadway, Battery, South and Fulton streets, and Battery place. In the Nineteenth Precinct only 3,394 arrests were made in a population of 105,887, or 1 to every 30 of the population. This precinct is bounded by Sixth avenue, the East River, Forty-second and Seventy-ninth streets. In the Thirty-third Precinct, (comprising part of the annexed district,) the population is 24,331, and the number of arrests 588, or 1 to about every 40 of the population. The precincts contrasted present extreme cases, and are sufficient for the purposes of illustration. Two statutes enacted by the Legislature have had a very salutary effect. One of these provides for the taking of bail pending examination for a person charged with a bailable offense, and the other provides that whenever a fine shall be imposed for a misdemeanor the court may limit the term of imprisonment, in default of payment, to a term not exceeding one day for each dollar of the fine imposed.

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON INTERNATIONAL COINAGE—A PROPOSED ADDRESS ON THE PRESIDENTIAL QUESTION VOTED DOWN.

The Special Committee on International Coinage reported through its Chairman, Samuel B. Ruggles, the report taking the form of a communication to the Director of the United States Mint, in which the committee urged upon him the necessity of an international commission on the subject, as the preliminary step to international coinage. Upon motion of Mr. F. A. Conklin, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the chamber hereby respectfully renews its recommendation and request made in May last, that the Government and Congress, in their discretion, institute the necessary measures for convening an International Conference to fix the relative values of gold and silver coins.

A communication was read from the Cheap Transportation Association requesting the co-operation of the chamber and other organizations in the City in an effort to secure an improvement in the terminal facilities of New-York. It was voted that the President of the chamber appoint a committee of five gentlemen to confer with the committee of the association. Upon motion of Mr. Lane, it was voted that the subject of freight discriminations against the City be referred to the Committee on Trade and Internal Improvements.

Mr. Isaac Phillips introduced a resolution providing that the chamber should signify its concurrence in the recent address of William E. Dodge and others to the President of the United States and Congress in reference to the Presidential election.

Mr. Eliot C. Cowdin said that without doubt any broker or merchant had a right to sign any document he pleased. He would not question the motives of the gentleman in whose address the chamber was asked to concur. Neither would he discuss the wisdom of the address. But as an officer of the Chamber of Commerce he would say that he thought the chamber had nothing to do with the matter. The vexed question would, he said, be settled in a legal manner, and addresses of the sort proposed were not, he thought, advisable. He moved to lay the whole subject upon the table. Mr. Phillips thought an opportunity should be allowed for discussion, but the chamber thought differently, Mr. Cowdin's motion prevailing almost unanimously.

Mr. Bacon stated that he had information that Mayor Ely and Controller Kelly would like to confer with the chamber on matters of Municipal policy, and moved that they be invited to attend the next monthly meeting. The resolution failed to pass, the chamber voting to refer the subject to the Executive Committee.

The meeting then adjourned.

THE BOARD OF ALDERMEN.

A PETITION FROM PROMINENT CITIZENS IN FAVOR OF RAPID TRANSIT — THE SCARCITY OF CROTON WATER.

The Board of Aldermen, yesterday, received a petition from a number of prominent and wealthy citizens, requesting them to take such action as may be deemed necessary to facilitate rapid transit. The petitioners state that the necessity of rapid transit has been recognized by the Legislature in passing an act providing for it, and also by the City authorities; that, after much effort and many disappointments, the Rapid Transit act was finally passed in 1875, and that at the beginning of the work, the Gilbert Elevated Railroad Company, which undertook to, at least partially, satisfy this necessity, was stayed by legal proceedings at the instance of the Sixth Avenue Railroad Company. The petitioners then declare that the claim advanced by the latter company that its rights are secured by the Constitution of the United States against all the powers of the people of this State, is offensive and oppressive in the highest degree. If such a claim was well founded, they say, it would be in the power of a horse railroad company to prevent any competitor from carrying passengers faster than they are carried now. The petitioners further state that the Sixth Avenue Railroad Company derive their rights from this City, which can, accordingly to their contract, compel them to give the road up to the City and abandon it on payment of the cost of construction by the City, and an advance of 10 per cent. over the outlay.

The petition, which was referred to the Committee on Railroads, when appointed, is signed by H. B. Claflin & Co., Brown Brothers, Drexel, Morgan & Co., William Turnbull & Co., Wetmore, Cryder & Co., Henry S. Oakley, Isaac P. Martin, William A. Wheelock, Shepherd F. Knapp, Dr. J. C. Forrester, and others.

Alderman Pinckney offered a resolution directing the Clerk to have the complimentary resolutions tendered to Mr. S. A. Lewis, the Chairman of the late board, suitably engrossed at a cost not exceeding $50—the amount to be charged to the City contingencies. As this resolution requires an expenditure of money, it was laid over under the rule.

Alderman Cornell moved that a portrait of ex-Mayor Wickham be procured for the Governor's Room, at an expense not exceeding $1,000. This motion was also laid over.

Alderman Tuomey presented a resolution providing for the appointment of a committee of five to inquire into the necessity of securing an adequate supply of water for this City. The resolution was adopted, and the committee will be appointed at the next meeting of the board.

THE NATIONAL RIFLE ASSOCIATION.

The Board of Directors of the National Rifle Association held a meeting at No. 23 Park row yesterday afternoon, Major Gen. Shaler, the President, in the chair. The Prize Committee was directed to have an additional number of gold badges made for life members of the association. The Range Committee reported that a shelter had been fitted up at the rear of the 1,000 yards firing point at Creedmoor for the convenience of long-range marksmen during the Winter. A resolution was adopted granting the free use of the range at Creedmoor to the American team of 1876 during the coming season of 1877.

A meeting of the American team for 1876 was held immediately after the adjournment of the Board of Directors, at which it was resolved that the next competition for the "Centennial" trophy should take place at Creedmoor in September next. This action was taken in compliance with the conditions adopted last year for governing the competition for the trophy, but if any of the foreign teams express the opinion that once a year is too frequent for holding the competitions, the American team will take other action.

THE CANAL BOARD.

ALBANY, Jan. 4.—At a meeting of the Canal Board to-day the following standing committees for 1877 were announced: Canal Administration, Bigelow, Fairchild, and Olcott; Construction, Van Buren, Rose, and Walrath; Commerce, Doxsee, Thayer, and Cadle.

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION....Jan. 4.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

In the Senate the petition of bankers and merchants of New-York in reference to the Presidential election was presented by Mr. Conkling and referred to the special committee on the subject. The bill of Mr. Wright, proposing a court to try contests for the offices of President and Vice President, was called up, and Mr. Wright spoke at length in support of the bill and in explanation of its purpose. Mr. Kernan spoke in reply to Mr. Wright and the bill went over.

In the House the Military Academy Appropriations bill was reported and made the special order for Monday next. It appropriates $265,161. The bill fixing the compensation of Marshals and deputies was taken up. An amendment striking out the clause limiting the compensation of deputies to $1,200 was rejected and the bill passed. A bill providing for salaries for United States Attorneys, instead of fees, was reported. The highest salary (that of the New-York Attorney) is fixed at $10,000. The bill granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Mexican, Florida, and Black Hawk wars or their widows was passed. The Consular and Diplomatic Appropriations bill was considered in Committee of the Whole without action. Leave was asked to introduce a resolution instructing the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into the present strength, occupation and location of the Army, why troops were ordered to Washington, the motive of the orders, to whom made, &c., with leave to send for persons and papers, but objection was made.

SENATE.

The CHAIR laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, in answer to the Senate resolution of yesterday, transmitting the annual report of the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California for the year ending June 30, 1876. Ordered to be printed and laid on the table.

THE PRESIDENCY.

Mr. CONKLING, of New-York, said: I have been requested to present a petition, weighty by reason of the subject to which it relates, and by reason also of the number and character of those who sign it. The petitioners are citizens of New-York, distinguished not only for their prominence as members of society, but for the large and varied interests they represent. They are men prominent in each of the great political parties of the country. I observe among the signatures names which at the recent Presidential election were found on opposing Electoral tickets. I observe the names of eminent bankers, merchants, manufacturers, ship-owners, scholars, professional men, and other names, long and honorably associated with leading enterprises and industries. It would be difficult to select in any State of the Union 150 individuals and firms who represent a greater amount of property, intelligence, and character, or who, as petitioners, deserve more consideration. The petition is brief, and I will read it.

He then read the petition of New-York merchants, bankers, and others, expressive of their pleasure at the appointment of a special committee by each House to devise means for the amicable count of the Electoral vote, and expressing the hope that all party considerations would be thrown aside, and pure, unselfish patriotism control the action of Congress.

Resuming his remarks, Mr. CONKLING said: In laying this petition before the Senate it may not be amiss to add an avowal of my sympathy with the appeal for orderly, lawful, and patriotic action. In executing the Constitution in any instance, and especially in an instance so grave as the one referred to, partisan feeling as a guide and rule of action can rightfully have no place. Obedience to law, observance of the Constitution, maintenance of truth, is not a party question or proceeding; it is beyond party and above party. Parties may contend, and I believe it wholesome in a free government that parties should contend over measures and candidates, but when the contest has been submitted to the ballot-box—the final arbitrament of popular contests known in our system—the only duty, the only lawful proceeding connected with it which remains is to find the honest and true result to declare it, bow to it, and stand by it. That is the duty of the hour. It rests on Congress. It rests on the Senate. It rests on the nation. It rests on every citizen of the Republic. That it will be done, and done peacefully, decently, and in order, these petitioners do not, I think, disbelieve. They, in common with all men, may derive confidence from the fact that interest and expediency, not less than patriotism and honesty, point in this direction, as the one lesson. Whoever stands on right and truth will not fall. Whoever attempts to stand on wrong and falsehood will be overthrown. I move reference of the petition to the select committee, to which it properly belongs.

It was so ordered.

THE PROPOSED COURT FOR THE TRIAL OF PRESIDENTIAL CONTESTS.

Mr. WRIGHT called up the bill recently introduced by him to establish a court for the trial of contested elections in the office of President and Vice President of the United States. He said: I concurred in the report of the Judiciary Committee recommending the passage of the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution for a different method of counting the Electoral vote, and gave it my support in the Senate. This I was induced to do, both because it seemed to be fairly just and equitable, and, if not positively so, was no better than the present. I yet thought it more likely to reach results which would command the approval and support of the people. I favored it also because I was ready to do anything legitimately within my power which might tend to allay the popular excitement, in so far as it obtains and solves in a manner as nearly satisfactory to all as possible, questions confronting the Senate and the people of the nation. In a like spirit I brought forward the bill to which I now invite the attention of the Senate. In so doing I shall aim to avoid for the most part any reference to what are known as disputed returns from certain States—questions which have already not a little engaged the attention of the two houses and the country. He then reviewed the provisions of the bill introduced by him (heretofore published) and resuming his argument said: It may be asked why not make the Judges of the Supreme Court this tribunal. I answer, because I deemed it best to steer clear of the point made by some that this court as one of original jurisdiction should not be called upon to decide, if it can be avoided, political questions; that whatever result was arrived at by them, their motives would be impugned, and the influence of this great and high tribunal impaired; and for the further reason, too, that however great my confidence that these Judges would decide the case according to very law and facts, uninfluenced by any possible political bias, I did not know but that there might be those who would feel otherwise. I am also anxious to have a tribunal, which shall be as nearly acceptable to all as practicable; one, if possible, against which no possible charge of political bias shall obtain. This may not be attainable, absolutely, but I would have it approximated if it is in the power of legislation to do so. I have selected a tribunal with judicial powers, and given the right to a final hearing before the highest court in the land; and this because I believe the people of this country have a more profound respect for this great co-ordinate department of the Government than any other. If they and we cannot feel assured that in these tribunals we may find integrity, and honesty, and purity—that in the courts the citizen can find protection in his rights and against his wrongs, then we had as well abandon the idea of self-government and become revolutionists and disorganizers. The man who is unwilling to have any great question affecting his rights, or the rights of the many, to these tribunals, admits either a want of confidence in their integrity, or that he seeks some unfair and unconscionable advantage. I have believed, and do believe, that to none other than a judicial tribunal could we so safely intrust such an inquiry; that in none other would the people have such confidence, and that from no other would we be so likely to obtain a decision which would be accepted with such unquestioning and general acquiescence. If in this I am mistaken then I confess I greatly misjudge the temper of the public mind. Believing that I am not, however, I have proposed this Board of Contest with the powers indicated. I believe this bill to be right in principle, whatever might be our surroundings. I believe the present condition of things renders it peculiarly appropriate, if not a possible necessity; but however this may be, I repeat that I believe it is right in principle, and that it is as perfect in all its details by any means as it should and may be made, nor that its proposed machinery is necessarily the best. I am not wedded to its methods; I care much more for the principle involved than for any details, for I believe it to be consistent with our popular form of government; in harmony with the hereditary love of our people for peaceful, legal methods, consistent with the rights of those seeking the Presidential or other office in this nation, abundantly supported by the legislation of every State in the Union; and not in conflict either with the letter or spirit of the Constitution. There are questions, for the most opinionless of which no better than the present, that the conveyance was not a deed, but merely a mortgage. In the present action it is treated as a mortgage, and the suit is to foreclose it and to recover from the defendants any deficiency arising from the sale of the mortgaged premises. Dimon, in his answer, asserts that he acted in the transaction merely as the agent for the plaintiffs. The alleged paper declaring the conveyance a mortgage, he says, was obtained by his father-in-law, Bentley, by means of deceit. The case is still on.

THE INDICTED MILK DEALERS.

Twenty-nine cases of milk dealers indicted on the complaint of the Board of Health for selling adulterated milk were on the calendar of the Court of General Sessions yesterday. When the first case was called Mr. William P. Prentice, counsel for the Board of Health, said that it was one of the cases which it had been agreed upon by counsel for the defense should be governed by the result arrived at in the trial of Daniel Schrumpf, convicted last week. Mr. Frank Lawrence, counsel for the Milk Dealers' Association, who represented 25 of the defendants, said that they were perfectly willing to abide by the result of the Schrumpf case. But that case was not finished yet. True, a verdict had been rendered against him, and he had been sentenced, but through the supplementary proceedings instituted he was now out on bail, pending the decision of the Supreme Court in his case, which would be given as speedily as possible. Under these circumstances, he thought it would be unjust to drive all the other defendants to trial until after the higher court had rendered its decision in the case of Schrumpf. Mr. Prentice opposed any further delay, but in view of the fact that the previous case had been tried by Judge Smith Sutherland, who was entirely familiar with the subject, Judge Gildersleeve sent the matter before his colleague, who will hear it on Monday next. The following milk dealers, who are not members of the Milk Dealers' Association, were then arraigned, and on the advice of their counsel pleaded guilty: Franz Pfleger, fined $50; James A. Miller, fined $50; George Schafer, fined $50; Elizabeth Geib, fined $5.

A GAMBLER SENTENCED.

On Dec. 30 William D. Horsley, an Englishman stopping at the Metropolitan Hotel, fell into the hands of a gambling-house "steerer" named Gregan, by whom he was induced to enter the gambling den kept by Joseph Harris, at No. 1 College place. Here the Englishman was initiated into the beauties of the game of "banco," and $242 of his money was speedily in the hands of Harris. He thereupon complained to the Police, and Harris was arrested and indicted for keeping a gambling-house. When the case was called by District Attorney Phelps in the Court of General Sessions yesterday, Harris pleaded guilty and threw himself upon the mercy of the court, stating that he had abandoned the gambling business, and would henceforward endeavor to support his large family honestly. Under these circumstances Judge Gildersleeve inflicted on him the lowest penalty in his power to impose—ten days' confinement in the Penitentiary and a fine of $10.

EIGHTH AVENUE ASSESSMENTS.

The matter of the regulating, grading, paving, &c., of Eighth avenue, between Fifty-ninth and One Hundred and Twenty-second streets, came up before Judge Donohue in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, on an application by counsel, representing the owners of thirty-seven lots on the avenue, for a certiorari by which to review the proceedings of the Boards of Assessment and of the Revision and Correction of Assessment. The assessments on the lots amount to $12,000, and the property-owners make complaint that their lots are not improved, but injured, by the grading, that some of the lots are now 18 feet lower than before, and that it will cost about $500 per lot to raise them on a level with the street. On the other hand it was claimed that this was an attempt to set aside the assessments by certiorari and that the Commissioners of Assessment were the sole judges in the matter. Judge Donohue took the papers, reserving his decision.

THE McCUNN ESTATE LITIGATION.

The two suits in regard to the estate of the late ex-Judge McCunn were brought up for trial before Judge Lawrence in the Supreme Court, Special Term, yesterday. Both suits were adjourned until to-day in consequence of the absence of some of the counsel. In the suit of Gano against McCunn it was claimed by the plaintiff that the Receiver of the estate should continue in possession until both actions are settled. The suit of Patterson against McCunn, which is brought to set aside the trusts under the testator's will, also provoked some discussion. The action is in the nature of an ejectment suit, because it is to try the title to property, and the defendants claim they have a constitutional right to have the issues tried by a jury. Judge Lawrence reserved his decision on these points until to-day.

COLLEGE LITERARY COMPETITION.

THIRD ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE INTERCOLLEGIATE LITERARY ASSOCIATION—A PROPOSITION TO FORM A MORE PERMANENT ORGANIZATION.

The annual convention of the Intercollegiate Literary Association met yesterday at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, and was called to order by Mr. E. H. Crosby, of the University of New-York, the President of the Association. When the roll was called eleven colleges were found to be represented by 33 delegates. The Secretary, Mr. J. H. Hemline, read the minutes of the last meeting, and the Treasurer, Mr. H. McMasters, of Hamilton College, reported $2,081 83 on hand, out of which are to be paid the expenses attending the exhibition in the Academy of Music on Wednesday night, and the prizes to be awarded to the successful orators and essayists. The report of the Executive Committee was read by Mr. J. M. Elliott, of Hamilton College. The Presidents of several of the colleges having met in an adjoining room, a committee was appointed to invite them and such of the Advisory Committee as might be with them, into the convention. The committee performed their duty and returned with President McCosh, of Princeton; President Webb, of the College of the City of New-York; President Cattell, of Lafayette; Chancellor Crosby, of the University of New York; Thomas Wentworth Higginson, and Charlton T. Lewis. At the invitation of Mr. Crosby, Dr. McCosh addressed the association. He said that he did not propose to give any advice. They had a common interest, and needed conference. There was no desire to leave the impression that the Presidents and judges possessed superior wisdom. The Intercollegiate Association had begun in the proper way—among its students—which was a much better way than it would have been to go to the faculties, who would probably have met them with objections without doing much to help them. If he had any suggestions to make it was not to find fault. The public contests had called forth considerable interest, stimulated speaking, and very severe study, and now it should be put on a permanent basis, in order that, when application should be made for pecuniary assistance, the merchants and others to whom application was to be made might be assured that the association was a permanent one. His experience had been that with such guarantees there was no difficulty in getting plenty of money. He would also suggest that the association extend its usefulness and hold examinations in the higher departments of natural history, philology, and mental science. Mr. Thomas Wentworth Higginson then offered for the consideration of the convention the following resolutions, prepared, by invitation of the standing committee, by the Committee of Presidents and Judges:

Resolved, That in our opinion the career of the Intercollegiate Literary Association has been in many respects successful as in the interest taken by the several colleges represented, the generosity of donors, the high character of the exercises, and the creditable results of the examinations.

Resolved, That the great need of the organization is of a more permanent element in its government, so that there shall be a representation in its management of the undergraduates of each college, of the faculties of each college, and of a body composing those who have acted as judges or have been prize men of the association.

Resolved, That if the association should concur in these opinions it is invited to appoint a committee to confer with a committee to be appointed by this meeting, with a view to reporting to an adjourned meeting of the association a plan of action.

Resolved, That in the opinion of those present it is advisable that the Faculties of the colleges represented at the intercollegiate contests, should take sufficient interest in the representation of the students to secure a careful selection, and also a selection some way under the guidance of the Faculties.

A recess was taken from 12 o'clock to 1, when the Committee on Nominations appointed at the morning session reported the names Mr. Eugene Frayer, of Cornell, for President; Mr. Harry Veghte, of Rutgers, for Vice President; Mr. John Krantz, Northwestern College, of Illinois, Secretary; and George W. Colligan, of St. John's, Fordham, for Treasurer. Also the names of Mr. H. B. McCauley, New-York University; J. S. Sherman, Hamilton; J. A. Hendrick, St. John's; John Krantz, North-western; J. S. Lehmaier, Cornell; E. M. Culver, Rutgers; R. H. McCutcheon, College of New-York; J. E. Aurlance, Williams; H. M. McDonald, Princeton; J. C. McKenzie, Lafayette; and E. L. Harris, of Syracuse, for members of the Standing Committee. The committee also presented the names of Thomas Wentworth Higginson, J. W. Reid, Charlton T. Lewis, Mr. Hyndman, B. H. Smith, M. Elliot, L. Kargé, and J. C. Tomlinson, as an Advisory Committee, and recommended that the Trustees of last year be continued in office. The report of the Nominating Committee, together with the resolution offered by the Presidents and judges, was unanimously adopted. A committee was appointed to report on the question of action to be considered at the meeting of the convention to be held Feb. 1.

Mr. Frayer having taken the chair a long debate ensued on a motion to amend the constitution so that a two-thirds vote of the members of the association shall be required to admit a college to membership. A resolution that candidates for admission shall be undergraduate members of not more than one year's standing in one of the regular college courses excited prolonged discussion. After a vain effort on the part of the conservative members to secure the passage of the resolution, which was framed for the purpose of excluding smaller or irregular colleges, consideration of it was postponed until the meeting on Feb. 1. The time for the payment of the annual association dues was fixed for Nov. 1. A motion to admit Madison University to membership was lost, but was afterward reconsidered and fully debated, when it was decided by the necessary two-thirds vote to admit the university. Wesleyan University was also admitted. The thanks of the association were extended to Mrs. Astor and others for pecuniary assistance, and to Messrs. Darling & Griswold, of the Fifth Avenue Hotel, for the gratuitous use of the room in which the convention met.

CAPTURE OF A BELGIAN FORGER.

About a year ago, Henry Yserbyt, a man largely engaged in cattle dealing and farming in the town of Coyghen, Belgium, fled to this country to escape punishment for a series of forgeries in which he had been detected. Among his victims was the Bank of Courtrai, which had discounted paper forged by him to the amount of 116,000 francs. But this bank's loss was only about one-half of the aggregate amount obtained in forged paper by Yserbyt. On his flight being discovered, the Belgian Minister to the United States placed the matter of the reclamation of Yserbyt in the hands of Messrs. Coudert Brothers, lawyers in Pine street, who employed a special agent to discover the fugitive's whereabouts. He was traced from New-York to Chicago and St. Louis, and finally was heard of in New-Orleans. In the meantime he had engaged in cattle dealing and farming in the West. The State department issued a warrant for his arrest, and on the 22d of December he was taken into custody, and he arrived in this City yesterday. He confessed his guilt, said that he had lost all the money that he brought from Belgium, and was both willing and anxious to be sent back. He was taken to Ludlow Street Jail, and is to have an examination on Saturday before Commissioner White.

A STEAM-SHIP ASHORE IN THE LOWER BAY

The steam-ship Greece, of the National line, Capt. Andrews, which sailed from this port for Liverpool yesterday morning, went ashore on the west bank, at 11:45 A. M., in the Swash Channel. A fresh north-west wind was blowing at the time, and the channel was full of floating ice. Mr. McKenzie, the agent in this City, sent a tug to her assistance, and said he had been informed that the Greece would float off easily at high tide, which would occur at 12:30 this morning, and that it would not be necessary to disturb the cargo. The tug Cyclops, belonging to the Coast Wrecking Company, went out to the Greece yesterday afternoon, but returned to her other immediately afterward, having found that her assistance was not required.

BUSINESS FAILURES.

John Friedrick assigned his property to Herman Obelfelder yesterday.

Theodore F. Allen and Josephine Allen, composing the firm of Allen & Co., have assigned their property to Richard Esterbrook.

The liabilities of Kingsbury, Abbott & Hulett, straw hat jobbers at Nos. 554 Broadway and 92 Crosby street, amount to $107,000; the assets are not known.

A PILOT SUSPENDED.

The Board of Pilot Commissioners yesterday acquired into the charges made by the Captain of the British steam-ship Quangtse against Pilot Isaac Saynor, who was in charge of that vessel when she ran ashore on Oyster Island, near Bedloe's, on Dec. 18. The testimony showed that the pilot, being informed that the compasses of the Quangtse, which is an iron vessel, deviated, left her guidance to a tug-boat, and paid but little heed to her himself. The Commissioners decided to suspend Saynor from the performance of the duties of a pilot. The Quangtse at the time of running ashore had just arrived from China, via the Suez Canal, with a cargo of tea valued at $1,500,000.

THE STREET-CLEANING FUND.

Police Commissioner Nichols, Chairman of the Street-cleaning Committee, has made application to the Board of Estimate and Apportionment for the transfer of $60,000 from the unexpended balance of the Street-cleaning Fund of 1875 to the appropriation for 1877, for the purpose of removing the snow and ice which at present render the streets almost impassable. Mr. Nichols says that if this request is granted and the money placed to the credit of the Police Department he will at once proceed to clear Broadway and the principal thoroughfares, all the preparations for that purpose having been made by Capt. Gunner, of the Street-cleaning Bureau, in anticipation of the appropriation.

A SERIOUS BAR-ROOM QUARREL.

AN EXPRESSMAN DANGEROUSLY INJURED—AN AFFRAY OF WHICH THE POLICE SEEM TO BE IGNORANT—NO ARRESTS MADE.

Herbert H. Muxlow, an expressman, who keeps a feed store at No. 1,296 Third avenue, is now lying dangerously ill at his residence, No. 167 East Seventy-seventh street, from erysipelas, the result of injuries received during a fracas on Tuesday evening last. The affray occurred in the liquor store of Edward Handley, No. 1,304 Third avenue, and from the statement made by the injured man it appears that on the evening in question, as he was passing Handley's liquor store, he was hailed by Thomas Connolly, who called him into the place. When he entered he found there Handley, the proprietor, James McKnight, Patrick Farrell, and another man whose name he did not know. He was asked to treat for the new year, and refused. Some one proposed to throw dice for the drinks. He threw dice and lost, and thereupon treated all in the place. McKnight then came up to him and without any provocation struck him in the face, knocked him down, and then jumped upon him. The bartender ejected them, and Muxlow went off in the direction of his store. When he arrived there he was accosted by Farrell, McKnight, and the stranger. Farrell came up to him and pretended to brush some snow off his coat, and the three men then made a combined and sudden attack upon him, knocked him down, and beat and kicked him in a most brutal manner. Farrell, he alleges, also drew a knife and cut him across the face, wounding him severely. At this juncture Michael Rolahan, one of Muxlow's employes, appeared on the scene, and the assailants fled and made their escape. The wounded man was taken into his apartments, and Dr. Gregory was called to attend him. He is badly cut about the face and head, and has received internal injuries.

Connolly, the bar-tender in Handley's liquor store, says that Muxlow came into the place of his own volition. He quarrelled with McKnight, and both having been ejected, the quarrel was renewed outside, and Muxlow received the injuries from which he is now suffering. During the fracas McKnight was badly cut across the face and head by Muxlow, and has since that time been confined to his apartments at No. 206 East Seventy-fifth street. Farrell is an engineer, and lives in Seventy-fifth street, near First avenue. The Police have made no arrests, and it is apparent that they know nothing about the affair. Deputy Coroner Goldschmidt called at the residence of Muxlow yesterday, but did not deem it necessary to take his ante-mortem deposition, as he is not supposed to be in immediate danger.

A FORTUNATE ESCAPE.

THE EXPERIENCE OF A SLEIGHING PARTY—CARELESSNESS OF A FERRY-MASTER ENDANGERS THE LIVES OF SIX PERSONS.

A party of six persons drove out to Astoria from New-York, Wednesday evening, by the Ninety-second Street Ferry, for the purpose of having a sleigh-ride and of visiting some friends. The party consisted of the owner of the sleigh, Mr. John Blokman, No. 431 East Eighteenth street, and his son; Mr. May, a coach-maker, who resides at No. 414 Second avenue, his wife, and two daughters, and a gentleman who is a friend of the family. On their return home they took the Ravens wood road, as they had been informed that the boats ran irregularly and that the ships were blocked with ice at the Ninety-second Street Ferry. When they reached the ferry at Thirty-fourth street, at 10 P. M., the gates were closed, though the boat was in the slip. Mr. May dismounted from the sleigh, paid the fare, and after a few minutes delay the policeman who was stationed at the gate suddenly threw it open and told the driver to "drive ahead." Mr. Bickman obeyed the order, and was not aware of danger until the horses stumbled at the edge of the slip, where he thought the ferry-boat was fastened. He strove to rein up the horses, but they fell headlong into the water, between the receding boat and the slip. Fortunately the sleigh did not follow; as while the horses were struggling between the boat and the slip, Mr. Bickman and Mr. May instantly jumped off, stooped the sleigh, and helped the terrified occupants out. The horses were drowned, but the passengers were saved. Mr. Bickman says positively that the guards or chains were down, and that for some unaccountable reason he was detained about five minutes outside the gate while the boat was in the slip, and that the officer told him to drive on, and that he, Mr. Bickman, did so, not suspecting that the boat was already leaving the slip. He further adds that but for the swinging pole attached to the sleigh, which bent downward as the horses fell into the water, the whole party would have been drowned.

NORTH CAROLINA BONDS.

MEETING OF CREDITORS OF THE STATE—A COMMITTEE OF ARBITRATION APPOINTED TO ADJUST MATTERS.

A meeting of North Carolina bondholders was held yesterday morning at the Clearing-house Mr. Frederick Taylor, of the firm of Frederick Butterfield & Co., was called to the chair. Mr. Taylor stated the object of the meeting. It was not a meeting of any particular class of North Carolina bondholders, but was meant to include every creditor of the State who might be present. The purpose of the meeting was to appoint gentlemen of high reputation, disinterested persons, who should form a board of arbitration between the creditors of North Carolina and the State herself. The State could certainly afford to pay something, and ought to pay something. The creditors on the other hand ought, perhaps, to consent to some compromise. This suggestion had been laid before several parties having the largest interests and had met their approval. It was proposed that the bondholders should intrust certain gentlemen with the arrangement and settlement of their claims. The gentlemen whose names had been entertained by the prime movers in the matter were not bondholders, and had no interest directly or indirectly in any claims upon the State. They could approach the authorities of the State impartially, and could obtain a complete schedule of the State's assets and liabilities and its present and future ability to pay. Then, with full knowledge of the whole matter, considering less what was due to the bondholders than what the State was able to pay, they could propose a plan for the readjustment of the debt upon a basis fair and just to both creditor and debtor. The State would recognize a generous disposition on the part of the bondholders, and the authorities would be put upon their honor and compelled to meet the advance of the creditors with an earnest effort at settlement.

After some discussion the following resolution, offered by Mr. John G. Denny, was adopted:

Resolved, That George S. Coe, B. B. Sherman, J. D. Vermilye, S. Thorneyer, and Enoch Pratt be appointed a committee of arbitrators between the State of North Carolina and the holders of its bonds, and that they be authorized, for and on behalf of the bondholders, to take such action as they deem wise to secure, if possible, a settlement of the debt of the State of North Carolina upon a basis that shall be equally considerate of and just to the State and the bondholders.

The gentlemen named in the resolution were sent for by a special committee, and, coming into the meeting, signified their acceptance of the trust tendered them.

A NEW-JERSEY OFFICIAL INDICTED.

James M. Brann, Clerk of Hudson County, N. J., was arraigned in the Court of Quarter Sessions yesterday, to plead to two indictments for libel found against him by the present Grand Jury. The first indictment charges him with having, on Oct. 20, 1875, caused to be published and distributed a circular containing malignant attacks upon the character of M. Mullone, editor and proprietor of the Jersey City Argus. The circular is said to have been of a most scurrilous character, and was distributed at a Democratic mass-meeting at the Catholic Institute, of which the County Clerk was one of the officers. Public opinion at the time pointed to Brann as the author, but it was only recently that Mullone was enabled to secure the necessary proof of the fact. The other indictment charges him with having caused to be published in the local paper a series of gross libels upon Mullone's character. The publication of these libels commenced last March, and continued up to about two months ago. He pleaded not guilty to the indictment, and gave bail for his appearance to answer.

A SINGULAR CAUSE OF DEATH.

On Christmas Day Miss Louisa Marcellus, aged 30, of New street, New-Brunswick, while eating some canned peaches, swallowed a pit. It lodged in the throat, and Dr. Williamson being summoned, an effort was made to extract it. Finding it was impossible, he forced the pit down into the stomach. Medicines were prescribed, but on Friday last Miss Marcellus grew worse, and died suddenly. A post-mortem was held, which resulted in finding the pit in the intestines, which were ruptured.

THE MAIL ROBBERS.

No further arrests were made yesterday in connection with the mail depredations reported in yesterday's TIMES. Officers are closely following suspected persons, and further arrests may be expected, and among those who have really been the leading spirits in these robberies, John Kelley, Mary Jane Collins, Clinton Eddy, James Crawford, and John De Trieck, the parties already arrested, were brought before United States Commissioner Shields yesterday, and committed in default of $5,000 bail for examination to-day.

THE ICE-FLOE IN THE RIVERS.

DIFFICULTY EXPERIENCED BY THE FERRY-BOATS IN MAKING THEIR TRIPS—AN ACCIDENT TO A FULTON FERRY BOAT.

The residents of Brooklyn and New-York doing business in this City were subjected to nearly as much inconvenience from the irregular trips of the ferry-boats yesterday as on the previous day. The Brooklyn portion of the business population has fared much worse during the existence of the present ice-floe than those of Jersey City. This is due chiefly to the fact that the East River is much narrower than the North River and the tide is much stronger; hence the East River becomes blocked with ice more easily than the North River, and it is much more difficult for the boats to navigate the stream, even when it is free from ice. Besides this, there is quite a sharp bend in the East River in the neighborhood of the Wall Street, Fulton, and Catharine Ferries, and consequently whenever a large floe of ice comes floating up the river, from half a mile to a mile long, and reaching, as it frequently does, nearly across the river, it lodges in front of Fulton or Catharine Ferry, and remains there until the tide turns ebb and carries it out again. Another reason why the East River has been blocked more than the North River in the present instance is that a strong north-west wind has prevailed, and the ice has been blown over to the East River side of the City in such a way as to be caught by the flood tide and carried up the river. All day yesterday the North River, at the Jersey City side, was comparatively free from ice, while the slips on the New-York side were all choked up. Most of the ice which is at present floating up and down the rivers forms on the Jersey flats, and in the Kills, and is broken up and dislodged at every rise of the tide.

At the Pavonia Ferry, at 2 o'clock, the tide was running strong ebb, and there was plenty of ice, but it was pretty well broken up, and the trips of the boats averaged from 30 to 40 minutes. They managed to make their trips, however, without delaying any of the outgoing trains. At the Hoboken Ferry the greatest delays were experienced on the North River. During the middle of the day the boats were delayed about an hour. Between 10 and 11 o'clock A. M. one of the boats got fast in the ice, and the Romley went to her assistance, and shared the same fate. Both boats were finally towed in. All the boats of the Hoboken Ferry have been provided with signal flags, which their pilots are instructed to hoist whenever they meet with any accident. In such a case the other boats of the company are compelled to go immediately to their assistance. At the Cortlandt Street and Liberty Street Ferries the officers reported that the boats had made regular trips during the day, and the same report was made by those in charge of the Staten Island Ferries. At Hamilton and South Ferries the boats experienced some difficulty in navigating the river during the day, but not as much so as the day previous. The boats on the Wall Street Ferry made regular trips yesterday morning until 9 o'clock, when the incoming ice began to impede their progress. For the next hour there was considerable trouble. Both boats left the New-York slips with small loads of passengers, but were unable to get any further than the end of the pier on the Brooklyn side. They came back to the New-York side and made a fresh start, but with no better success, and they were compelled to come back again. The next attempt to reach the slip, however, was successful, and the boats were both made fast to the bridge on the Brooklyn side at 9:50 o'clock, amid the cheers of the passengers, who had been on the river nearly an hour. During the remainder of the day no trouble was experienced, and the boats made regular trips until the tide turned again, at 9 o'clock, when they were withdrawn for the night.

The boats on the Fulton Ferry have experienced the longest and most vexatious delays of those of any ferry on the East River. The delay to the boats on Wednesday night was not occasioned so much by the ice, as by the accident which happened to one of the boats. The Farragut left the Brooklyn slip at 9 o'clock in the evening, and got caught, a short way from shore, in a floe of ice. It was a long time before she got extricated, and when she did her machinery would not work. Upon investigation it was found that a log, about 10 feet long and 12 or 14 inches square, had become firmly wedged between the hull and wheel of the boat. The tide was strong flood, and the disabled ferry-boat was rapidly drifting up the river. She whistled for assistance, and the Fulton went to her relief, and finally succeeded, after hours of hard and patient labor in turning her into the Bridge Street Ferry slip on the Brooklyn side. Her passengers were subsequently transferred to the Fulton and landed at their destination. From 10 P. M. until 10 A. M. yesterday the boats ran quite regularly. From 10 A. M. until 2 P. M., during the time the tide was running flood, there was considerable delay, and a portion of the time the boats which left Fulton Ferry on the Brooklyn side were compelled to land at Catharine street. At 1 o'clock, just about the time the tide "set" in the contrary direction, a field of ice, at least 1,500 feet long, two feet thick, and as smooth as glass, lodged in front of the Brooklyn slip at Fulton Ferry, entirely obstructing navigation. The Idaho and Nevada, of the Williamsburg Ferry Company, came down at 2:30 o'clock and broke a passage through the floe, and from that time there was no trouble until after the tide turned at night. At the Catharine Ferry, the boats made regular trips all day, with the exception of 40 minutes, between 12 and 1 o'clock, when the slip was blockaded by a huge field of solid ice. The Grand Street, Houston Street, Tenth Street, Twenty-third Street, and Thirty-fourth Street Ferries experienced no difficulty, and their boats made regular trips with little delay.

The canal-boat Marcella, owned by Capt. Michael Graham, and laden with coal, which was moored at the foot of Eighty-sixth street, had her stern stove in by a cake of ice yesterday, and sank soon afterward, causing a loss of $1,000.

The dirt-scow, belonging to the Police Department, which was lying at the upper end of Blackwell's Island, was carried away yesterday from its moorings by a large floe of ice and dashed on the Flood Rock reef, where it now lies.

THE ICE CROP ON THE HUDSON.

STRIKE OF THE ICE MEN AT CATSKILL AND OTHER LOCALITIES—ARREST OF FOUR OF THE RINGLEADERS.

A strike has taken place among the men employed in cutting ice on the Hudson at Catskill. On Tuesday last those engaged by Mr. Van Steenbergh struck for $2 per day, and they were followed by the men of the Knickerbocker Company. Mr. Van Steenbergh was paying at the rate of $1 50 per day, while the Knickerbocker Company paid only $1 25. The men and boys, numbering about 250, held meetings, and resolved not to work for less than $2 a day. They paraded the streets with martial music, and carried banners. On one of the banners was inscribed, "Two dollars a day, or the ice is ours." They also threatened that if their demands were not complied with they would saturate the ice with kerosene. They marched to the river and drove men from their work, who seemed to be glad of the interruption. While at Mr. Van Steenbergh's house, they surrounded that gentleman, and, though he resisted, they threw him down and rolled him in the snow, but did not seriously injure him. Mr. Van Steenbergh and others appeared before Justice Edgar Russell yesterday morning, and swore out warrants against several of the ringleaders of the strikers. The court-room was crowded, and during the proceedings a procession of strikers marched by, preceded by martial music. Twenty extra Constables having been sworn in, they mingled with the procession and ordered the strikers to dismiss, which they did, but afterward massed again at the dock, and the officers arrested J. B. Waite, William J. Shufeldt, Nicholas Mundane, Peter J. Lake. Warrants are out for a dozen more, who will no doubt be arrested.

At all of the houses along the river south of Catskill, men, boys, and horses are at work clearing the ice of snows previous to cutting it. By the last of this week 6,000 men will be at work, cutting at wages ranging from $1 to $1 50 per day. A party of over 100 men, armed with clubs, proceeded from Catskill to Athens yesterday, and compelled the men working for the Knickerbocker Company to stop work. The ice-men at Coxsackie, Stuyvesant, Bearn Island, Schodack, and Smith's Dock have joined the strikers. Work is completely suspended all along the line. Public feeling is against the strikes, as there are hundreds upon hundreds of men along the river out of employment, who would be glad to get $1 25 per day.

Owners of ice-houses in the neighborhood of Rondout began cutting and storing ice yesterday. Most of the ice is of fine quality and about one foot thick, although on the river where the water is brackish and the ice thickly covered with snow, it does not, in some places, exceed six or eight inches in thickness. Several hundred men are now at work, and seem to be satisfied with $1 25 and $1 50 per day.

EXPLOSION AND LOSS OF LIFE.

A CHILD KILLED AND THREE OTHER PERSONS SERIOUSLY INJURED—CRIMINAL CARELESSNESS OF A QUARRYMAN.

A terrible explosion occurred yesterday afternoon in the frame dwelling of John Kailor, at the corner of Mott avenue and One Hundred and Forty-ninth street, resulting in the instant death of a child, the serious injury of three other persons, and the partial demolition of the building. The accident was caused through the carelessness of Michael Mulroy, a quarryman in the employ of Patrick Lawlor, a contractor. Mr. Lawlor it appears, has a contract for blasting a huge ledge of rock on the site of a new street, for the purpose of building a sewer at the junction of Mott avenue and One Hundred and Fiftieth street. In his blasting operations he has been using cartridges containing giant powder. Between 1 and 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon it was found that the cartridges which were necessary to prepare a blast were so much affected by the extreme cold to which they had been exposed as to be comparatively useless. Mulroy took six of these cartridges, containing two pounds of giant powder each, and carried them into the kitchen of the residence of Mr. Kailor. The inmates were Mrs. Lena Kailor and her two children—George, aged 4 years, and a female infant a few months old. Mulroy asked permission to warm himself and to thaw out the cartridges. Mrs. Kailor, being ignorant of the danger, readily accorded the desired permission. Mulroy took the cartridges to the stove and stood there with the dangerous explosive material in his hands. Suddenly a terrific explosion occurred, and the entire rear portion of the house was demolished and blown into the lot. George Kailor, the child who was standing near the stove at the time, was instantly killed. Mrs. Kailor, who was sitting on a chair at the other end of the room with her infant in her arms, was thrown to the floor, and both the mother and child were seriously injured. Mulroy was blown by the force of the explosion into the lot in the rear of the house, and was terribly bruised about the face and body. The noise of the explosion attracted the attention of Mulroy's fellow-workmen and the residents in the neighborhood, and they were soon engaged in rescuing the unfortunate victims of the accident. A force of Police was also sent to the spot. Mrs. Kailor and her infant were attended by the Police Surgeon of the district, who found their injuries to be of a serious nature. Mulroy, after having his wounds dressed, was taken to his home, at One Hundred and Forty-first street and Brook avenue. He was held to consider himself under arrest, to await the action of the Coroner, and a policeman was placed on guard at his bedside. Coroner Ellinger has been notified, and will assume charge of the case to-day. Mulroy cannot account for the occurrence, and Mrs. Kailor was not in a condition last night to make any statement.

PROTECTING THE CHILDREN.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO CHILDREN—ADDRESSES BY DR. CROSBY, DR. BELLOWS, MR. JOSEPH H. CHOATE, AND OTHERS.

The second anniversary of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children was observed last night with public exercises in Chickering Hall. A large number of ladies and gentlemen were present. Among those occupying seats upon the platform were Rev. Drs. H. W. Bellows, Howard Crosby, and S. H. Tyng, Jr.; August Belmont, Thomas C. Acton, Joseph H. Choate, Henry Bergh, and Andrew H. Green. In addition to these gentlemen there were six little boys occupying small arm-chairs upon the left of the stage—beneficiaries of the society.

Mr. John D. Wright, President of the Society, occupied the chair, and delivered a brief introductory address, reviewing the work of the society during the year. The membership of the society had increased until it now numbered about 600, and was rapidly attaining a position of self-maintenance. During the past year between 200 and 300 children had been rescued from cruel treatment, and a number of branch societies had been established in various cities of the Union. A general interest had been aroused in the cause all over the country. Mr. Aaron M. Powell read the annual report of the Secretary of the Society, Mr. E. F. Jenkins. The report stated that during the year, 197 cases had been prosecuted and 223 children had been rescued. The practice of hiring out young children as gymnasts, acrobats, circus riders, &c., had been entirely suppressed in New-York City, and had received a check throughout the country. Mr. Powell also read extracts from the report of the Board of Managers, detailing various instances of cruelties which children had suffered before their rescue by the officers of the society. Mr. Powell introduced to the audience several of the rescued children, giving particulars of the cruelties practiced upon each child prior to rescue. Among those presented were Prince Leo, the young acrobat, whose case was extensively reported in THE TIMES about a year ago; Little Romeo, the Leon children, gymnasts, rescued while performing in Mosier's circus; and Little Harry, who was rescued from Sebastian Quaglieni, an attaché of Montgomery's Queen Circus, while performing in California last April. Mr. Powell reported that the children were all in good hands, and certainly their cleanly and cheerful appearance fully attested this fact. Dr. Howard Crosby was next introduced. He said that when he first heard of the formation of the society, he thought it a burlesque upon that excellent institution founded by Mr. Henry Bergh, but reflection had convinced him that there was really room for the society, and he at once made it a fervent "God speed." That reflection convinced him that he had been to blame himself for some of the cruelties practiced on the children. He had frequently been to see the performance of that Japanese "All Right," and had enjoyed it immensely. But he would never do so again, for the Children's Society had taught him a lesson. He had not dreamed of the cruelties which must have been practised upon the little fellow to insure his perfection as an athlete. Dr. Crosby further suggested that it was the duty of every good citizen to aid the society with private efforts. It was every man's duty to use whatever potency he might have, "whether of mouth or muscle," to protect little children from abuse.

Dr. Bellows followed in a brief address. The only difficulty, he said, in attempting to speak in behalf of the Children's Society was that there was no difference of opinion as to the principles of it. There was but one mind. It was a matter to be wondered at that any one in a woman could be so malignantly cruel as to even think of abusing a little child. It was a wonder that there was any need for such a society. But experience had shown the depths of cruelty and oppression to which men and women could descend. It was then a matter of thankfulness to God that there was enough of manliness and virtue and human sympathy in the world to form a league to rebuke this cruelty. As for the spirit that prompted men and women to delight in witnessing the performance of little acrobats, Dr. Bellows said that he would willingly attribute it, as Dr. Crosby had attributed it, to "ignorance and carelessness" which made them fail to appreciate the terrible danger to which the little fellows were exposed, as well as an ignorance of the means by which their acrobatic skill had been produced." Nevertheless he characterized the taste for acrobatic performances as vulgar, as a vicious taste which should be discouraged. Addresses were also made by Mr. Joseph H. Choate and Dr. Tyng. The exercises closed with an air from Mozart, with variations, performed upon the organ, by Mr. Frederick Fielding. The Union Glee Club rendered appropriate music between the addresses.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

John Lloyd, a Welshman, died yesterday at the Ward's Island Hospital, of lock-jaw, produced by a slight laceration of one of his feet by a wood splinter a month ago.

Michael McCough, while intoxicated yesterday morning, at his residence, No. 518 East Fourteenth street, fell down a flight of stairs, and received injuries from which he died 20 minutes later.

The next lecture in the Cooper Union free course will be delivered to-morrow evening, in the Great Hall, by Prof. E. S. Morse, of Salem, Mass., on "Evolution," being the first of a series of four lectures on this subject.

William Stokeley, aged 69, a clerk in the law-office of William J. Gibson, No. 55 Liberty street, died suddenly in front of No. 39 Park row yesterday, of heart disease. The body was taken to his residence, No. 250 President street, Brooklyn.

Major Gen. Shaler and the members of his staff called upon Mayor Ely yesterday. It is understood that they are opposed to the Aldermanic resolution assigning the separate troop of cavalry to the building at the corner of Hall place and Seventh street, and they wish to have it vetoed by the Mayor.

James Wilson, alias "Pretty Jim," and William Dale, two professional pickpockets, were arrested last evening by Central Office detectives, while plying their vocation on the Fourth avenue cars. In their possession were found two gold watches, which are believed to have been stolen. The watches were held at the Police Head-quarters.

A reception was given to Chief Justice Waite, at the residence of Hon. William M. Evarts, last evening, by the members of the legal profession. Among the prominent members of the Bar present, were the following gentlemen: Andrew H. Green, Judge Howland, ex-Mayor W. H. Wickham, Judge Porter, District Attorney Benjamin K. Phelps, Dorman B. Eaton, Wheeler H. Peckham, Allan Campbell, and William E. Dodge.

The Milk Dealers' Association met, last evening, for the purpose of receiving the report of the committee appointed at the last meeting to contest the recent decision of the Court of General Sessions with reference to adulterated milk. Mr. Henry Schaefer reported that sufficient money had been subscribed to carry the case to the Supreme Court, and that a pledge had been received from the Board of Health that action would be suspended against other milk dealers until the matter was finally settled.

At a meeting of Ivanhoe Lodge, No. 610, F. and A. M., on Wednesday last, the following officers were installed for the ensuing year: William Neely, M.; Irving Williams, S. W.; C. C. Roumage, Jr., J. W.; William G. Grant, Jr., Treasurer; William E. Crofts, Secretary; A. A. Valentine, Charles F. Emerson, John C. C. Tallman, Trustees; C. A. Harned, S. D.; Joel Parker, J. D.; M. C. Adams, Chaplain; James E. Scott, S. M. of Cs.; William L. Lyon, J. M. of Cs.; Frank C. Fox, W. L. Conkling, Jr., Stewards; George McNeil, Marshal; Fred G. Niebuhr, Organist; C. Torrey, Tiler; W. H. Small, Assistant.

At a meeting of the Board of Relief of St. John's Guild last evening, Rev. Alvah Wiswall, Master of the Guild, stated that 4,567 families were regularly supplied with food, &c., and 363 new applications for relief were made yesterday. Of 170 families visited in one ward, 142 were without fire, two-thirds were without food of any kind, and all were more or less destitute of clothes and bedding. A subscription of one hundred was appointed, consisting of Col. F. A. Conkling, S. L. M. Barlow, Charles O'Conor, H. K. Thurber, and B. P. Baker, who will make a special effort to obtain supplies in this season of emergency.

BROOKLYN.

There is a balance in the City Treasury of $2,963,613 84.

During the past year the Register of Arrears of Taxes collected $1,977,330 85.

All the courts in this city have unusually large calendars during the present term.

The annual report of the Brooklyn Post Office shows that the receipts last year were $219,467 71. These figures indicate an increase in the profits made by the office over 1875 of $43,503 69.

Sneak thieves recently entered the residences of Gen. James B. Craig, at No. 7 Montague Terrace, and of Gen. Woodward, at No. 259 Henry street, stealing from the former three coats, and from the latter $50 worth of clothing.

Aconcert is to be given at the Academy of Music, on Tuesday, for the benefit of the sufferers by the Brooklyn Theatre fire. The Handel and Haydn Society will give Beethoven's oratorio, "Engiade; or, David in the Wilderness."

The Democratic members of the Board of Aldermen have given the caucus nomination for President to Alderman Black. The Democrats claim a majority of one in the board, but it is a question whether Alderman Shannon, the Independent Democrat, will vote with the regulars.

Application was made yesterday, in the Supreme Court, for a construction of the will of Robert Adair, who left property in real estate worth, at the time of his death, $200,000. The property has since depreciated, and the legatees desire that it be sold. Judge Gilbert reserved his decision.

NEW-JERSEY.

John Held, the Paterson weaver who stabbed his wife seven times, three weeks ago, has been sent to the Lunatic Asylum. Mrs. Held is improving.

POLITICAL INTELLIGENCE.

MR. BEN HILL ON THE PRESIDENCY.

THE STURDY GEORGIAN CAUSES RENEWED ANNOYANCE TO THE SCHEMING NORTHERN DEMOCRATS—OUTSPOKEN VIEWS ON THE PRESENT STATE OF AFFAIRS—IF HAYES IS SHOWN TO HAVE BEEN ELECTED, HE SHOULD BE INAUGURATED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—Ben. Hill is again becoming troublesome to the Northern Democracy, who are clamoring for the inauguration of Mr. Tilden as President, whether he be declared elected or not. He is just now talking very forcibly to them and of them and their utterances yesterday and to-day. He has been especially strong in his expressions of dissent from the position taken by a majority of his party upon the Presidential question. He has talked freely of the attitude of the Southern people in the crisis, and says that while they believe Tilden has been elected, yet they will review calmly the testimony taken by the Congressional committees now in the South, and if Hayes shall be shown to have even a technical right to the Presidency, they will give his Administration a hearty support. He said he believed that the reports of these committees which were investigating the recent elections in the South would force Congress to adopt some easy and peaceable means for a full and just settlement of the pending questions. The difficulty was, he continued, that on the floor of the House, as well as among the rank and file of both parties, there was too much blind partisanship. This he sincerely deprecated. He also deprecated the stirring up of party prejudices, and therefore thought the meetings called for the 8th of January, by the Democracy, were likely to do harm. He said every man should forget party, and temper his actions and utterances solely in the direction of a careful, just, and peaceful settlement of pending difficulties. "I am" said he, "absolutely dead to party, and shall act and speak as my best judgment shall dictate for the peace and prosperity of the country. While my judgment is that Tilden is elected, yet, if the testimony now being taken in the disputed States in regard to the late election should show that that is not the case, I would consider myself false to my oath and recreant to my duty if I did not so temper my action as to assist in a peaceful and legal solution of the Presidential question, by the inauguration of Gov. Hayes." When asked what he thought about the proposition for a new election, he said it was all premature and ought not to be agitated now. "There has been one election," said he, "and we have a Constitution and laws which ought to make a fair settlement of the present difficulties possible. We can do nothing, however," he added, "until we get the evidence in regard to the three disputed States. Then there is but one course to pursue, and that is to take such action as the law and the facts shall show to be right, let it hurt or help whichever of the parties it may." He believed the people were anxious for a speedy settlement of these questions, and that they would be satisfied with any solution of them that Congress might make.

In regard to the reports that his utterances upon this question were not well received in Georgia, and were likely to defeat his aspirations for the Senatorship, Mr. Hill said that his advices were that his views were heartily commended by his people, and that he was never stronger with them than now. He thinks his chances for the Senate have been improved by the war that was made upon him on account of his views upon the Presidential question. He has, he says, no fear of trouble. The people of the whole country, and especially of the South, cared more for their material prosperity than for the Presidency. Mr. Hill's friends claim that his election to the Senatorship, to succeed Senator Norwood, is almost certain. The election will take place on the 23d of the present month.

PRIVACY OF THE TELEGRAPH.

THE QUESTION UNDER DEBATE IN THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—THE REFUSAL OF OFFICERS OF THE WESTERN UNION COMPANY TO PRODUCE MESSAGES AND THEIR REASONS—NATURE OF STATE LAWS MAKING DIVULGING MESSAGES AN OFFENSE—MR. BARNES BEFORE THE BAR OF THE HOUSE—THE PAPERS SENT TO THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—In the Senate to-day Mr. Morton's action in calling up his resolution relative to William M. Turner, the telegraph operator at Jacksonville, Oregon, who refused to testify before the Committee on Privileges and Elections as to the nature of certain messages which had passed through his hands, gave rise to debate which brought out several points of public interest. After a rambling and incoherent address on the part of Mr. Kelly Mr. Sherman called the attention of the Senate to the question pending as to how far the Senate ought to go and how far it had power to go in the matter under debate. He, for one, was not prepared to say that it would be well for the body named to break down the barriers which up to this time had protected the communications sent by telegraph. If the Senate had power to break down these barriers he hoped it would be exercised with discretion, and the operation of the resolution be confined to official acts. During the debate that followed, between Messrs. Maxey, Morton, Conkling, and others, it was shown that in several States there exist laws which make it a penal offense for an operator or other telegraph employe to disclose the contents of messages which are committed to them for transmission or delivery. Commenting upon these laws, Senator Conkling held that if any such statute existed in the State of Oregon, the recusant witness might shield himself behind it; for that reason he desired to know what the Oregon law upon the subject was. Subsequently it was discovered that the statute in question provided punishment only for those operators or others who should willfully disclose the contents of the messages committed to their care, and that it afforded no protection to the witness referred to in the resolution. The exact wording of the vital portion of the statute is as follows:

"If any officer, agent, operator, clerk, or employe of any telegraph company, or any other person, shall willfully divulge to any other person than the party from whom the same was received, or to whom the same is addressed, or his agent or attorney, any message received, or sent, or intended to be sent, over any telegraph line, the contents, substance, purport, effect, or meaning of such message, or any part thereof, the person so offending shall be considered guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $1,000, or imprisonment for one year, or both."

The debate on the resolution was continued until late in the afternoon, and then, for want of a quorum, the Senate adjourned until Monday, without taking action on the matter.

E. W. Barnes, manager of the Western Union Telegraph Company at New-Orleans, was brought to the Bar of the House to-day to answer for contempt of its authority in refusing to produce certain telegrams before the Louisiana Investigating Committee at New-Orleans. Mr. Barnes was attended by counsel, and his answer was read by the Clerk of the House. It is a very long and able paper, in which all the facts in connection with his refusal to produce the dispatches called for are stated, and authorities cited to show that the House has no legal right to command the witness to perform an act which would make him responsible to the parties whose confidence would be violated, and amenable to the laws of Louisiana, which make the production and revelation of such dispatches a criminal offense. He argued that the subpœna commanding him to produce the dispatches was not a legal subpœna, because it was in such general terms as made a compliance with it impossible. It extended over a period of four months' time, failed to specify with distinctness the particular dispatches desired, and commanded him to produce papers which were not within his keeping and control. The telegraph operator gains no control of a message intrusted to him by one party for conveyance to another. He is the mere agent for the mechanical transmission of the intelligence thus intrusted to him, and has no right to reveal the promiscuous information which comes into his possession. The rules of the company forbidding its agents to furnish information of messages filed for transmission were quoted, and the action of the company with reference to this particular case was also recited to show that the witness had no power to produce the dispatches demanded by the committee. In conclusion, the witness denied that, in refusing to produce the dispatches, he intended any disrespect to the House, and prayed to be discharged from custody and permitted to return to his home. When the reading of Mr. Barnes' answer was concluded, a resolution was adopted referring the entire matter to the Committee on the Judiciary, to determine what action, in their judgment, should be taken thereon. In the meantime Mr. Barnes remains in the custody of the Sergeant at Arms.

THE OREGON CASE.

THE SENATE COMMITTEE BELIEVED TO BE ON THE RIGHT TRACK—HOW A NEW-YORK WITNESS WAS ADVISED BY JEFF DAVIS' PRIVATE SECRETARY — THE SEARCH AFTER CORRUPT DEALINGS—UNEASINESS OF THE DEMOCRATIC SENATOR FROM OREGON.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—The Oregon investigation to-day did not place upon the record any testimony of direct importance, but it elicited some information that may lead to important disclosures. The suggestiveness of the information is certainly unusual. The witness Martin, of the brokers' firm of Martin & Runyon, of Wall street, testified that their checkbook showed a check drawn on the 6th of December last, in favor of Ladd & Bush, of Salem, Oregon, for $3,000. The check was not used, but Martin was informed it had been returned to the house the same day. He knew nothing of the transaction himself, having been absent at the time. Senator Kernan then objected to Martin giving any further testimony about the check, and Runyon, of the book-keeper have been summoned. The questions of Senator Mitchell brought out the fact that Burton C. Harrison, who is said to have been private secretary to Jeff Davis, and also to ex-Mayor Wickham, of New-York, accompanied Martin to Washington. Martin was introduced to Harrison yesterday afternoon, and the latter came on to give advice. "What advice did he give?" asked Mr. Mitchell. The answer was, "He advised me not to tell anything except what I knew of my own knowledge." Harrison had been on the floor of the Senate Chamber with Martin, and had, in a patronizing way, appeared as a kind of master and director. He remarked, "Martin is not acquainted with Washington and its ways, and I came down to show him around, and tell him what to do." Harrison was in consultation with Democratic Senators, and very likely gave Mr. Kernan a hint to object to any hearsay testimony. This man, who came without doubt to see that Martin did not tell more than was necessary, has been subpœnaed, and will be on the stand to-morrow morning. There is now no question that the disclosure of the whole truth about the Oregon affair will uncover a mass of corrupt dealing. Senator Kelly appears extremly nervous, and watches every motion of the witnesses closely. The committee evidently have information which will enable them to draw out the knowledge of Runyon when he arrives. It is apparent that there has been such talk in New-York as would, if repeated merely at second hand, lead to the sources of full information, and this is the reason why Martin, who is a Republican, was watched to prevent him from telling too much.

GOV. GROVER'S TESTIMONY—HOW HE WAS ADVISED BY MR. HEWITT AND OTHERS—THE STORY TOLD BY A NEW-YORK GENTLEMAN WHO WAS ACCOMPANIED TO THE CAPITAL BY THE EX-MAYOR'S CLERK.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—Gov. Grover, of Oregon, was examined before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections to-day, in relation to the recent Electoral troubles in that State. In reply to Senator Kernan, he testified that he has been the Governor of Oregon since 1870, and has been a resident of that State for 25 years. He was born in Maine, but resided in Pennsylvania for some years previous to going to Oregon. His attention was first called to the Watts case a few days before the counting of the Electoral vote by the filing of a protest signed by a large number of citizens against his [Grover's] issuing the certificate of election to Watts, on the ground that Watts was a Postmaster on the day of the election, and was therefore ineligible to the office of Presidential Elector. Several affidavits, made by residents of the county in which Watts was a Postmaster, accompanied the protest, and in them it was set forth that Watts was a Postmaster on the day of election, and had been for three years previous to that time. When the vote of the State was canvassed by the Secretary of State, witness was present and gave notice that a protest had been filed against the issuing of a certificate of election to Watts, and, as it was not then time to issue certificates, he would appoint 10 o'clock of next day as the time when he would hear arguments from both sides. All the Republican Electors were present when witness made the announcement. At the hearing next day the Republican Electors filed a counter protest to that filed against the issuing of a certificate to Watts. The protest filed by the Republican Electors demanded that certificates be issued according to the vote as declared by the Secretary of State, but it did not deny that Watts was a Postmaster. All who desired were heard in relation to this subject, and the discussion, which commenced in the morning, was kept up through the day and evening. The next morning certificates were issued by witness to the three persons who had received the highest number of votes, and who were eligible under the Constitution. In answer to Senator Morton, Gov. Grover testified that the opinion which he [Grover] has published, giving the grounds for his action in issuing the Electoral certificates as he did, was prepared before his decision in relation to the issuing of certificates was announced; it was not printed until after the decision was announced; witness stated that he received a letter from Judge Hoadley, of Cincinnati, embracing several authorities in relation to this Electoral matter. It was an ordinary three-page letter. Judge Hoadley never sent to the witness a copy of the brief which he [Hoadley] has since published in relation to the eligibility of Electors; the witness received Judge Hoadley's letter about a week before he made his decision in the Watts case; he knows Judge Hoadley by reputation only; did not know his politics; Judge Hoadley did not say in his letter that he was told to write to the witness; the witness' authority for his action in issuing the certificates was not the statute law of Oregon; he regarded that, when constitutional objection was made, as in the case of Watts, it was his duty to hear and determine. It is a rule of the Oregon Supreme Court that, in case of a constitutional question being raised as regards the eligibility of those elected to office, the Governor shall hear and determine; that he has that right as the conservator of the Constitution; there is a section in the Oregon statutes which requires the Governor to certify to the election of the person having the highest number of votes; but the witness' idea of that section of the statutes is that it refers to the person having the highest number of legal votes; the section referred to requires the Governor not only to certify to, but to declare elected the person having the highest number of votes; but he did not consider that the statutes required him to declare a wrong, as he would have to do in case the person who received the highest number of votes was ineligible; Witness stated in relation to the issuing of certificates to the Electors, that the Constitution and a law of Congress conflict with the statute of Oregon. While the former makes it the duty of the Governor of the State to issue certificates to Electors, the latter says the Secretary of State shall issue the certificates. Witness stated that where the laws of the United States and of Oregon conflicted, he considered it his duty to be guided by the former. The witness, to illustrate what he considered to be his duty, said had Williams, the member of Congress elect from Oregon, been proved to be ineligible, he [witness] would have deemed it his duty to withhold a certificate of election from him: he would not formally proclaim any man elected to an office whom he believed to be ineligible; he had no correspondence with prominent gentlemen in New-York, but received a telegram from ex-Senator Gwin in which he stated that eminent legal gentlemen of New-York were of the opinion that Postmaster Watts was ineligible; the witness also received a telegram from Mr. Hewitt, Chairman of the Democratic National Committee, in which he cited several legal decisions bearing on the case of Watts; he also received a telegram from Manton Marble calling his attention to the case of Watts; the witness answered Mr. Marble that the case was under careful consideration; he met a gentleman named Patrick a few days befpre the certificates were issued; saw him at his [witness'] office; Mr. Patrick did not say he was sent to Oregon to represent either Mr. Tilden or Mr. Hewitt; Mr. Patrick mentioned the case of Watts in a general way, but the witness had no private conversation with him, as a number of other persons were present; he regarded Mr. Patrick's visit simply as a call of courtesy on the Governor of the State; the witness thought Senator Kelly came in with Mr. Patrick and introduced him.

The committee held a special session at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon to examine Augustus F. R. Martin, of the firm of Martin & Runyon, stock brokers, at No. 41 Wall street, New-York. In response to questions by Senator Mitchell he testified that it appears from a stub in the firm's checkbook that a check was drawn by them on the Bank of North America Dec. 6, 1876, for $8,000, payable to Ladd & Bush, of Salem, Oregon; the stub was in the handwriting of G. H. Hughes, their book-keeper; witness knew nothing about the check except from his partner and the book-keeper; the latter had told him that the check was returned the same day, unused.

Senator Kernan objected to any further questions being put to witness regarding the check, as he had testified he had no personal knowledge concerning it, and as the other persons named could be summoned to appear.

Senator Mitchell then elicited from the witness that he was accompanied to Washington by Burton Harrison, of New-York, to whom he was introduced yesterday by his partner, Mr. Runyon, who told him Harrison was going to Washington, and would "give him advice and help him along with his business;" they came over on the train together; the only advice given him by Harrison was to testify to nothing more than he knew, or, in other words, to give no hearsay testimony; he did not think he needed such advice; [laughter;] he had no previous acquaintance with Harrison, and could not say what is Harrison's business occupation; was introduced to him in his (Harrison's) office in Pine street; witness is a Republican, and his partner, Runyon, is a Democrat.

ANOTHER WITNESS EXPECTED FROM OREGON—A POSTMASTER SUBPOENAED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PORTLAND, Jan. 5.—George E. Cole, Postmaster in this City, has just been subpœnaed to go to Washington, to give testimony before the Congressional Committee on the Watts-Cronin affair. He is supposed to know something important concerning the case. Mr. Cole will leave by steamer to-morrow morning. An indignant Democracy will hold a mass-meeting in this city next Monday evening. The announced object of the meeting is to consider questions presented by the revolutionary attempt now being made to substitute the choice of Returning Boards in Louisiana and Florida for the choice of the people. Prominent speakers from different parts of the State will be present and address the meeting.

GOV. TILDEN'S DISBURSING AGENT SUMMONED TO WASHINGTON.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 5.—A dispatch from Salem, Oregon, says that Mr. Bush, of the banking firm of Cadd & Bush, has been summoned to Washington. Mr. Bush was at the State-house about noon on the day of the counting of the Electoral vote, and the Republicans say that the Democrats were awaiting his arrival there with great anxiety, and asserted at the time that he was Gov. Tilden's disbursing agent, and that the programme carried out then was not assured till his arrival at the State-house.

THE SOUTH CAROLINA CASE.

THE PRESIDENT VISITED BY MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE COMMITTEE—GOV. CHAMBERLAIN DECLARED TO BE FAIRLY ELECTED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—The Republican members of the House Committee on the South Carolina election case called on the President to-day. During a prolonged consultation which followed, Mr. Lawrence said that the State had not only gone for Hayes and Wheeler, but that Gov. Chamberlain had been fairly and honestly elected in spite of all the intimidation and fraud practiced by the Democrats. This fact, he believed, could and would be proved to the satisfaction of fair-minded and impartial men of all parties.

THE SITUATION IN LOUISIANA.

THE DUAL GOVERNMENT LIKELY SOON TO BE IN COLLISION — THE PRETENDER NICHOLLS ACTING UNDER THE DIRECTION OF THE DEMOCRATIC CONGRESSMEN—A DEMOCRATIC GOVERNMENT OR MILITARY RULE THEIR MOTTO.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 5.—It is evident now that the dual Government cannot much longer exist in this State without a collision of the opposing forces. That this week has passed so quietly is due to the fact that Mr. McEnery has no friends and no respectable following of men who think of him as a Governor. The Democrats elected to the Legislature, with a few men from the lobby, have gone through the forms of convening a General Assembly, but the body has had no head, no Governor or Lieutenant Governor. The scenes will be changed on Monday next, after the inauguration of Nicholls and Wiltz. It is understood that Mr. Nichols is to act by the advice of the Democratic Congressmen here, and will force the issue, being determined to be all or nothing. All the Democratic officers claiming to have been elected will act with him. A "barrel of money" has been supplied, and Mr. Nicholls has resolved to appoint all the officers he can appoint throughout the State, even to Judges of a Supreme Court, and to organize and put in motion a complete Democratic State Government and to fight for its maintenance until the forces of the United States are met. This is serious, but it must come. The Democrats are now organizing a complete metropolitan Police force, to be officered and utilized by Mr. Nicholls. Mr. Packard will be inaugurated and will do his duty, but it can readily be seen that with two sets of men, striving for the same positions, from Governor and Judges of the Supreme Bench down to Police Judges and policemen on their beats, there can be no peace. The Republicans can protect the State-house, but who will protect the State and those in the country parishes who have dared to vote the Republican ticket, and to testify of intimidations before the Investigating Committees? While Republicans have all of the law on their side, Democrats have the guns, and the hot-headed say a "Democratic State Government or military rule."

PROCEEDINGS OF THE LEGISLATURE—GOV. PACKARD TO BE INAUGUREATED ON MONDAY—PROGRESS OF THE CONGRESSIONAL INVESTIGATIONS.

NEW-ORLEANS, Jan. 5.—The Legislature passed a bill repealing the law limiting the supply of stationery for each member to $3 worth for the session. It also passed a bill supplying each member with a copy of the Revised Statutes, and a protest against closing the Bayou Lafourche.

Gov. Kellogg has nominated Alfred Shaw for Judge of the new Superior Civil Court. Gov. Packard will be inaugurated on Monday.

The bogus body adopted an address to the people of Louisiana reviewing the recent canvass and election, the action of the Returning Board, the events of Jan. 1, the barricade of the State-house, &c.

THE INVESTIGATIONS.

The Senate Committee this morning examined three colored men in regard to the election in Morehouse Parish, all of whom testified that a large number of colored men voted the Democratic ticket at the last election, and there was no intimidation. Two more witnesses testified to a fair and peaceable election in that parish, and that a number of negroes voluntarily voted the Democratic ticket. Senator Saulsbury read affidavits of Capt. Theobald and James G. Logan, denying Eliza Pinkston's and Cora Williams' charges that they took part in the murder of Pinkston and Williams, and that both could prove an alibi; also that they declined to obey summonses to testify unless it was guaranteed that they would not be arrested, as was done in the case of Lyons and Phillips when here to testify before the Returning Board.

The committee declined to order their depositions taken as asked for by Mr. Saulsbury.

The Senate sub-committee heard the testimony of Lieut. George Ach, Third Infantry, in relation to the election in East Baton Rouge, whose general testimony was to the effect that it was fair and peaceable. He saw no disturbances on the day of election. On that day Deputy United States Marshal McAlpine complained that he had been excluded from the polls by the Baton Rouge Police. On investigation it was found that McAlpine had not informed them of his official position until after he had been excluded.

Before the Senate sub-committee to-day Mayor James Browaki, of Baton Rouge, substantiated the testimony of Dr. Dupre. He said he was a member of the "Two-Ninety-Eight," but had never met with it since the election; thought he could get permission to tell about it.

Major Bascom, Thirteenth Infantry, testified as to the constitution of the Union Rights Club; said the oath bound the members to secrecy and to obey orders; the resolution in regard to killing after a third invitation to join was on a separate piece of paper and without date; had turned it over to the civil authorities.

Armadee Delambre testified in broken English to the organization of bull-dozers, or regulators, in East Feliciana for the purpose of preventing stealing; he and others had subscribed to arm those unable to arm themselves; Col. Frank Powers was chief commander.

During the cross-examination witness became very much excited and spoke of "your gang stealing the votes," and "your scallawags," but immediately apologized to the committee. At the demand of the Chairman for a peremptory answer to a question, witness jumped up and asked the Chairman if he wanted to fight.

Before the House Committee to-day, J. B. Harris, of Point Coupee Parish, who is a Liberal Republican, testified he had accompanied Packard into East Baton Rouge and East and West Feliciana, and found the colored Republicans felt they could not vote their ticket with safety in the country, and that Republican speakers there were jeered at and insulted, but were well treated in Richland Parish.

In the course of a long cross-examination he said he had superintended the preparation of affidavits in the Custom-house at the instance of Packard, and had a two-fold purpose in preparing them—viz., for the use of the Returning Board and to assist United States Supervisor Wolfley in making his reports, and that the latter had furnished the copies incorporated in Sherman's report. The witness thought the natural Republican majority in the State is 10,000 and that no considerable number of colored men voted the Democratic ticket of their own choice.

The House sub-committee heard several witnesses in reference to Livingston Parish.

E. B. Lockport, the Republican candidate for Sheriff, stated that he was fairly defeated, and that the election was fair and peaceable.

George White, colored, said his house was burned because his sons were accused of stealing hogs; that he never said it was burned because he was a Republican; and if affidavits to that effect were before the Returning Board, they were false.

Israel Rogers, colored, testified that colored men were intimidated by the Democrats; that colored men were whipped in nearly every ward in the parish, and that the colored church was fired into eight or nine times while service was going on.

G. R. Gorham, a resident of Natchitoches, and District Attorney there, testified that during the campaign he visited Ouachita and found a reign of terror there; he found colored people afraid to attend Republican meetings and joining Democratic clubs for safety.

At the evening session of the Senate committee Daniel Breard denied the statement of Lem. Jackson that he had discharged him for voting the Republican ticket, as he never knew he had voted it until he saw his testimony published; Jackson, he said, bore a bad character, and his contract had expired.

Tony Clark, colored, testified that he was Recorder of Mortgages for East Feliciana, and that, in 1875, he was waited upon by a committee headed by Dr. Saunders, and told that he could not live there. He left and came here. He had been charge with being concerned with John Gair in inciting negroes to arm, but the real cause was his being a Republican. The witness introduced a letter from Col. Hardee, of Clinton, in reply to a question whether he could come back, telling him "the white people will hate you as long as you hold office. You know Grant's bayonets alone keep Kellog and his crowd in the State."

James Degroy, colored, said he had held several offices, and had been forced to resign; the last office he held was that of tax collector; numerous outrages had been perpetrated on the blacks in East Feliciana; he did not vote the Republican ticket; he was afraid to do so.

THE ILLINOIS SENATORSHIP.

GEN. JOHN A. LOGAN NOMINATED BY THE REPUBLICAN CAUCUS—DEMOCRATS NEGOTIATING WITH THE INDEPENDENTS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SPRINGFIELD, Jan. 5.—The Republican caucus was held this evening. Gen. Logan was nominated for Senator by acclamation. Four Republicans refused to go into the caucus, which reduces Logan's strength, and is supposed to be the beginning of a Washburne movement, which is not likely to last. Gen. Logan said that if the Republicans stood by him he would win, but intimated that if necessary, to save the vote in the Senate, he would withdraw in favor of some one else. The Democrats are negotiating with the Indepedents, who hold the balance of power, and they may vote for the nominee of the Independents. Their caucuses will be held next week.

COX'S INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE.

THEIR ARRIVAL AT PHILADELPHIA—HOW THE CHAIRMAN DESERTED THE COMMITTEE—WHAT HE KNOWS ABOUT THE CONSTITUTION OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 5.—The members of the Congressional committee to investigate the Presidential and Congressional election held here in November last arrived here to-night, to find that "Sunset" Cox, the Chairman, had left for Washington to make a speech in Congress. He had promised to meet the committee at noon on Thursday, and afterwards said that he would not come to Philadelphia, so he was not expected. Instead of that he came here, and has been making a great noise about the other members, and at last wound up by telling Mr. Rice, of Ohio, to take charge of the committee, informing him that he would instruct him by telegraph from Washington. The sessions will commence to-morrow morning, and the Democracy is busy to-night endeavoring to find something on which to trump up charges of fraud. Mr. Cox has distinguished himself by his braggadocio in the Continental Hotel corridors, where he told a gentleman that he came here to see if the Republicans had violated the law and the Constitution of the State. On being interrogated as to whether he was acquainted with the Constitution of this State, he replied that he had been here five hours, and understood the subject perfectly well. "Then," replied the gentleman, "you know more than the lawyers of Pennsylvania do." The committee organized to-night with Mr. Rice as Chairman, and agreed upon a plan of investigation. The first thing which should come under their notice is the district represented by Speaker Randall, comprising the worst section of the city, and is well-known as a hot-bed of fraud and vice. Then there is the waitewash by the Court of the bogus tax blank business, and several little matters which might cause Mr. Randall to quake. The Democratic members of the Committee are disgusted with Mr. Cox's actions, regarding them as boyish in the extreme, and say they don't care what turns up, as it cannot hurt them. The investigations here do not promise much, but may lead to a better system of registration than we now have.

MISSOURI.

GOV. HARDIN CLOSES HIS CAREER BY MALIGNING THE REPUBLICANS.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 5.—The Message of Gov. Hardin, the retiring Governor of this State, was sent to the Legislature to-day. It is almost wholly devoted to State affairs, the exception being the following upon National affairs:

"It is, perhaps, fortunate that the Legislative power of the State is now in session to assist the will of the people in the possible trouble growing out of the Presidential election. Your presence will relieve the Executive from any special review of the subject, as your expression, whatever it may be, will more authoritatively embody this will. Owing to a corrupt civil service that would destroy the efforts of the people to purify and invigorate it, to the assumptions of power not authorized by the Constitution and laws by officers whose duty it is to guard and protect the rights of the people and of the State, and to the illegal and reckless employment of the military in interfering with the elections and the results thereof, and in organizing legislatures and judging of the qualifications of membership therein, the wiser and more conservative element of the people has lost confidence in the administration of our federal affairs, and have serious apprehensions that ambitious and unscrupulous partisanship, more for the sake of further continuance in power, will override the change of administration which they believe to have been ordered. The State relies, as I conceive, upon the laws of the country, as being as heretofore amply sufficient to enable honest and patriotic officers, without difficulty, to ascertain the choice of the people for President and Vice President. They demand of those in power that they shall be faithfully, honestly, and peacefully executed according to the right. They are corrupt and false to their high trusts and the honor of this great country who would do otherwise. But that a choice of these officers was had there can be no doubt, and the people of this State will cheerfully command and support the inauguration of the persons ascertained by constitutional forms to have been elected; but they will not, and ought not to tolerate one installed in power by fraud or force, or in violation of the usages and practices which have been observed throughout our national history. I commend to your better judgment the consideration of these grave questions, and trust that whatever declarations you may make will be in denunciation of fraud and usurpation, and be characterized by wisdom, patriotism, and an energetic support of the right and of the institutions of the country."

THE MAINE DEMOCRATS AND TILDEN.

AUGUSTA, Jan. 5.—The Democratic Committee to-day passed resolutions declaring that Tilden is elected President, and that all attempts to defeat him, by counting in a minority candidate, be opposed by every legal and constitutional remedy.

THE VERMONT DEMOCRATS AND THE 8TH INST.

MONTPELIER, Jan. 5.—The Democratic State Committee has issued invitations to all the leading Democrats of the State, to meet in convention, Jan. 8, at Washington.

A TRACK WALKER KILLED.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Jan. 5.—Frank Bennett, a Boston and Albany Railroad hand, aged 26 years, was run over and killed while walking on the track this afternoon.

THE COAL MINING REGION.

MAUCH CHUNK, Jan. 5.—About 20 of the leading operators, representing the Lehigh, Mahanoy, and Wyoming regions, met here to day. The question of a reduction of wages was postponed and it was informally agreed that work would be resumed on next Monday at the old wages. A committee was appointed to inquire into the matter of restricting tonnage after conference with the large companies, consisting of G. B. Lindermany, on the part of the shippers of the Lackawana and Northern Railroad, Charles Parrish on the part of the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal Company, and John Leisearing on the part of the shippers of the Central Railroad of New-Jersey. This committee has full power to curtail or suspend shipments, and the meeting agreed to sustain any action they might take after an agreement with the large companies was reached.

THE SURPLUS CENTENNIAL FUND.

THE SUIT BROUGHT BY THE GOVERNMENT TO SECURE A RETURN OF MONEY LOANED—NEW-JERSEY'S INTEREST IN THE DECISION—THE ANSWER OF THE ASSISTANT UNITED STATES TREASURER.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 5.—One of the most important suits which has come before any tribunal in this country for some time, will come up for argument here to-morrow in the United States Circuit Court. Judges McKennan and Strong, it is expected, will sit to hear the argument. This is the suit by the Government to secure a repayment of the $1,500,000 which Congress appropriated to aid the Centennial. The complainants in the case are the members of the Centennial Board of Finance. The answer of the United States in the inter-pleader suit has been filed by Assistant United States Treasurer George Eyster, and the record is now complete. This afternoon a petition was received from the Chancellor of the State of New-Jersey, asking that his State be included in the suit as one of the defendants. The petition sets forth that the State held 10,000 shares of stock in the Centennial International Exposition, and the rights of the State will be affected by any decree which may be made in the case. United States District Attorney Valentine has filed answer to this petition. Upon the decision of the court rests the fact whether the stockholders will receive a good dividend, or have to be satisfied with a small return for the amount of money invested. The answer of Assistant Treasurer Eyster is as follows:

Between the Centennial Board of Finance, complainant, and George Eyster, Assistant Treasurer of the United States at Philadelphia, and others, respondents.—The answer of George Eyster, Assistant Treasurer of the United States, &c.—The defendant, George Eyster, reserving to himself all right of exception to the said bill of complaint, for answer thereto says: First—He admits the averments in first, second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth paragraphs of complainants' bill, and believes that the various acts of Congress therein referred to are correctly set forth. Second—He is advised and believes that under the true construction of the act of Feb. 16, 1876, the funds in the hands of the complainants for distribution should be first applied in payment in full into the Treasury of the United States of the sum of $1,500,000 before any distribution whatever is made among the stockholders, and that after the payment of the said sum of $1,500,000 to the United States any assets remaining should be divided pro rata among the said stockholders; that after paying all debts and liabilities of said corporation the surplus remaining in the hands of the said Centennial Board of Finance, and referred to in the seventh paragraph of the said complainants' bill, is profits according to the true intent and meaning of the several acts of Congress referred to in said bill, and he avers that the said stockholders are not entitled to participate at all in the distribution of the said fund until the said sum of $1,500,000 shall first have been paid in full into the Treasury of the United States, and he has demanded on behalf of the said United States, and does demand, that the complainants should so pay the said sum of $1,500,000 to the said United States, and he prays that the court will so order and decree, &c.

GEORGE EYSTER.
Assistant Treasurer United States.

THE COMMISSIONER OF PATENTS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 5.—It is learned here to-night that the position of Commissioner of Patents has been tendered to Hon. Clinton MacDougal, of Auburn, N. Y. Whether he will accept is a question which has not been decided, but will remain an open one until his return to Washington.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

A fire last evening considerably damaged a building on Elm street, New-Haven, owned by E. H. Dickerman and D. R. Benham and wife. Dickinson & Co., junk dealers, had a large stock of rags in the building, and are the heaviest losers. Total loss $10,000, which is believed to be covered by insurance.

A fire occurred in the residence of Mr. Moses Mayserner, of Bedford avenue and Clymer street, Brooklyn, yesterday morning, which occasioned a loss of $5,000, principally on furniture. Both furniture and building were fully insured.

The Methodist Episcopal Church at Antwerp, N. Y., was entirely destroyed by fire yesterday morning. The fire is supposed to have originated near the furnace, and was discovered about 3 o'clock. The loss is $20,000; insurance $16,000.

The steam saw-mill and box factory of Messrs. Brown & Coleman at Newton Junction, N. H., were entirely destroyed by fire Thursday night, with all the machinery. The loss is $10,000, partly covered by insurance.

The building occupied by P. L. Kennedy, saloon keeper, at Franklin Falls, N. H., was destroyed by fire Thursday night. The loss is estimated at $4,500; insurance $3,000.

The saw and shingle mill owned by Andrew J. Wills, at South Turnbridge, Vt., was burned yesteday. Loss $2,000; insurance $800.

SILVER COIN AS A LEGAL TENDER.

BOSTON, Jan. 5.—The Board of Trade to-day adopted a report taking strong ground against the adoption of a silver basis, and petitioning Congress to appoint Government Commissioners to meet European Commissioners to consider the question of remonetizing silver as a fixed relation of value to gold coin, and asking the President to invite the European Governments to participate in such consideration. The report embodies a petition that silver coin shall not be made a legal tender for any sum larger than $10. It was further resolved that Congress be urged to extend the time in the charter of the Northern Pacific Railroad.

A STEAMER FAST ON THE BEACH.

NEW-HAVEN, Jan. 5.—The steamer Newport, of the Fall River Line, lies to-night fast on the beach in the harbor, where she grounded on Tuesday. Nearly all her freight has been taken off, but all attempts to float her at high tide have been unavailing. It is not likely that she will change her position before the next perigee tide. She lies easy, and is grounded from stem to stern.

INSECT PESTS IN ONTARIO.

TORONTO, Jan. 5.—At the annual meeting of the Agricultural and Arts Association to-day, a resolution was passed requesting the Government to have the grain and seeds collected at the Centennial thoroughly examined before distribution for sowing, in order to avoid the introduction of any insect pests.

MASSACHUSETTS SUNDAY LAWS.

BOSTON, Jan. 5.—The Supreme Court of Massachusetts has sustained the lower court in its decision that Israelites must be held amenable to the laws of this State regulating the observance of the Sabbath. The case grew out of an attempt to keep a store open on that day.

TRANSFER OF SOLDIERS.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 5.—Lieut. Dyer passed through this city yesterday with 30 men from Fort Leavenworth en route to Hot Springs, Ark. It is not known for what purpose these soldiers are sent to Hot Springs, but it is supposed the movement has some connection with Government property at that point.

A DESPERATE CANADIAN.

MONTREAL, Jan. 5.—This evening Louis Guinette met Frank Guay, an acquaintance, in the street, and discharged two shots from a revolver at him, inflicting a severe wound. Guinette then committed suicide by taking oxalic acid. It is supposed that jealousy was the cause.

AN EXPRESS TRAIN WRECKED.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 5.—The Toledo express on the Cincinnati, Hamilton, and Dayton Railroad ran off the track near Hamilton, Ohio, this morn. The train was badly wrecked, but no one was seriously injured.

THE QUESTION OF THE HOUR

WHO SHALL DECLARE THE RESULT OF THE ELECTORAL VOTE?

A CLEAR EXPOSITION BY MR. E. W. STOUGHTON OF CONSTITUTIONAL PRINCIPLES AND PRECEDENTS — DEMOCRATIC ABSURDITIES EXAMINED AND EXPOSED—A QUESTION WHICH CAN BE SETTLED NEITHER BY BARGAIN NOR COMPROMISE.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The people of the several States have, in pursuance of the Constitution, cast their votes for Electors, who have discharged their duty by casting and certifying their votes for President and Vice President of the United States. Those two great officers are now actually elected. To ascertain who they are, the Electoral votes of the several States must be counted and the result declared; and for the first time in our history the nation is agitated by the inquiry—upon whom does this duty devolve?

Is it to be performed by the President of the Senate, or by such persons or officials as that body and the House of Representatives shall agree upon; and if they cannot agree, are the votes to be counted at all, and if yea, by whom; and if not counted because of a failure to agree, is the House to elect the President, or is a new election to be ordered—to be attended, perhaps, by the same result; and if the two houses do agree upon a mode of counting, may either at pleasure constitutionally object to counting the Electoral votes of a State, and thus exclude them; for if this may be lawfully done, an election of President and Vice President can always be prevented, and the election of President be finally usurped by the House, or a new election made necess cause, arbitrarily object to counting the vote of any particular State, in which event it is to be rejected. If that be so, either body can, at will, defeat an election by the people. So too, it is insisted that should the President of the Senate proceed to count the Electoral vote, he can do so only in presence of both houses, and that, should the House of Representatives retire—as has been threatened—the count cannot proceed, and thus the will of the people may be frustrated.

These are some of the revolutionary proceedings which have been suggested by Democratic leaders to defeat the inauguration of Mr. Hayes as President. They are hardly worthy of statesmen, and, if attempted, are not likely to prove successful.

This theory may be summed up as follows: If the two houses cannot agree upon a mode of counting the Electoral vote, it cannot be counted. If a mode is agreed upon, and the count proceeds, it is in the power of the House of Representatives, or of the Senate, by objecting to the vote of any State, to cause its rejection; and if, in the absence of such agreement, the President of the Senate attempts to count the vote, the objection suggested may not only be interposed, but the House of Representatives may, by retiring, defeat the count altogether.

THE ABSURDITY OF IT.

Now, if these measures may be lawfully resorted to, it is because they are authorized by the Constitution, for, as there is no legislation on the subject, we must resort to that instrument to learn what may be legally done. Let us, as a test, incorporate into it the construction contended for, and thus learn whether its framers probably contemplated one so utterly impracticable. It is but fair to do this, for whatever language is necessarily employed to interpret an instrument becomes a part of it.

The Constitution thus interpreted would therefore read: "The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted—if the two houses can agree upon a mode of counting the same, but not otherwise; provided, however, that if either house shall object to counting the Electoral vote of any State it shall not be counted; and provided, also, that if the President of the Senate shall, after opening the packages containing said votes, proceed to count the same, the House of Representatives may retire, and thus prevent him from so doing."

If I have in this paraphrase of the Constitution misrepresented the theory when reduced to practice of those who deny the right of the President of the Senate, in the absence of legislation, to count the Electoral vote, they can easily correct me—as, perhaps, they may feel disposed to do, when they perceive to what consequences their doctrine inevitably leads. If they shall decline to accept as their own, the construction I have stated, they should frankly and publicly avow what their doctrine actually is, that the people of the United States may know whether those who insist that Mr. Tilden is elected do or do not claim that the House of Representatives may at will, in one of the modes suggested, arbitrarily prevent the counting of the Electoral vote.

THE TRUE INTENT OF THE CONSTITUTION.

It has been for generations wisely and justly settled that when the meaning of words employed in any written constitution, law, or instrument is doubtful, the constructions put upon the words by those whose duty it is and has been to interpret and act under the instrument, is entitled to great weight, and is frequently decisive, and especially is this so where a contrary interpretation would operate unjustly or cause great public or private inconvenience or injury. I have mentioned the national evils which might at the pleasure of either the Senate or House of Representatives ensue from construing the Constitution as suggested, and before proceeding to invoke the construction practically put upon it by its framers, and as I understand it for a long time by both houses, not inconsistent with the opinion of Chancellor Kent, I will present a few observations to test its soundness.

It is well for this purpose to state the estimate undoubtedly formed by those who framed the Constitution, of the character, wisdom, and attainments of the person who would probably thereafter be selected to fill the great office of Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate. It was by them regarded as an office of much dignity and honor—the incumbent of which might, and several times did, become President of the United States. Our fathers could not have supposed he would lack the integrity, capacity, and learning necessary for the faithful discharge of the responsible duties which might devolve upon him, and they certainly could not have regarded that of opening and counting Electoral votes, in the presence and subject to the inspection of the Representatives of the nation, as of greater difficulty and importance than those which he might be called upon to perform as President of the Senate, and especially as the possible President of the United States.

He was to be in their esteem a great and highly honored magistrate, beyond suspicion of unfairness, whose every official act was to be performed in the presence of a free, intelligent, and independent people, upon whose judgment his fame would forever rest.

Consider now the nature of the duty involved in receiving, opening, and counting Electoral votes; and whether the framers of the Constitution could have considered it one demanding capacity, integrity, or learning, beyond that which they might fairly assume would be possessed by the second magistrate of the nation.

To him was confided the duty of receiving and safely keeping the Electoral votes in their sealed packages until they were to be opened in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives and counted. It was eminently fitting that this solemn ceremony should be so performed that the whole nation might by its representatives be, in the language of Chancellor Kent, "spectators to witness the fairness and accuracy of the transaction."

STATE ACTION CONCLUSIVE.

It should be borne in mind that each State was by the Constitution to appoint Electors in such manner as the Legislature thereof might direct, and hence the only duty which could devolve upon the Vice President would be that of determining—not whether a State was in such relation to the Union as to entitle it to participate in the election of President and Vice President—for that was and is a political question to be determined by Congress or the Executive, but whether the certificates to be opened contained Electoral votes which should be counted. With the justice or propriety of the laws of the several States prescribing or regulating the mode of appointing Electors, neither the Vice President nor Congress could interfere, for this was a subject over which each State had supreme and exclusive jurisdiction. Thus if the State of New-York or Louisiana should provide that Electors should be appointed by the Sheriff of any particular county or parish instead of by the votes of the people, Electors so appointed would be entitled to cast their votes for President or Vice President; and should the statute of New-York authorize them to be elected by the people, and create a Returning Board authorized in its discretion, and without appeal, to reject the votes of any ward, township, or county where fraud or violence by the successful party had prevented a fair election—the decision of such board upon the question would be conclusive; and its determination as to the number of votes lawfully cast and the persons appointed Electors, final. And should a committee of Congress be appointed in such case to inquire as to the alleged fraud or violence, or as to the proof upon which the Board acted, a sensible and law-abiding citizen would naturally inquire of the committee the purpose to be accomplished by its investigations—and of the House—what action it intended to take when its committee should report. And if some one or more of its number should suggest that it was thought the Committee might learn that the weight of testimony before the board was against its conclusion, he would, if so ignorant as to suppose this to be a cause for disturbing its decision be told—should he chance to encounter a person of some intelligence—that courts of justice and jurors frequently decide against the preponderance of proof, but that their judgments and verdicts must stand until set aside by competent tribunals; and the zealous member would doubtless be also told that Congress has no jurisdiction to set aside the decision of a State Returning Board because it might have obtained further proof, or because the evidence before it would have justified a different conclusion. Those who are familiar with the proof which was before the Returning Board of Louisiana, and those acquainted with that already taken there by the Committees of the Senate and House, are aware that the evidence before the board warranted its conclusion, and that the testimony since taken tends only to confirm its accuracy, and justice. But if this were otherwise, as the board heard competent testimony on both sides, its decision within its jurisdiction must stand, although the House or its committee might think the weight of proof against it. I allude to the absolute power of the several States to appoint Electors in any mode they see fit to adopt, and to the incapacity of Congress to meddle with the subject, only to show that the duty of the President of the Senate to open the certificates, ascertain their validity, and the votes to be counted is mainly ministerial, and involves no serious judical inquiry. It was not, it is fairly to be presumed, in the contemplation of the framers of the Constitution that certificates or votes would be forged, or that the ascertainment of those to be counted would be difficult. It was, of course, known that the Vice President would belong to one of the political parties, but it was not supposed this would disqualify him to act fairly and as should become his high and responsible position. If it be said that the present emergency was not anticipated by those who framed and adopted the Constitution, I answer, that while the duty which might devolve upon the President of the Senate, of deciding between the honest vote of Oregon, and the disgraceful and fraudulent vote manufactured by Cronin and Gov. Grover—between the vote of Louisiana as finally determined by the Returning Board, and that manufactured and forwarded to Washington by persons having no color of authority, and between the two sets of certificates which may perhaps be sent to him from Florida—is by no means difficult, and involves but little investigation. It is not the difficulty of the duty to be performed in an unforeseen emergency which will authorize a departure from, or violation of, a Constitutional provision.

AMPLE POWERS EXISTING.

If the emergency was not anticipated by its authors—if they supposed the duty of counting the Electoral votes would be substantially ministerial, involving little or no inquiry as to the validity and identity of certificates to be opened and votes to be counted—and if, under this impression, they nevertheless devolved that in question upon the President of the Senate, he is thereafter bound to perform it, no matter how difficult and responsible unforeseen circumstances may render it; and when these arise, all citizens are bound to submit to the exercise of his constitutional authority, and to accept as valid and binding the conclusion he may reach as to which are the true Electoral votes of the States from whence the certificates are forwarded.

The Constitution declares he shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted. What certificate is he to open? and what votes are to be counted? Clearly those, and only those, transmitted by Electors lawfully appointed. Who is to determine this? The President of the Senate can, if bound to perform this duty, receive proof on the subject, if necessary to determine which certificate is genuine, and is quite competent to consider and pass upon the question, and, in the absence of legislation, seems to be the only officer or tribunal capable of so doing.

The two houses are to be present, but they do not act jointly. They must act, if at all, separately. Which of these two bodies if they differ, is to determine the genuineness of the certificates and of the votes. If the President of the Senate cannot constitutionally do so? Neither is the superior of the other, nor can either assume the power as against the other of counting the votes. Each, upon the theory of Mr. Tilden's followers, claims the right, not to count the votes, but practically to prevent their being counted. Either house may, it is urged, decline to agree upon a mode of counting them, and under any and all circumstances, each, it is said, has the right to insist upon the rejection of the vote of any State at will. The dog in the manger occupied precisely this position, with some little advantage of argument in favor of the dog.

Fairly stated, the conclusion to be derived from this reasoning is that upon no officer or tribunal is constitutionally devolved the power or duty to count the Electoral vote for President and Vice President of the United States. The President of the Senate cannot do it; the Senate cannot do it; the House cannot. Who can? The followers of Tilden answer, we will consent to a scheme for so doing, but only upon condition that we may at pleasure count him in or so confuse and confound the Electoral vote as to enable the House of Representatives to elect him.

LET US HAVE NO BARGAINS.

In the name of the authors of the Constitution, whose intelligence is thus questioned and insulted—in the interest of justice and of common sense, and of all good citizens, I denounce this doctrine as mischievous, unconstitutional, and revolutionary. Bargains based upon such pretensions, to accomplish such a purpose, statesmen, Senators, Representatives, will, I trust, decline to make. Already the Constitution has been, as I believe, disregarded, and great national interests imperilled, by the adoption of the twenty-second joint rule—a mischievous precedent established in 1865—not merely to secure a count of the Electoral votes by the action of the two houses, or by the several action of either, but to enable either house to insist upon the rejection of the vote of certain rebellious States, upon the ground that they had not resumed such relations in the Union as entitled them to cast Electoral votes for President and Vice President of the United States. This was not legislation, and was a rule unwisely adopted. Let those who insist that no constitutional mode has been provided by which to count the votes of States confessedly within the Union, and that none will be agreed to except upon condition of consenting to a plan for the election of Mr. Tilden, be told that the grave reproach suggested does not rest upon the Constitution or its authors, and that treasonable bargains cannot be forced by threats, or achieved by unlawful contrivances, but that in the absence of legislation on the subject, or of any fair arrangement which does not give the election of President to the House, "the President of the Senate (in the language of Chancellor Kent before cited,) counts the votes and determines the result, and that the two houses are present only as spectators to witness the fairness and accuracy of the transaction."

THE PRECEDENTS.

Let us now briefly inquire upon what precedents that illustrious Judge based his conclusion—independent of the construction which may be fairly given to the Constitution itself.

When that instrument was submitted to the States for adoption by the convention which framed it, one of the resolutions adopted by that convention, and which accompanied the Constitution as proposed, was that as soon as the conventions of nine States should have ratified the Constitution, Congress should fix a day for the appointment of Electors, and a day on which they should assemble to vote for President; and that upon so voting, they should transmit their votes, sealed, &c., to the Secretary of the United States, (there being then no President of the Senate,) and that the Senate and House of Representatives should convene, and that "the Senators should appoint a President of the Senate for the sole purpose of receiving, opening, and counting the vote for President."

On the 6th of April, 1789, "the Senate proceeded to ballot for the choice of a President for the sole purpose of opening and counting the votes for President of the United States," and John Langdon was elected.

Now this was the work of the authors of the Constitution. The convention which framed it recommended that a President of the Senate should be appointed "for the sole purpose of receiving, opening, and counting the Electoral votes," and he was so chosen. That was to be, and was, his only function. Now, if it it had been intended by the framers of that enactment that the President of the Senate was not to count the votes, but that such duty was to devolve upon the Senate and House if they could agree—and upon no mortal or tribunal if they could not—doubtless the idle ceremony of appointing a President of the Senate solely for such a purpose would have been dispensed with. Probably one would not have been appointed merely to break the seals of the certificates, as that could as well have been done by a clerk or porter.

Mr. Langdon, after the two houses met, declared that "he in their presence had opened and counted the votes of the Electors for President and Vice President of the United States," and that George Washington was unanimously elected President, and that John Adams was duly elected Vice President. Thereupon a committee of four was appointed to prepare a certificate of the election to be signed by Mr. Langdon, and that framed and by him signed stated that he "did, in the presence of the said Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and count all the votes of the Electors," &c.

Such was the practical construction put by the framers of the Constitution upon the clause under consideration, and it would seem to be decisive as to its true meaning.

In substantial harmony with this practical construction the votes continued thereafter were counted upon many occasions, the particulars of which it is hardly necessary to state. The Senate and House were in the habit of appointing tellers "to make lists of the votes for President and Vice President of the United States as they shall be declared." Such was the form adopted in the appointment of these persons up to and in 1829, in 1833, in 1841, in 1849, and in 1853. Their duty was to make these lists substantially in aid of the President of the Senate; for it was never, down to the period last named, supposed or pretended that they had any power whatever to count the votes. They were by the terms of their appointment to make a list of the votes "as they shall be declared," and they were to be declared—not by the tellers, but by the President of the Senate.

It was, of course, desirable that each house should preserve among its archives, one of these lists, as a record of what it had witnessed. From time to time, objections to the counting of the Electoral votes were made by members of the Senate or House of Representatives, but in three of the most notable instances the objections were to counting votes of States upon the ground that they had not been admitted to the Union at the time their Electoral vote was cast. In no instance, it is believed, was the general right of the President of the Senate to count the Electoral vote actually questioned in practice, although in several instances the question was raised whether some particular vote should or should not be counted, and in debate, both Senators and Representatives have, at late years, asserted the right of the two houses to count. Whether this is to overthrow the authority of the early practice to which I have referred should be carefully considered, as well as the peril and inconvenience of of the absence of any lawful means of counting the Electoral vote.

When objections have been made by members of either house to counting any particular vote, they have never conferred together or listened to debate upon the subject; and upon no occasion, that I am aware of, was it insisted or suggested that the two houses could act jointly in convention for the purpose of counting the votes, or considering any question which might arise.

In 1857, when Mr. Buchanan was elected, tellers were appointed as before, "to make a list of the votes as they shall be declared," and for the first time in our history, they reported "that they have counted the votes of all the States east for President and Vice President," &c., and Mr. Buchanan was declared elected.

It was an ill omen that for the first time in the history of the Government these tellers should have reported that they had counted the Electoral votes.

During the term of the President thus counted in, the rebellion was by him and his party nourished until it finally ripened and culminated. Upon the counting of the votes in 1861, the President of the Senate declared Mr. Lincoln elected President—tellers having been as usual appointed by the two houses "to make a list of the votes as they shall be declared," and they were declared, as before stated, by the President of the Senate.

The twenty-second joint rule of the two houses, already mentioned, was made in February, 1865, by which they agreed that no Electoral vote objected to by either should be counted, except by the concurrent votes of the two. The real purpose of the rule was as I have before stated, to prevent States whose relations with the Union were not constitutionally established from voting for President and Vice President. It was made when both houses were in pursuit of the same object; and, although the same end might doubtless have been obtained by other means, the rule was agreed to evidently without much consideration, and very clearly not in harmony with the Constitution or with antecedent practice under it.

CONCLUSIONS.

If the committees now appointed for conference should agree, that unless a majority of both houses concur in rejecting an Electoral vote, it must be counted, a conclusion as it seems to me much more just would be reached than that which the rule established, and I may, I think, add, that such a mode of settling the difficulty would be satisfactory to the country, although others may be equally so.

I cannot doubt, however, that wise legislation on this subject is indispensably necessary to settle a question on which such a difference of opinion exists. It is probably too late now to frame and adopt it with a view to the count of the vote in February. In the absence of such legislation, it seems to me the early practice adopted by the framers of the Constitution and stated by Chancellor Kent as the true one, should now be repeated. Any compromise which seeks a solution of the difficulty outside of and independent of the provisions of the Constitution, is quite likely to prove in the end a curse instead of a blessing; and none is very likely to be agreed upon so well calculated to compose the minds as that adopted by our Revolutionary fathers. If men should be so mad or foolish as to resist by violence the inauguration or rule of an honest, able, and patriotic man because the votes which elected him were counted in the same manner as were those which elected George Washington and many succeeding Presidents, let the consequences be upon their heads. A corporal's guard will not be found willing to engage in an enterprise so wicked after the 4th of March next.

I had written thus far before reading a pamphlet entitled "The Electoral Votes of 1876," in which Mr. David Dudley Field attempts to state who should count the votes, what should be counted, and the remedy for a wrong count. Upon reading the pamphlet, I find he might consistently with any practical purpose have entirely omitted to consider the last two questions, for he assumes the two houses alone have power to count the Electoral votes, and states: "The result must be that what the two houses do not agree to count cannot be counted." This conclusion appears from the tone of his pamphlet to be quite satisfactory to him. To me it is otherwise, for it is discouraging to learn that after the people have, through their Electors, cast their votes for President and Vice President, there should be found no tribunal having the power, and whose duty it is, to determine the facts necessary to decide which is especially so, when I reflect that at the close of another election, should one be held, Mr. Field may again declare, "The result must be that what the two houses do not agree to count cannot be counted."

THE PRECEDENTS.

Possibly he might weary of this repetition; perhaps a change of circumstances might lead him to reconsider, and even change, his conclusion; but supposing him to stand firm, there would be no mode of relief unless a majority of the people or the President of the Senate should differ with him. He goes on a brief mission to Congress, where, as his pamphlet indicates, he will be enrolled among the followers of Mr. Tilden. If he should assist in defeating the will of the people as already expressed, and in compelling a resort to another election, a national misfortune, to which the World refers with apparent favor, the injury, nay, destruction, which such success will entail upon the business and social interests of the country, may lead Mr. Field and those with whom he acts to the conclusion that such a mode of counting the Electoral vote as was recommended and adopted by the framers of our Constitution is not to be more trust, and better calculated to insure the happiness and prosperity of our people than a method founded upon the proposition that "the result must be that what the two houses do not agree to count cannot be counted."

E. W. STOUGHTON.

CAN THIS BE TRUE?

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat prints a special telegram from Bloomington, Ill., dated 2d inst., which says: "To-day your correspondent was informed by M. H. Jameson, a prominent and reliable gentleman of this city, that while traveling over the Lake Shore road in Ohio 20 days ago, he was told, while in conversation with a gentleman resiging at the first station west of Ashtabula, that the iron bridge on the above road at Ashtabula was considered in a very unsafe condition, and the people residing in the immediate neighborhood had for some time predicted that some terrible calamity would result from the insecurity of the bridge unless the necessary repairs were made."

A HUSBAND'S COMPROMISE.

The Manchester (N. H.) Mirror relates the following: "Samuel Batchelder, of East Northwood, who lost his wife one night last Fall, found her last week in Haverhill, Mass., with a man named Frederick Davis, also an emigrant from Northwood. The unpleasantness which this would have caused among quick-tempered people, and all disputes as to the ownership of the woman were avoided by a sort of Missouri compromise, under the terms of which Davis is to keep out of the town of Northwood and Nottingham for two years, and Batchelder is to have the woman as long as he keeps her within the limits of those towns."

THE CRIMINAL RECORD.

THE MAIL ROBBERIES.

ARRAIGNMENT OF THE PRISONERS—LIST OF THE CHECKS, DRAFTS, AND NOTES ALREADY RECOVERED.

There were no further developments yesterday with regard to the mail robberies which have been successfully perpetrated from time to time during the past month on the mail routes between this City, Philadelphia, and Boston. Government officers, as well as members of Pinkerton's Detective Agency, are making every effort to detect all of the suspected parties, and with expectations of success. It is conceded that the leaders of the gang are still at large, for it is known that other and more skillful criminals than those already arrested have been connected with these robberies. The persons arrested on Tuesday last, John Kelly, James Crawford, John De Friest, Clinton Eddy, and Mary J. Collins, were arraigned yesterday before United States Commissioner Shields, Crawford and De Friest waived examination, and were held to await the action of the Grand Jury. Kelly and Mary Collins demanded an examination, and this was set for Wednesday next at 3 P. M. In the case of Eddy, Assistant United States Attorney Foster said he did not think the Government had been able to obtain sufficient evidence to convict, and his discharge was ordered. It is considered that he was not connected with the thieves, but was unfortunate in being found in their company when arrested.

The following is a list of the checks, notes, and drafts found in the trunk of Mary J. Collins, in Prince street. They are in number, and were probably to be used through forged indorsements, as opportunity would permit. Some of these will be retained as evidence in the trial of the case, but the others will be returned to the lawful owners after the examination is closed before the United States Commissioner:

A PICKPOCKET'S GOOD FORTUNE.

Sophia Lyons, wife of "Ned" Lyons, a wealthy residence of Montreal, and one of the most clever criminals in America, who was arrested at the Suffolk County Fair by Detectives Folk and Corwin, on Oct. 3, 1876, for pocket picking, has been released from prison by Judge Dyckman on the ground that there was no proof that she was the person who escaped from Sing Sing some years ago. When Mrs. Lyons was arrested she was sent back to fulfil an unexpired term in Sing Sing. Both she and her husband escaped from Sing Sing before they had served terms for which they had been sentenced for former crimes.

A MOCK AUCTION SALE.

GRAVE CHARGES AGAINST A HITHERTO REPUTABLE FIRM—THE FACTS TO BE LAID BEFORE THE MAYOR.

Messrs. H. B. Herts & Sons, auctioneers, of No. 17 Park place, recently advertised that an auction of furs, robes, &c., would take place yesterday morning at No. 17 Park place, by order of William C. Conner, Sheriff, and William Henry, Deputy Sheriff. A notice was appended to the advertisement as follows:

"We beg to call the particular attention of our friends and patrons to the above sale, it being the continuation of the same goods sold last week, and comprising the finest stock of furs ever offered at auction in this City. All goods are manufactured in a first-class manner for the retail trade, and are worthy the attention of those in want of fine furs. The goods can be seen early on the morning of the sale at our sales-room, No. 17 Park place."

Capt. Walsh, of the Ordinance Police, who had so vigorously followed up mock-auction sales in the past, came to the conclusion yesterday morning that all was not right, and that some of the parties who were interested in the mock-auction horse and furniture sales were also interested in this one. The Captain at once went to the office of Sheriff Conner, No. 27 Beekman street, and stated the case to Mr. Conner, asking if it was all right? Mr. Conner said that he had no papers or execution in the case, and knew nothing about the matter whatever. He also stated that Mr. Herts had last week sold under an execution, to obtain a judgment of $14,000, a line of furs and robes, and that the sale at that time was correct, and according to the auction laws. He subsequently stated to a TIMES reporter that he had not the slightest intimation that a sale was to take place yesterday, and that he had not seen the advertisement. Capt. Walsh, said he was convinced that a sham sale was to take place, and after leaving Sheriff Conner's office, he proceeded to the sales-room where the goods were being sold. He found Mr. Herts, and asked him if the auction was a legal Sheriff's sale. Mr. Herts replied that it was. Capt. Walsh then asked for the papers in the case, when Mr. Herts said, he had none. Capt. Walsh had them in his possession. In a few moments Henry came in, and Capt. Walsh asked him if he had the papers or the execution in his possession. Henry, turning pale, replied that he had not. Capt. Walsh then asked him if he was not aware that he was compelled him to produce the papers and execution at the sale. Henry, apparently very much frightened, said that he did, but that nevertheless he could not produce them.

Mr. Herts then interfered, and asked who Capt. Walsh was and by what authority he interrupted the sale. W. W. Schenck, of No. 118 Liberty street, and other gentlemen, stepped forward and identified Capt. Walsh. Mr. Herts and his sons then went into the rear office in a state of excitement, after which Capt. Walsh addressed those present, saying the sale was not by order of the Sheriff, and warned the people against being swindled. There were about 300 persons present, and a large crowd had collected in the street. Mr. Herts became out of his office in the midst of the uproar and denounced Capt. Walsh as a "liar," and said that he would have him "broke" in 24 hours or forfeit $10,000. He then tore down the notice of the Sheriff's sale on the door, and declared that the auction should go on as a regular auction sale, and also threatened Herts unless Capt. Walsh "cleared out" immediately he would "throw him out on his head." The threat was not put into execution, however, and Capt. Walsh, or some of his officers, remained throughout the sale. During the excitement Deputy Sheriff Henry stepped out and observed, and did not thereafter be found at his office. Capt. Walsh stated that a conscicuous among the persons in the sales-room, were a large number of pickpockets and thieves, acting as "cappers" to the sale. The sale was a complete failure, as the people acted on the advice of Capt. Walsh, and left the place without making many purchases. It is believed that Mr. Herts noted was in collusion with H. B. Herts & Sons, and that he was to receive a percentage on the sales. A report of the case is to be made to Mayor Ely by Capt. Walsh.

A DISHONEST CLERK ARRESTED.

AN EMPLOYE OF THE PALETTE CLUB CHARGED WITH FORGERY AND EMBEZZLEMENT—HE CONFESSES HIS GUILT.

One of the evil results of fast life in this City was exemplified yesterday, in the arrest of Thomas Spencer, the clerk of the Palette Club, on a charge of embezzlement. Fortunately for the club, however, the theft was discovered before the amount had attained serious proportions. During the latter part of December, Mr. J. Seaver Page was admitted to membership in the club, and shortly afterward sent his check for $50 to Mr. Robert Dunlap, the Treasurer, to cover his initiation fee and dues. The latter failed to receive it, and after making inquiries of the clerk, who denied any knowledge of the matter, Mr. Dunlap desired Mr. Page to obtain for him the receipt and the check from the bank upon which it was drawn. Mr. Page did so, and Mr. Dunlap discovered that the indorsement of the check parties themselves. If a law should be passed requiring telegraph companies to destroy all messages there would be no further difficulty about these drag-net investigations, and when courts of justice or committees of Congress desired telegrams they would be commelled to apply to the sender or receiver, and not to the custodian of the messages.

Mr. WALLACE, of Pennsylvania, argued that it was the duty of the Senate to compel these telegra phic communications to be brought to light when they affected the administration of justice.

Mr. WHYTE, of Maryland, said there had been no legislation making communications by telegraph confidential, and he could not see why a party having possession of information which was sent over a telegraph office should not be made to disclose that information. If any statute of a State proposed to punish a witness for disclosing such information he was fully protected by the act of 1863. The laws of Oregon had no application whatever to this case. Whenever it was made to appear that the inquiry was a pertinent one a telegraph operator had no privilege upon which he could refuse to divulge the information required. He asked where the difference existed between a telegraph operator and an expressman; and if anybody denied that the Senate had the right to send to an express office and compel the production of books and receipts, as it did during the late Belknap impeachment trial? Express and telegraph companies, he said, were private corporations, and the agent of any corporation could not shield himself from answering an inquiry by either house of Congress on account of the rules of such corporation. In the absence of law creating a bulwark around a telegraph operator he had no privilege. He favored the passage of the resolution.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, also favored the passage of the resolution, and said he would give telegraph companies all rights guaranteed them by charters, so far as he could do so by the passage of the resolution and everything else which would show that there had been wrong-doing in the election of a President of the United States.

Mr. COCKRILL, of Missouri, said no Senator had been late to answer to the call in proceedings for this case had ever been before the Senate. He had, upon examination, found that during the impeachment of Andrew Johnson the Senate of the United States, with the Chief Justice presiding, had summoned Charles A. Tinker and compelled him to produce certain telegrams which passed between Mr. Johnson and Mr. Semmes, of Alabama. He (Mr. Cockrell) was decidedly in favor of letting the people know what the two political parties which pretended to act for the people had been doing, and would therefore vote for the resolution.

The question being on the passage of the resolution, resulted, yeas, 33; nays 3, as follows:

NAYS—Messrs. Barnum, Burnside, Eaton—3.

The Senate adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THE PENSION BILL.

On motion of Mr. ATKINS, of Tennessee, the Senate amendments to the bill making appropriation for the payment of invalid and other pensions were concurred in.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole (Mr. Hooker, of Massachusetts, in the Chair) on the private calendar.

Five Pension bills only were passed, all the other bills which were reached on the calendar having been objected to.

THE TELEGRAPHIC DISPATCH QUESTION.

The committee rose at 2 o'clock, and the House thereupon proceeded to the question of the recusant witness, Mr. E. W. Barnes, the New-Orleans Manager of the Western Union Telegraph Company. Sergeant at Arms presenting him before the bar of the House.

The SPEAKER, addressing Mr. Barnes, said that it was his [the Speaker's] duty to ask him what excuse he had to offer for the failure to produce before the House Committee sitting at New-Orleans telegrams called for in the subpœna served on him.

Mr. Barnes replied that his answer had been prepared in writing by his counsel, Messrs. Lowrey & Ashton, and he asked that it be read by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER suggested that the answer should be under oath, and Mr. Barnes replied that it was under oath.

Messrs. CONGER, of Michigan, and KASSON, of Iowa, objected to a precedent being set for requiring the answer of a witness charged with contempt to be made under oath.

Mr. GARFIELD, of Ohio, agreed with the Speaker that the facts contained in the answer should be made under oath, but he thought it would be rather hard to require a man to swear to the argument of his counsel.

The SPEAKER said he sympathized with Mr. Garfield in that sentiment. [Laughter.]

The Clerk then proceeded to read the answer, which is a voluminous paper, quoting all the proceedings thus far in the matter. The witness protests that the paper designated as a subpœna was not in form and substance a subpœna to him, or to any one else, except to John G. Thompson, the Sergeant at Arms, named therein; that it was in no sense an order of the House which could be a subject of obedience or disobedience in him, and that such paper could not be rightfully made the ground of inflicting a penalty on him. The answer proceeds to argue the inviolability of telegraphic dispatches, citing in support of it Cooley's Constitutional Limitations. It then recites the rules of the company forbidding the communication of dispatches when applied for, unless by permission of the executive officer or by the order of a court. The witness then says that as soon as he received the paper served upon him he apprised his Superintendent of the fact, and asked for instructions. Another reason for his doing so was that some time previously he had received instructions from the Superintendent at Mobile to send to him all the business that had passed through the New-Orleans office from the 1st of November to the 6th of December, and he had done so before he had been served with the paper of the committee. The instructions received from his Superintendent were to decline furnishing the dispatches called for, and that he would be relieved of all responsibility in the matter; he declares that the transmission of the papers to Mobile he has had no control over them, nor has he any knowledge whatever that such messages as were called for in the paper ever passed through the New-Orleans office. He does not believe that if any of them remained in the office their illegal possession was in him as a subordinate employe, and he expresses the belief that if he had undertaken to rummage the office for them and carry them away he would have been committing an actual trespass. He also pleads, he says, that the paper served upon him is couched in such sweeping terms as to be a general warrant to search, in violation of the prohibition of the Constitution, and at variance with the great principles of personal liberty and right established for all freemen of the Angio-Saxon race. Also that the Legislature of Louisiana makes the disclosure of telegraphic dispatches a misdemeanor. He declares that he did not contemplate any contempt of the authority or privileges of the House, and had only sought to do his duty as he had understood it; the messages of the office were in possession of the company, and not of himself or his clerk; and he therefore, asks to be discharged from custody and permitted to return to his home.

The reading of the paper being concluded, Mr. KNOTT, of Kentucky, offered a resolution that the report of the committee, the answer just read, and all other papers relating to the alleged contempt be referred to the Judiciary Committee, with instructions to report as early as practicable what action should be taken in relation thereto. The resolution was adopted, and the Sergeant at Arms was directed to retain Mr. Barnes in custody.

THE DEFICIENCY IN THE CONTINGENT FUND.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole on the Contingency Deficiency bill, Mr. Hoskins, of New-York, in the chair.

An amendment offered by Mr. WOOD, of New-York, to pay $600 for temporary clerk hire for the Committee of Ways and Means was made the text for a good deal of raillery and satire on the Democratic Party as the party of economy and reform, but Mr. GARFIELD, of Ohio, came to the rescue, and explained that the extra clerk hire was owing to the illness of the regular clerk. The amendment was agreed to.

After about two hours spent over the Deficiency bill the committee rose, and the bill was passed, and the House adjourned till to-morrow, a motion by Mr. Knott, of Kentucky, to adjourn over till Monday having only been lost by the absence of a quorum voting.

A SENATOR'S DISAPPOINTMENT.

The Boston Post divulges the following: "A slight mistake was made by a prominent member of the upper branch of the State house yesterday. The mantle of the agricultural doctor didn't fall exactly where many of the wise ones thought it would, and where the aforesaid member had prepared to receive it, the consequence being a sudden burying sensation in the region of the member, with full faith in caucus promises and the surface drift of the waves political, had even gone so far as to prepare a speech, thanking his fellow-members for the honor, &c. There is nothing remarkable in this, however, for most legislators know something of the trouble of uttering an impromptu address to suit an occasion for which it was not originally intended; but in the fulness of his heart the confident Senator actually yielded his manuscript to an insinuating reporter, and while the balloting was in progress on the hill the typesetters were busy in a trio of newspaper offices. When the result was finally reached, there was a tumult among the legislative scribes, and it was only by the most frantic efforts that the grateful thanks of the wrong man were not given to the world."

THE BORDER LINE.

The San Francisco Chronicle of Dec. 29 says:

"Mrs. Antonio Verduzo, a Mexican lady of prepossessing appearance, 33 years of age, and worth $300,000 in her own right, has been the subject of an investigation by the Commissioners at Lasuen the past two days. She left her husband in Mexico about 18 months ago and came to this city, where she has on several occasions invoked the aid of the Police to protect her from imaginary enemies. Yesterday she consented, after repeated refusals, to return home with her husband, and she was discharged from custody. The Commissioners, coming to the following conclusion: 'We think, after a patient investigation of this case, that her mind is in that condition that may be regarded as the border line between eccentricity and insanity, but we do not find sufficient evidence of insanity to justify us in the opinion that she should be deprived of her freedom.'"

LAW REPORTS.

COURT NOTES.

John McGloyne was held yesterday, by United States Commissioner Shields, in $500 bail, on a charge of passing counterfeit fifty-cent stamps.

N. B. Sadler was substituted yesterday in the place of George L. Trask, deceased, as the assignee of Henry T. Heimbold in the suit against the latter brought by Richard S. Sniffen, in the Supreme Court.

William Hayes, who stabbed James Kirby at a notorious den in the Bowery on Tuesday night, was arraigned at the Essex Market Police Court yesterday, and was held by Justice Wandell in $2,000 bail to answer.

Louis Stroh, of No. 244 Avenue A, one of the milk dealers indicted on complaint of the Board of Health for selling watered milk, pleaded guilty yesterday in the Court of General Sessions. Judge Gildersleeve sentenced the delinquent to pay a fine of $25.

The trial of the suits against the McCunn estate was resumed before Judge Lawrence in Supreme Court, Special Term, yesterday. The deficits and certain in the case of the Victory Webb Printing Company against Henry Ward Beecher, and others. The action is to recover about $30,000, and the value of a press ordered but not taken for the Christian Union.

The testimony of John Henry Puleston, George Cox Bompas, Thomas William Bischoff, and Charles Fitch Kemp, taken by commission in London, was read yesterday in the United States Circuit Court, in the suit of the Emma Silver Mining Company against Trenor W. Park and others. The testimony did not vary materially from that previously read in court.

The trial of Gabe Costali, a Frenchman, charged with attempting to black-mail the proprietress of a Greene street den, which was begun before Judge Gildersleeve on Thursday, was yesterday discontinued, owing to the indisposition of Assistant District Attorney Horace Russell, who had charge of the case. Costali will be placed on trial again as soon as Mr. Russell resumes his duties.

Judge Donohue, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday denied a motion made, by the defendant, to open the default obtained in the suit of William A. Butler, as Receiver of the Manufacturers' and Builders' Bank against John Sexton. The action was on notes given for stock. The defendans claimed that he was sick at the time the default was taken and could not ascertain his legal rights.

On the 23d December, William C. Shannon, a sneak thief, residing at No. 308 West Sixteenth street, entered the premises of Thomas J. Hall, No. 313 West Thirty-third street, and was about to help himself to the silverware in the basement when he was detected. In the Court of General Sessions yesterday, Shannon pleaded guilty, and Judge Gildersleeve sentenced him to two years in State Prison.

Judge Donohue, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, granted an order for the publication of the summons and complaint in the suit of George Brown and Charles A. Wright against the Townsend Savings Bank of New-Haven. The plaintiffs in the action are the administrators of Edward S. Wright, deceased, and sue to recover $40,564 55 on policies of insurance deposited in the bank by the deceased in his lifetime as collateral.

On the 31st of July last, George H. Booth, of No. 114 East Eighty-seventh street, while in company with a coach-driver named William Clark Turner, living at No. 540 Tenth avenue, was robbed of his gold watch, valued at $170, and a portion of his chain. The plunder was subsequently sold to Ehrlich, a jeweler, and traced to the possession of the coach-driver. In the Court of General Sessions, yesterday, Turner pleaded guilty to grand larceny, and was sentenced by Judge Gildersleeve to four years in State Prison.

Judge Speir, in the Superior Court, Special Term, yesterday granted an order of reference in the case of Margaret Fitzgerald against Edward Fitzgerald. The action is brought for a decree of limited divorce on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment. According to the complaint, the parties were married in this City 16 years ago. The defendant, as is alleged, is a habitual drunkard, and pointed a pistol at his wife while she was with child. The plaintiff also says he beat and kicked her, and after committing other acts of cruelty, abandoned her.

BURGLARS DISPOSED OF.

The following burglars were disposed of yesterday by Judge Gildersleeve and Assistant District Attorney Herring: John Oxford, an oysterman, of No. 17 Carmine street, who broke into the oyster scow of James W. Boyle, lying at the foot of Broome street, East River, and stole property valued at $100, was sent to State Prison for two years. Patrick Rooney, of No. 42 Rivington street, and Peter Messager, of No. 42 Henry street, who entered the cigar manufactory of Adolph Roth, at No. 9 Bowery, with intent to steal, were each sent to the Penitentiary for one year. Wm. Smith, of No. 164 Allen street, who broke into the lager beer saloon of Adam Schmidt, No. 230 Chrystie street, and stole therefrom $1 04, was sent to State Prison for two years. John Sands, of Tenth avenue, between Twenty-seventh and Twenty-eighth streets, who broke into the dyeing establishment of Louis J. Gaillard, No. 413 West Twenty-seventh street, on the night of December 23, and stole a copper kettle, was sentenced to two years and six months in State Prison. James Hagan, of No. 328 East Fifty-third street, who broke into the grocery store of John Graham, at No. 860 Second avenue, with intent to steal, was sentenced to three years in State Prison.

PARTNERS OPPOSED TO EACH OTHER.

Judge Donohue, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, reserved his decision on a motion to open the default in the case of Thomas B. Remington against Charles Westermann. The suit was brought to recover damages for the detention and changing of a $5,000 Tontine policy of insurance on the plaintiff's life. The plaintiff obtained judgments by default for $2,500. Some very curious statements were made in connection with the case. It appears that the parties to the action were partners in business, and, according to the plaintiff, the defendant promised to put a certain amount of money into the partnership funds, but did not do so. Remington himself gave Westermann a power of attorney and the policy in suit. Westermann, as is alleged, went on a wedding trip after this, but, before going, altered the combination in the look of the partnership safe so that Remington could not open it. When Westermann came back Remington demanded the surrender of his policy, and also verbally revoked the power of attorney. Westermann, as is stated, refused to give up the policy. The parties have instituted criminal proceedings against each other. Judge Donohue reserved his decision on the motion to open the default.

A SUIT FOR THE VALUE OF CHEESE.

The case of John H. McCabe against the Mayor, &c., was brought to trial before Judge Van Vorst, in Part I. of the Supreme Court, yesterday. It appeared, from the facts of the case, that a man named Mignault some time since made a contract to supply 1,000 pounds of cheese to the Commissioners of Charities and Correction, for $70. Mignault went to McCabe to procure the cheese; the latter, however, refused to trust Mignault, but delivered the cheese to the Commissioners himself, and brought in his bill for the same to the bookkeeper of the department. The amount of the bill was not paid to McCabe, he not being the contractor. Five minutes after McCabe left the place Mignault came in, had the bill changed to his name, and was paid the amount. Mignault then went away. McCabe now sues for the amount. The defense is that the contract was with Mignault, who was paid. Judge Van Vorst reserved his decision as to the question of the City's liability.

DISPUTE OVER A WILL.

The case of R. W. Van Benschoten and others against James W. White and others was brought up before Judge Donohue, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, on a motion to compel the defendants to make their answer more definite and certain. Decision was reserved. It appears that the plaintiffs are the grandchildren of Richard White and the children of his daughter, Martha M. Van Benschoten. Richard White died July 10, 1876, leaving a will in which he gave his property to three of his six children, and excluding the plaintiffs either as well as the plaintiffs. The present action is, in form, a partition suit, the plaintiffs alleging that Richard White's will is invalid and void, as having been made under undue influence, while the testator was enfeebled by age and weakened in mind. The answer asserts that the will was made 12 years before the testator's death, and denies generally the allegations in the complaint.

THE HARVEST QUEEN DISASTER.

The trial of the suit of C. H. Marshall against the Oceanic Steam Navigation Company, to recover damages for the loss of the ship Harvest Queen, alleged to have been sunk by collision with the steam-ship Adriatic of the White Star Line, was begun yesterday in the United States District Court, before Judge Blatchford. Mr. Stillman, of Butler, Stillman & Hubbard, appeared for the plaintiff, and Messrs. E. P. Wheeler, J. H. Choate, and McDaniel, Lummis & Souther for the defendants. A great mass of testimony has been taken before Commissioners in the case, and the reading of this was begun yesterday. It will probably take a week or more to conclude the reading of the sworn testimony, which contains the testimony. The substance of the evidence has been already published in THE TIMES. The trial will be resumed on Monday.

FINANCIAL AFFAIRS.

COLLECTING MONEY ON A CONTRACT.

An order of reference was made by Judge Donohue yesterday in the case of Ellen Duffy, as Administratrix of John Duffy, deceased, against the Mechanics' and Traders' National Bank. In her complaint the plaintiff states that John Duffy was a contractor, and at the time of his death was engaged in the performance of several City contracts. Among these was a contract for the building of a sewer, the price of the work being $38,000. Duffy assigned the contract to the bank as collateral for advances made to him. After his death his personal representatives went on and completed the work under the contract. The bank collected from the City $25,000 on the contract. The plaintiffs allege that this was more than the amount of the advances made to Duffy, and they therefore seek an accounting.

A USELESS LIE.

The Boston Transcript of Thursday thus describes a recent case of apparently profitless deception: "A young man, a mechanic, sought and obtained employment of a well-known manufacturing firm in this city, recently, and for a time worked with due regularity and acceptance. One morning he failed to put in an appearance, but his absence was explained in a letter received next day, which said his sister was sick with diphtheria at Milford, and not expected to recover. The day following a second letter announced her death, coupled with a request for a remittance of $25. The money was sent, with a letter of condolence in his bereavement. The young man returned to his work in a couple of days, but it was for a short time. He disappeared again. He was, however, soon heard from. This time a letter from Woonsocket, R. I., written in an elegant hand and in the choicest English, purporting to come from the man's wife, told in plaintive language of the death of her husband of diphtheria, which he had doubtless taken from his sister whom he tended in her last moments. The letter closed with a request for the amount due her departed supporter. The money was sent. And then the matter apparently rested, so far the firm was concerned, save an occasional remark as to the uncertainty of human life, or of regret at having lost so promising a workman. Not long after this, a gentleman from Worcester was in this city. While here he visited the firm before alluded to, on business, and in course of conversation said: 'Oh, by the way, Linscott's a first-rate man, and we are glad we got him.' 'Linscott!' says the Bostonian; 'what Linscott?' 'Why,' replied he of the Heart, 'the man that worked for you. He told me he had been here.' 'Why, man,' said our Boston friend, 'he's dead; died of diphtheria!' 'He may be dead,' replied the Worcester gentleman, 'but he's a pretty lively dead man, considering he's been working for us every day for a fortnight!' Now the question recurs, 'What did he do it for?' He could not have hoped to obtain money, unless—and possibly this may be the solution—he thought his owe and his wife's bereavements might cause the sympathy of his employers to take a pecuniary form. Those gentlemen, however, are not disposed to accept this explana tion, but think the young man's action proceeded from a pure love of invention and a picturesque turn of mind."

COLD WEATHER IN FLORIDA.

The Jacksonville (Fla.) Union of the 1st inst. says: "A few days since many were looking forward to the Christmas and New Year's holidays as a season of festivity and happiness. Bright anticipations of rides and walks, and parties and pleasures filled the hearts of the young, and thoughts of family reunions and holiday home comforts and luxuries rejoiced the old. But, alas! for the mutability of all earthly things, the several days before and after were gloomy with clouds and rain, mud and discomfort held high carnival, and happiness or pleasure was not. On Friday last the storm passed away and a violent gale ran riot and every side, filling eyes with dust, and making none quite happy. This was followed at night by intense cold, and Saturday and Sunday overcoats and shawls and other wraps were in demand. Everybody was shivering and complaining. Ice formed in many places at night, and vegetation suffered sadly. The mercury reached as low as 28°, and the wind was cold and piercing. To-day has been looked forward to in hopes that among would be made for Christmas deficiencies, and that the closing of the annual holidays would be far pleasanter than the beginning. It is not generally supposed that much injury has been done by the frost or cold beyond present discomfort and disappointment, but coming as it has, at a time when it was wanted less than any other, if such a thing is possible, we have realized its presence and disagreeable features intensely. The bright sun of this morning has a cheerful look, and seems to smile down, wishing us a happy New Year, and promising a future much brighter than the gloom and chill of the past week would lead us to expect."

GOOD, TILL CONTRADICTED.

The Rutland (Vt.) Herald of Thursday says the medium through which the following story was first made public: "There is great rejoicing among the friends of P. Turney, of Waterbury. They knew that he was in the United States Army, and at the time Gen. Custer was killed by the Indians he was also reported killed. His father has now received a letter from him, saying that he was with Gen. Custer when the General and nearly all his men were killed by the Indians last Summer, but he made his escape in a manner truly wonderful, according to his account of it. He feigned to be dead, and lay with the killed until most of the Indian warriors had passed him, and when he was discovered by an Indian, he says, he killed the Indian and dressed himself in the Indian's clothing, and escaped into the forest. The Indians who saw him on his way to the woods supposed he was one of their warriors on duty. When in the woods he concealed himself, and afterward made his way to his friends in safety."

DEATH OF A NOTED HORSE.

The Boston Transcript of the 4th inst. says: "'Star of the South,' which Rev. W. H. H. Murray, in his book, The Perfect Horse, so enthusiastically talks about, died at the private stable of E. B. Jenne, in this city, yesterday, of acute pneumonia, after a sickness of three days. This fine animal was the property of Mr. James C. Smith, of Richmond, Va., and has been North over three years. It was while he was on the stock farm of Mr. Murray in Connecticut that that gentleman wrote 'He is the most perfect horse we have ever seen,' and 'in every branch and line of his ancestry he is a thoroughbred.' He was a beautiful golden chestnut, marked by a white star in his forehead, and by reason of that only mark was he styled the 'Star of the South.' He stood 15¾ hands high, and was the pleasure of eyes."

FRIDAY, Jan. 5—P. M.

Speculation on the Stock Exchange today was active and the market generally quite firm in tone. The feature in the dealings was the rapid advance in the Hannibal and St. Joseph shares and their equally rapid decline. The common rose to 15 and the preferred to 30, the former closing at 13⅞ and the latter at 27½. The early improvement was due to reports that the company was about to come into a large amount in land notes, and that a connection would be established with the Union Pacific Railroad.

The entire business for the day aggregated 114,600 shares, which included 29,300 Western Union, 16,200 Lake Shore, 13,600 Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, 12,800 Michigan Central, 11,200 Hannibal and St. Joseph, 7,600 St. Paul, 6,500 Ohio and Mississippi, 4,400 Rock Island, 3,900 New-Jersey Central, and 3,500 New-York Central. Western Union rose from 72⅛ to 73, afterward receded to 72⅛, and closed at 72⅜. Lake Shore advanced from 56⅛ to 56⅞, with closing sales at 56⅝. Michigan Central fluctuated between 47⅛ and 48, closing at 47⅞. Pacific Mail rose to 24⅜, Erie to 10, and Ohio and Mississippi to 7 3-16. The granger shares were firm and higher. The coal stocks were weak early in the day, but later recovered. Investment shares were stronger, especially for New-York Central and Rock Island, the former advancing to 102¼ and the latter to 101⅝. Express shares were firm on small transactions.

The Bank of Commerce, following the example of the Fourth National and other banks, is taking steps to reduce its capital from $10,000,000 to $5,000,000.

The money market was somewhat easier today, and most of the business was at 7 ℘ cent. currency. There were exceptional transactions at 7, gold, and 6 ℘ cent. The January disbursements are beginning to exert their influence on the market. Discounts are unchanged. The national bank notes received at Washington for redemption amounted to $400,000. The following were the rates of exchange on New-York at the undermentioned cities to-day: Savannah, selling par to 3-16 offered; St. Louis, par; Cincinnati firmer, 50 to 100 discount; New-Orleans commercial scarce, nominally ¼ discount and par, and Chicago 50 discount.

The foreign advices were favorable, the improvement noted yesterday in the London market being well maintained. Consols opened at 94⅝ @94¾ and closed at a reaction of ⅛ ℘ cent. for money and the account. United States Bonds advanced ⅛ @¼ ℘ cent., except for new 5s, which closed at 107⅜, against 107⅛ yesterday. Old 1865s rose to 105¼ @105⅜, 1867s to 108¾, and 10-40s to 109. Er

On Monday Louisiana will again be brought face to face with revolution. NICHOLLS will be "inaugurated" by the Democrats as Governor and WILTZ as Lieutenant Governor, and they will evidently be prepared to go a little beyond WADE HAMPTON'S comedy of make-believe. They will gather around them an imitation of a fully-equipped State Government, and will proceed to fill judicial and executive offices throughout the entire State wherever they may choose to consider them vacant. Militia and a force of Metropolitan Police will be forthcoming at the bidding of the Democratic Administration, and failing the intervention of the United States troops, there will be civil war. NICHOLLS and his supporters are evidently acting under the advice of Northern Democrats, and are in possession of money supplied from the same source. The ultimatum seems to be a Democratic State Government or military rule, and the entire programme furnishes an excellent commentary on the professions of a desire for peace and of respect for law, about which we have heard so much of late from prominent Democrats.

Another illustration of what Democrats mean by respect for law may be found in the remarkable testimony of Gov. GROVER, of Oregon, before the Senate Committee yesterday. He admitted that there is a section of the Oregon statutes which requires the Governor to certify to the election of the person having the highest number of votes, but his idea of that section was that it referred to the person having the highest number of "legal votes." Even assuming, what is not true, that the ineligibility of WATTS rendered "illegal" the votes given for him in ignorance of his disqualification, how impudent is the Democratic approval of GROVER for doing what is called his duty, and the withholding of any word of condemnation for the Governors of Missouri, Tennessee, and New-Jersey, who, under similar circumstances, did, on the Grover theory, grossly neglect their duty. TILDEN cannot get his missing vote in Oregon by the application of a rule which would lose him three or four votes in other States.

Senator KELLY, of Oregon, thinks that the question decided by Gov. GROVER was not a judicial but a political question, and that the Governor had the right to decide it. He might have added that the Governor decided it in a way which was marked by the meanest devices of political trickery, and for reasons which were the outcome of a corrupt and shameless political intrigue. The Senate committee have got on the track of the "consideration" which seems to have swayed both GROVER and CRONIN, and of which Senator KELLY is probably not entirely ignorant. The Oregon case will shortly have too bad an odor even for the least scrupulous of Democrats to stand.

We publish to-day a very clear and thorough exposition of the only constitutional method for counting the Electoral vote, which has been sent us by Mr. E. W. STOUGHTON. We do not publish a lengthy opinion of ex-Judge CAMPBELL, of La., on the same subject, which we have received through the Associated Press. It was impossible for us to give both without excluding equally valuable and rather more interesting matter; it was impossible to do justice to either by any summary, however exhaustive. Being compelled to choose between the two, we have published Mr. STOUGHTON'S, and we do not think that our readers will find fault with the choice. We have on hand half a dozen weighty, though rather prolix, arguments by more or less eminent lawyers on the constitutional questions raised in connection with the counting of the vote. They contain material enough for a good-sized octavo volume, and they are at the disposal of any enterprising publisher. We fear that we shall be unable to find space for any of them, and we trust that gentlemen who may meditate sending us fresh disquisitions on a subject which, however seasonable, is already pretty well worn, will spare us the pain of declining their communications.

The trial of the suit in equity between the Centennial Board of Finance and the Assistant United States Treasurer at Philadelphia, as the representative of the Government, will begin before the United States Circuit Court at Philadelphia to-day. The question to be decided is simply whether the surplus of two millions of dollars remaining in the hands of the Board of Finance should be divided pro rata among the holders of capital stock, or whether it is only the half million remaining after the satisfaction of the claim of the Government, which should be so divided. Various sentimental reasons have been urged why the Government should waive its claim altogether, and allow the stockholders to obtain the partial repayment which a division of the two millions would secure for them. But the court must, of course, be guided by what they judge to be the true construction of the act of February, 1876, and that may probably enough be found adverse to the preferred rights of the stockholders. In such a case, the aid of Congress will undoubtedly be invoked for the purpose of giving the stockholders the benefit of the million and a half subscribed by the nation.

The almost total absence of any effort on the part of the Street-cleaning Bureau to deal with the accumulation of snow on the streets is a striking example of official imbecility. Our street-cleaning system is the most costly, and has proved itself one of the least efficient, in the country. While the Police Commissioners and the Board of Apportionment are squabbling about the transfer of a special appropriation for removing the snow, the retail trade of the City is suffering to the extent of tens of thousands of dollars a day from the disgusting condition of the streets, and the loss incident to the detention of traffic must count for many thousands more. Should a thaw come, the leading thoroughfares would be in the condition of a vast quagmire, and the side streets will have all the characteristics of a treacherous morass. As the funeral of a Police Commissioner cannot be secured with sufficient frequency to be of much public benefit, it might be well to try some legislative remedy for the incapacity of the Street-cleaning Bureau.

The changes made in the interior arrangement of New-York theatres, by order of the Department of Buildings, are by no means radical. Indeed, most people will consider the alterations ordered as being very slight. It is very likely that an expert might go through the theatres after these modifications are introduced and suggest many additional improvements. It is noticeable that the orders in every instance relate to additional facilities for egress from the buildings. Prevention of fire, or, what is more to the purpose, prevention of possible panic, is better than this. In some sense it is impossible to guard against the consequences of a panic. The precautions should be applied to the inflammable scenery, ceilings, and partitions, as well as to the great opening between the stage and the auditorium. When the theatres use non-inflammable scenery and fireproof drop-curtains, something practical will have been accomplished.

THE PLAIN WAY.

In our columns this morning, Mr. E. W. STOUGHTON discusses at length and with great clearness and force, the question of counting and declaring the Electoral votes. His letter will be found not only interesting as bearing on the law of this important question—as to which Mr. STOUGHTON is properly accepted as a high authority—but also as exposing with characteristic acumen and vigor the hopeless absurdity of the various Democratic theories. In his general conclusions, Mr. STOUGHTON agrees with the position early taken by THE TIMES that, in the absence of any specific legislation, there is ample power lodged by the Constitution in the President of the Senate to determine all the questions which have arisen regarding the Electoral votes. This is a fact which cannot be too much insisted upon. It has suited the purposes of the Democrats to conceal it, and to press upon the public mind the notion that the President of the Senate has only powers which are merely ministerial, or rather mechanical. They have persistently represented the opposite view as an invention of the day, and have affected to sneer it out of the way as not worthy of consideration.

But, so far from being a recent invention, or in any way an afterthought, the Republican doctrine is the plain teaching of the Constitution, sanctioned by the highest commentator's authority, and strengthened by many cases of early and consistent application in practice. At the time when the Constitution was yet new, when many of its framers sat in Congress, and when the public mind was keenly alive to any misinterpretation of its intention, especially in the direction of the assumption of power by single officers, it was not questioned that the counting of the Electoral vote was a duty of the President of the Senate. On the contrary, on the first occasion when that duty had to be performed, the Senate, being as yet without a President, elected one pro tempore for the express purpose of attending to it. And this clear and decisive instance is rendered more conclusive by the subsequent course of events, which was wholly in harmony with it.

The constitutional doctrine that the President of the Senate must, in the language of Kent, "count the votes and determine the result," involves the essential duty and power of that officer to determine which are votes, and what result they produce. This is the only interpretation of the law warranted by its language and by precedent, and, what is of controlling importance, it is the only one which will work. It is a principle as old as law itself that every legal provision must be so construed, if possible, as to make it effective. This is so clearly necessary that law would be useless without it. If courts and other bodies charged with finding the meaning of laws were turned loose to pick flaws in the statute-book, and to give heed to no law which was not absolutely incapable of dubious interpretation, we should have chaos come again. It has become a proverbial saying that no act of Parliament was ever passed, through which a coach and four could not be driven. If, then, no law were to be obeyed until captious objectors all ceased to find fault with its meaning, and all agreed upon its interpretation, the farce which Government would become might as well be at once swept off the stage.

Mr. STOUGHTON makes an extremely forcible explanation of the absolute impossibility of relying on any other interpretation of the Constitution and the laws, as they are, than that which THE TIMES has consistently advocated, namely, that the President of the Senate, guided by such information as he can command, shall decide what votes are to be counted by him; that he shall then count them, as his predecessors did in WASHINGTON'S day, and that the result arrived at shall be final. This is a method plainly derived from the Constitution, and it will work. All others rest on technical, narrow, or whimsical interpretations, and will not work. Read the Constitution as Mr. STOUGHTON presents it, with the Democratic view of the power of Congress incorporated, and see whether it can be for one moment supposed that the framers of that instrument ever intended to have such nonsense made of it.

The Constitution never divided power between the House and the Senate for the purpose of defeating the objects for which power is given. That would have been mere folly, such as Mexicans might have indulged in, caught by the sound of phrases, but such as the founders, used to thinking things out, and setting out to give themselves a practical government, never could have conceived. The Constitution requires that both houses and the President shall assent to an act of legislation before it becomes a law; but it does not declare that certain things shall be done, and then that if either house chooses, they shall not be done. But that is precisely what the Democrats wish us to believe of the Constitution. It is declared that the "votes shall be counted." The Democrats say that unless the House likes the way in which they are being counted, they shall not be counted. To suppose that the framers of the Constitution intended to run the country down any such blind alley of legal interpretation, is to suppose that they had no more sense than SPRINGER and no more patriotism than HEWITT.

Mr. STOUGHTON inclines to the opinion that Congress may, by legislation, settle the questions which are in doubt concerning the Electoral votes, though he is by no means emphatic in his statement in this direction. This view is not untenable, and has been widely accepted, both in Congress and out of it. But it has been stoutly opposed by some of the ablest and most pronounced Democratic lawyers in the Senate. In the absence of such legislation, however, the question is whether the election of President and Vice President, already made by the Electoral Colleges, shall be declared by the method provided by the Constitution and used at the foundation of the Government, or whether, to suit the ambitious purposes of Mr. TILDEN, the country shall be plunged into anarchy.

LIFE INSURANCE LEGISLATION.

Although Gov. ROBINSON has ignored the life insurance companies, and the demands of policy-holders and the public in regard to them, it is understood that the subject will be brought before the Legislature during the present session. The circumstance may or may not be a source of satisfaction. All depends upon the motives of those who take action in the matter, upon their knowledge and capacity, and upon the ability of the Legislature to proceed as independently of the companies as of the agencies that seek to prey upon them. The latter of these influences is more demoralizing than the other, but both are inimical to the changes which are essential to the restoration of confidence in the life insurance system.

The knaves and adventurers who gather in the lobby during a session are quick to use the advantages which the prospect of interference with the concerns of a great corporate interest affords them. They are eager to make terms with the companies. If they cannot persuade, they threaten. With the better class of companies the effort is ineffectual. They have many faults, but they give no encouragement to blackmailers. There are other companies to which even the lobbyist has free access. They desire to prevent legislation, and avail themselves of his agency. Or they desire so to shape legislation that it shall not entail upon them inconvenience, and they are willing to pay for services that help them, in whatever way, to attain this object. The potency of efforts of this character will probably be less now than at any time during the last twenty years. The elevation of Mr. SLOAN to the Speakership is a bad omen for the lobbyists, and the particular kind of service intrusted to them.

More direct and legitimate attempts of the companies to shape the cause of legislation must also be regarded with distrust. As judges in their own case they are inadmissible; as witnesses, their statements of what is required should be received with caution, because they are as unwilling to admit the existence of notorious evils as to sanction the application of adequate remedies. Being themselves responsible for much of the prevailing lack of faith in their management, they will be the last to acknowledge the reasonableness of the feeling that exists outside their own circle, or the propriety of reforms which are obviously necessary. It is unfortunate that the solvent companies, under a mistaken conception of business interest, or for reasons of a more personal and sinister nature, too often make common cause with worthless companies in opposing the radical changes which are really needed. Their right to be heard at Albany should, therefore, be subject to the understanding that neither they nor the Insurance Department can be accepted as controlling authorities in matters of controversy which involve, above all others, the interests of those to whom the funds of the companies really belong.

It is to be hoped that the Speaker, in the appointment of the Insurance Committee for the lower chamber, will keep in view the magnitude of the subject, and the exceptional importance of any measure in relation to it which may be submitted this session. If the latest report of the Insurance Department may be accepted as a criterion, the department itself realizes imperfectly the nature and extent of the evils that are to be corrected, and the want of more independent as well as more comprehensive provisions for checking the tendency to mismanagement, which is the worst feature of the case. The suggestion that the department shall have more power to prevent or regulate the process of amalgamation, by which one rotten company proposes to derive strength from another company equally rotten, and to substitute the policy-holders for a handful of stockholders as the controlling force in winding up the affairs of an insolvent company is sound enough. Any measure which aims at amending life insurance legislation and makes no provision for these points would be incomplete. But there are other points of much greater urgency, to which the Superintendent pays little or no attention.

One of these relates to the investments of companies. The Governor has referred to the rule that should govern the valuation of the securities held by savings banks. The same rule is applicable to the securities of life insurance companies. Of still greater moment is the limitation, or the more precise definition, of the securities which the companies may hold, either as investments or as the bases of loans. It is only necessary to run the eye over the published statements to discover certain signs of risks which no life insurance company should be permitted to incur. The sinking of large sums in buildings in which the business of the company is carried on is a blunder so serious that observant strangers cannot fail to notice it. There are buildings of this sort in the City which represent a large percentage of the companies' assets, and which, if placed upon the market, would neither give back their cost nor yield a moderate percentage upon it. To this unwise love of display the law should interpose some check. As to other investments, it is clear that unlimited authority ought not to be intrusted to the managers. Their duty is fiduciary, and the law may usefully prescribe some of the conditions of safety. In the first place, the loans upon real estate should not exceed a given proportion of the gross assets. In the next place, railroad, mining, and manufacturing stocks, and the stocks of trust and other companies, should be excluded from the list of available investments. No life insurance company has a moral right to jeopardize the money of its policy-holders in securities of this description, and the law should make the proceeding an offense to be accounted for by the directors and managers concerned.

Another grave defect in the law as it stands is manifest in the companies' published statements. Many of them seem to be prepared for the express purpose of hiding the information which most persons wish to acquire. How far the returns supplied by the companies are manipulated at Albany, we do not know. If they are published as they are furnished, the department should be empowered to reject them as unsatisfactory; if they are generalized within the department, it understands imperfectly the requirements of the public. An efficient law will compel the companies to set forth in detail their expenditures, distinguishing the cost of carrying on the old business from the cost of acquiring the new, together with the multitude of items by which alone an intelligent policy-holder will be able to judge of the ordinary features of management. And it will exact of the Superintendent of the department a vigilant inquiry into these features, if the "lumping" process goes too far, without waiting for the tedious formalities of complete investigation, and without pausing to consider whether the company affected is managed by friends or foes. The safest principle for the guidance of the Legislature is that which holds the Insurance Department to be constituted, not for the convenience or profit of stockholders or officials, but in the interest of the policy-holders and the public. On no other principle can the Legislature properly proceed.

PREPARATIONS FOR WAR.

Despite the apparent efforts for peace in the conference at Constantinople, both of the principal negotiators are preparing silently and speedily for war. Turkey finds herself now, in the time of danger, reaping the bitter harvest of her internal oppression and neglect of justice and reasonable administration. With a population, excluding Egypt and some outlying territories, of 19,000,000, she can only rely upon about 7,000,000 for the purposes of war. That is, one of her methods of unjust government has been to exclude the Christians from the Army or military service, so that now she cannot fall back upon these for aid. They number some 10,000,000. Then there are some 2,000,000 others—Mussulmans at Constantinople, Kurds, and the like—exempt from service, so that she must depend on, say 3,500,000 males to draw all her soldiers from. In all probability, she cannot reckon on more than 350,000 men, though the rolls embrace some 700,000. The Turkish Government has been gradually introducing improved arms—the Winchester repeating rifles, Henri Martini, Colt, and and others, from this country, as well as the Snider and the needle-gun. A large order from America is said to be ready for delivery, but there are no funds forthcoming for payment. These repeating arms are, however, scattered among the various corps in the most heterogeneous confusion, so that the mingling of ammunition will be enough to throw any ordnance department into endless perplexity. The heavy guns are equally miscellaneous, though many Krupp pieces have been introduced, and Constantinople is fortified with these cannon.

Turkey, of all countries, is the one best adapted for a first-rate breed of horses, and she always has the Arab stock to draw from and cross with. But so thorough has been the neglect of this by the authorities that they are obliged now to import stronger horses for the Army from Transylvania and neighboring countries. As to the commissariat, a Turkish army is accustomed to live a great deal on the country, and the men are very hardy and used to short rations. For money it is difficult to say what the Porte will do, but experience shows that a country can fight long after it is bankrupt. So strong is the Turkish position on the Danube, and behind that on the Balkans, that the Sultan seems to feel the other side, toward Asia, to be his weak one. A full corps is said to have been withdrawn from Servia during the armistice, and concentrated in Constantinople, as if the Government expected an attack by Armenia, a very long and difficult approach for the Russians. There is no question that an old conquering race, like the Ottoman Turks, will fight to the end before they are expelled from Europe, and will perish as becomes the descendants of OTHMAN and BAJAZET. They have, too, a difficult country on their frontier; one which their opponents have often attacked with but poor results. Much will depend on how far the Muscovites can command the Black Sea, and protect with a fleet their own flank on the march to Adrianople and Constantinople.

In Russia itself all is in preparation for a great war. Here, too, the mistakes of an arbitrary and military administration show themselves. The railroads have not been constructed to supply the needs of the population, but simply for strategical purposes, and those probably relating more to Poland and Germany than to Turkey. Being thus built, they have few towns on their route, and are not near water supplies, and often have but single tracks. It is accordingly difficult to secure sufficient water or provisions along their line, or to run many trains. The Prussian roads, whose performance in the Franco-German war has been the model for troop transportation ever since, were built solely for business, and yet are the best strategically. All business now, in Southern Russia, by railroad is suspended, and the whole energies of the country are bent to the supplying and forwarding of troops. It is believed, though Russian journals are not allowed to publish any news of the movements of troops, that some 250,000 men are already concentrated near the Pruth.

What is doing on the Asiatic side no one can say. The nation, after long suspense, is in the calm which precedes a desperate struggle, and already feels some of the burdens of war, without the elation of the struggle. The Government is girding itself for a long contest. It has already issued paper money, and gold is rising or paper falling. Following in our footsteps, it has required that all Customs duties shall be paid in gold, thus providing itself with a stock of gold for foreign purchases. This proceeding has already called out an angry remonstrance from commercial members of the German Parliament, who find their exports to Russia at once burdened with a very considerable increase of tax. The war is a popular one from one end of the Empire to the other. But all experience shows that it will be marked with incessant blunders, and that "the march to Constantinople" will be no holiday play.

THE IMPENDING CRISIS.

It can no longer be concealed that there is a possibility that a duel will soon be fought either on American or Canadian soil. A young man who may be vaguely and delicately mentioned as a Mr. BENNETT, is said to believe that he has been insulted by one of his former friends. Of the precise nature of the alleged insult it is unnecessary to speak, but there is no doubt that Mr. BENNETT has more or less reason to regard it as an undeniable and inexcusable insult. In these circumstances, he is understood to have placed himself in the hands of his friends, and, so far as can be learned, the decision of the question whether or not he shall challenge the insulter may be momentarily expected.

Being thus brought face to face with the awful possibility that Mr. BENNETT and another person may go to Canada and aim pistols at one another, our first duty as philanthropists is to obtain a postponement of hostilities until an international congress can meet and endeavor to avert strife by diplomacy. Of course, the present crisis will cause the Presidential struggle and the Turkish difficulty to be temporarily forgotten, and will thus give Mr. GLADSTONE an opportunity to write a new and eloquent pamphlet showing, first, that, as a general rule, somebody should always be driven out of somewhere, and, secondly, that, as a particular application of this great principle, Lord Beaconsfield should be driven out of the Ministry. While Mr. GLADSTONE is writing this pamphlet, the international congress would agree upon a series of propositions looking to the maintenance of peace. What these propositions would be we can only guess. The disarming of Mr. BENNETT and his alleged antagonist would undoubtedly be proposed, and it might be deemed advisable to require that each of them should be daily held under the cold-water faucet during half-hourly periods, in order to cool their minds and quench their blood-thirsty passions.

If this effort for the preservation of peace should fail, it would then be our duty to endeavor to induce the duelists to adopt some less dangerous and more satisfactory weapon than the pistol. There is the noble game of polo, in which a player can be more knocked about the head and more thoroughly trampled upon than he could be were he to fight a dozen duels in the ordinary way. If the aggrieved young man, who, from motives of delicacy, we still prefer to call Mr. BENNETT, would only hire Gilmore's Garden and challenge his foe to meet him there and to settle their quarrel by a game of polo, the entertainment would fill the building, and a picturesque report of it could be published in the daily papers. In reporting such an affair, the Herald would undoubtedly display its accustomed enterprise, and the ablest graduates of Trinity College, Dublin, would comment upon it in leading articles full of quotations from CÆSAR'S Commentaries, while its column of "personal intelligence" would contain irresistible jokes upon the word "polo," and its relations with the "North Pole Oh." Or, in case polo should not be held to meet all the exigencies of the case, there is the manly sport of pedestrianism. Why should not Mr. BENNETT challenge his adversary to a walking-match, the prize to be, let us say, a nice riding-whip. There is little doubt as to who would be the winner. In point of legs Mr. BENNETT is equaled by few and excelled by none, and that he would beat his enemy within the first five miles is as certain as anything well can be.

Though contests such as those just suggested would satisfy all the reasonable demands of Mr. BENNETT'S wounded honor, and would be entirely worthy of his intellectual and moral nature, it is probable that they would not meet the views of a renowned sugar-broking duelist, who is said to be his chief adviser. Let Mr. BENNETT, therefore, wisely refuse to recognize that eminent person's authority. Why should our continent be deluged with blood to the extent of one or two square feet, merely to satisfy the loss of blood which is apparently inseparable from the sugar business? Mr. BENNETT is understood to be of age, and has a right to decide upon his own line of conduct. Will he not listen to the voice of humanity and refuse to make himself the target of a pistol that, through some oversight, may possibly be loaded with ball, and hence become a source of danger either to the person who discharges it or to one of the bystanders?

Finally, if neither pistols, polo, nor pedestrianism have any present charms for Mr. BENNETT, why should he not cut the knot of his difficulties by leading an expedition to the North Pole? It is generally conceded that the North Pole yearns for Mr. BENNETT. It is perhaps a trifle cool there, but what Mr. BENNETT'S system now needs is something of a cooling nature. Were he to nobly determine to go to the North Pole, the public would hail his determination with the utmost enthusiasm, and the little difficulty which now threatens to involve him in a duel, and the civilized world in anguish and despair, would be joyfully and forever forgotten.

MICHIGAN.

GOV. CROSWELL'S INAUGURAL—A BRIEF DOCUMENT—EXCELLENT SUGGESTIONS MADE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

DETROIT, Jan. 5.—Gov. Charles M. Croswell was formally inaugurated this morning at Lansing, and read his inaugural before the Legislature in joint convention in presence of a large body of spectators. The inaugural is brief, and is devoted chiefly to recommendations and suggestions as to legislative reform, Primarily, the Governer asks for economy in the appropriations, and a postponement of all new projects that would involve any considerable outlay until the present commercial and industrial depression is past. He next reviews concisely the existing condition of our institutions, and of the administrative system of the State, and makes these specific recommendations: That a commission of three experts be authorized, who shall carefully mature and submit to the next Legislature some method for remedying the existing inequalities in the assessment of property for the purposes of taxation, and also a plan for securing increased simplicity and reliability in the execution and registration of conveyances; that efforts be constantly put forth to render the educational system of the State more and more practical in its scope, and that steps be taken to provide for an addition to some one of the State institutions of a department for practical instruction in those branches of learning connected with mechanics and arts; that the criminal law of the State be so amended as to increase the discrimination between milder and grosser forms of larcenous crimes of all kinds; that more stringent measures be taken to protect the purity of the ballot-box by providing severe penalties for bribery or intimidation of voters, by requiring that all election boards shall contain representatives of both parties, by increasing the facilities for the scrutiny of registration lists, by disqualifying candidates from acting as canvassers, by imposing large penalties on election betting, and by requiring the closing of all saloons on election day; that the Liquor Tax law shall be amended in those points in which its practical workings have proved defective, and that the experiment of dealing with the liquor traffic in this manner shall be given a fuller trial. In conclusion, Gov. Croswell urges that the legislation of the coming session shall be limited in amount and based upon a thorough preceding investigation. The Message was exceedingly well received.

INDIANA.

INDIANAPOLIS, Jan. 5.—Gov. Hendricks' Message to the Legislature was delivered this morning. It relates wholly to State affairs, with the exception of a reference to the presence of United States troops in South Carolina, saying: "The constitutional and independent authority of State courts and Legislatures is endangered if not now supported by a patriotic and liberty-loving sentiment so strong among the people that party and partisans dare not defy it. During the four years of my administration our State has not been wholly free from domestic troubles, and the public peace has, on more than one occasion, been threatened. Strong bodies of men, moved by some real or supposed wrong, have threatened to assert and vindicate rights wholly independent of the remedies and proceedings provided by law. In no instance has the authority and power of the United States been invoked against them, but in every instance have the people preserved the public peace, and maintained the authority of the State, and the supremacy of her laws. A people so careful of their own institutions, and so capable of preserving them and of maintaining the constitutional rights and prerogatives of their own State Government, cannot be indifferent when other States are threatened with overthrow, or the destruction of rights and privileges without which no free State can exist."

THE ARMY.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—For several years past the Chief of Ordnance has recommended that there be only three principal arsenals, namely: One each at Rock Island, Benicia, and on the Atlantic coast, and that some of the present arsenals be retained for storage purposes and the others sold. In pursuance of this policy removals of ordnance and ordnance stores frequently take place, the last instance being from Jefferson Barracks to the Rock Island Arsenal. In this there is nothing whatever political, as many have supposed, the removals being made merely as a matter of business. There are now from 500 to 600 barrels of gunpowder at the St. Louis magazine.

CHEYENNE, Jan. 5.—The court-martial for the trial of Col. J. J. Reynolds and Capt. Alexander Moore, both of the Third Cavalry, commences here to-morrow. The court consists of Brig. Gen. Pope, Cols. King, Gibbon, Davis, Smith, Flint, and Sykes; Lieut. Cols. Bradley, Lugenbeel, Hunton, and Beckwith. Temporary Head-quarters Department of the Platte have been established here, troops composing the late Powder River expedition being distributed from this point. The Ninth Infantry goes to Omaha, the Twenty-third to Fort Leavenworth, a battalion of the Fourth Artillery returns to the Pacific Coast, the Fourth Cavalry to Red Cloud Agency, where Col. Mackenzie will take command of department head-quarters; the Fifth will remain at Fort Russell, and the third at Fort Laramie.

NEW-YORK STATE PRISONS.

ALBANY, Jan. 5.—The annual report of the Inspectors of State Prisons will be presented to the Legislature next week. In speaking of the large deficiency this year, they say that nearly one-half of it was created during the first three months and before the present board obtained full control of the prisons. It was further due to the fact that the inspectors are powerless in many instances to reduce expenses by cutting down salaries, &c., they being fixed by law. The salaries for the past year amounted to $235,594 09. The hard times, they say, have filled the prisons to more than their capacity, and at the present time there are in the various prisons 3,600 prisoners and but 3,102 cells to keep them in, and these cells are but 3 feet wide and 7 feet long.

THE STATE VOTE OF OHIO.

COLUMBUS, Jan. 5.—Both houses of the General Assembly met in joint convention this afternoon to witness the counting of the vote which was cast for Secretary of State at the October election. Lieut. Gov. Young, President of the Senate, opened the returns, and announced the result as follows: For Milton Barnes, 317,856; for William Bell, 311,220; for E. S. Chapman, 1,863. Mr. Barnes was declared duly elected.

WASHINGTON.

THE DISTRICT BOARD OF POLICE.

THE SUDDEN REQUEST FOR THEIR RESIGNATION MADE BY THE PRESIDENT—CONJECTURES AS TO THE CAUSE—THE STOPPING OF THE INVESTIGATION INTO THE RELATIONS OF THE POLICE WITH THE GAMBLERS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—The action of President Grant in requesting the resignation of the entire Board of Police Commissioners, is a mystery which disturbs the local atmosphere of Washington. The Evening Star says: "The action of the President sets everybody to conjecturing as to the cause of the step. Of course, upon this point opinions differ, but the theory most generally accepted is, that the President must have concluded if the Police force was either corrupt or inefficient, the fault could only be with the higher authorities, and that the true way to effect a reform was to begin at the root of the difficulty. Whether this is the true view or not, the character of the appointments to fill the vacancies thus created alone can conclusively demonstrate. It is well, therefore, to wait and see before jumping at conclusions." The commission has been investigating charges that the Police force are paid by the gamblers for immunity from arrest, and the investigations were suddenly stopped. The subject is likely to be taken up by a committee of the House, as the Police are partly paid by the General Government. There are threatened many startling developments, but such predictions have been many times made and have always failed. The President will by his nomination of a new board undoubtedly break the connection between the criminal classes and the District Police, if any has existed.

THE MODEL ECONOMISTS.

MR. HOLMAN'S ECONOMY APPLIED TO EVERYBODY ELSE THAN HIS OWN FRIENDS—A HUMILIATING EXHIBITION—AN ARRANGEMENT FOR SUPPLYING DEMOCRATIC PAPERS WITH CHEAP CORRESPONDENCE FROM LIBERTY STREET.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—The House Committee on Appropriations, to-day reported a bill providing for an appropriation of $42,000 to meet the contingent expenses of the House, incurred for the most part during the last session, and which were unprovided for last year, because of the desire of Messrs. Randall and Holman to make a good showing for "retrenchment and reform" for campaign effect. One paragraph in the bill provides for an appropriation to pay the Superintendent of Folding for services during the recess, and caused a great deal of merriment at Mr. Holman's expense. The Superintendent in question is one of Mr. Holman's appointments, and it appears that he was absent in Indiana during the month for which Mr. Holman proposed to have him paid. Through Holman's peculiar economy there were folders to superintend, and those members whose friends were discharged in consequence, twitted Holman of exercising economy at the expense of officials from other States, and advocating the payment of an official from his own State and on his own nomination, for services not rendered. Holman squirmed a great deal under the witty thrusts of his assailants, and was finally forced to admit an amendment providing for the payment of some other officials who were employed by order of the House, and for whose payment no provision had been made. The bill as passed appropriates $65,000.

The latest issue of ready-made editorials from the "Liberty Street Bureau" has come to Washington, and has the following announcement:

"To the Editor:

The arrangements for correspondence not being yet perfected, these sheets are sent to you as heretofore."

This appears to be an apology for not beginning some arrangement for furnishing free correspondence, which has been announced in some other manner.

WORK OF THE COMMITTEES.

THE TEXAS PACIFIC RAILROADS—THE PROPOSED COMPROMISE BILL—A BILL TO REGULATE IMMIGRATION.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—The House Committee on Pacific Railroads to-day agreed to report the Senate bill to extend the time for the completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad eight years without amendment, except one providing that the company shall not be required to locate its route through Idaho before July 4, 1879. The sub-committee on the subject of the Texas Pacific Railroad were not ready to report to-day. They have, however, completed the proposed "Compromise bill," except as to the exact point where the Texas Pacific road and the Southern Pacific of California shall unite, and also as to the point where the road from San Diego should intersect the main line. It is settled, however, that the point of junction of the two companies will be fixed somewhere in the coal fields of New Mexico, about 100 miles west of El Paso, by the surveyed railroad route, or about 40 miles west of the Rio Grande in a direct line. The provisions of the bill in regard to the Government guarantee of interest on construction bonds are those of the Atkins bill of last session, except that no Government aid is to be granted for any part of the road already constructed, but is restricted for the Texas Pacific Company to such portions of the main line as they may build westward from Fort Worth, and for the California Company to their prospective work eastward from Fort Yuma.

The House Judiciary Committee this morning had under consideration again the bill to compel the Union Pacific Railroad Company to pro rate with the Burlington and Quincy Railroad, but the subject went over without action.

Representative Cox's bill to regulate immigration was taken up by the House Committee on Commerce to-day, and discussed section by section. The committee postponed acting on the bill or any of its sections until next Monday, when it will come up in committee for final disposition.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—The President sent the following nominations to the Senate to-day: William Pound, to be United States District Attorney for Dakota; James H. Burdick, United States Marshal for Dakota; G. W. Patton, United States Marshal for West Virginia; William S. Mayfield, Collector of Customs for the District of St. Mary's, Ga.; Ferdinand Barndollar, to be Land Register at Pueblo, Col. Postmasters—Charles W. Coe, Anamosh, Iowa; W. T. Cole, Grenada, Miss.; John C. Smith, Canajoharie, N. Y. Indian Agent—Daniel Sherman for the New-York Indian Agency; H. R. Bingham, at Whetstone Agency, Neb. Military Nominations—Samuel Q. Robinson and William B. Davis to be First Lieutenants and Assistant Surgeons; Second Lieut. Hamilton Rowan, Sixth Infantry, to be Second Lieutenant of the Second Artillery; Second Lieut. George Wilsons to be First Lieutenant in the Twelfth Infantry; Charles B. Thompson to be Second Lieutenant.

The receipts from Internal Revenue to-day were $306,609 11, and from Customs $219,377 77.

Elias M. Norris was to-day appointed Revenue Gauger for the First District of Texas.

About three weeks ago the Postmaster General decided to discontinue the Post Office at Grenada, Miss., on account of the bad treatment to the Postmaster by persons in that neighborhood. The indications presented to the department show that there seems to be an organized effort of assault upon the Government officials. Since then, however, urgent appeals have been made for the mails, accompanied by declarations that the safety of the Postmaster should be secured; and under these circumstances it was to-day decided to re-establish the Post Office, which has been done.

THE ASHTABULA DISASTER.

PROGRESS OF THE INVESTIGATION.

THE CAUSE OF THE ACCIDENT STILL A MYSTERY—THE CORONER'S JURY CAREFULLY AT WORK—OTHER BODIES IDENTIFIED—PERSONS WHO ARE KNOWN TO HAVE PERISHED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ASHTABULA, Jan. 5.—One week to-night has elapsed since the terrible accident here, and its cause, though variously accounted for in theory, is, in fact, as great a mystery as ever. The Coroner's Jury and the city authorities are proceeding slowly and carefully in their investigation of the whole affair, and are evidently determined to leave no stone unturned that will be likely to throw any light upon the subject. Mr. Paine, Superintendent of the road, says that 40 persons who were supposed to have been on the train have been found through the efforts of the railroad company in telegraphing to friends to learn if such persons were all right. A curious fact in this connection is that people, so soon as they discover that their friends are all right, forget that the officials of the company have a right to know this in order that the list of dead may be properly corrected. On the other hand, new names are constantly turning up as having belonged to persons who were lost upon the train. To-day the following persons have been proved to the satisfaction of Mr. Paine to have perished, without a vestige, so far as is known, remaining of them: Mary Austin, of Omaha; Ellen Austin, of Omaha; G. H. Spooner, of Petersham, Mass.; William Wilson, of Boston; Dr. A. W. Hopkins, of Hartford or Four Corners, Vt. There are 25 injured still here, being cared for by the railroad company, and 19 bodies still lying in the Morgue, awaiting identification. Two of these, supposed to be Mr. Hall and wife, of Chicago, will probably be identified soon, as their friends are only searching for some slight remaining evidence. Robert Steindel, of New-York, a Hebrew, was identified by his brother by papers found in his pockets. D. G. Hubbard's body was identified by his brother by means of underwear, and was sent on to his former home in Iowa City, Iowa. A gold watch belonging to George Kepler was identified by its number—46,226—which was recorded upon the books of G. W. Dickinson. The men at work at the Creek are still pursuing a careful search, and the bottom of the creek is now being raked. This work was rewarded by the discovery of a watch of American manufacture, William Ellery movement, No. 275,782. A foot belonging to a child, or small woman, was found in good preservation, as also a large Roman gold cross, with locket and diamonds attached, bearing the monogram "C. & A."

The Coroner's jury resumed the examination of witnesses at 1 P. M. to-day. J. P. Manning testified: Resides at Ashtabula; is manager of the telegraph office in the Lake Shore Railroad office there; has the means of knowing of all messages received at that depot while there; was at the depot at the time of the accident; remained at his post from that time until Sunday morning at about 3 o'clock; no record is kept in his office of dispatches which might be sent by any railroad official along the line of the road to any offices here; had knowledge of all such communications sent during that night; no message was received by an official here concerning the application of water to the fire; no messages relating to the fire were received by him; telegraphed to Mr. Cronch, Superintendent of the Erie division, that the firemen were on the ground; has no knowledge whatever of any order being received to let the wreck burn; has no knowledge of a general order, understanding, or desire existing between the officers of the corporation to let a wreck burn in case of fire where lives have been lost.

Charles L. Scoville testified: Resides in Ashtabula; is engineer of the steamer Neptune; went to the depot when the fire occurred, with the engine, which was then in a condition for use; heard some one say that water was not needed, but help; said many persons asked him why he did not throw water on the fire, and he answered that he had orders to return with his engine; said they told him that bodies were burning, and he said, "It that is the case I will set my engine;" did so and then blew the whistle for hose, but no hose came; he then went to view the wreck and in search of hose; could find no hose; looked down on the wreck and saw bodies burning and said "My God! why don't they throw water down there?" then returned to care for his engine; could have thrown water then if he had had hose; had no control over the hose.

A. W. Simons testified: Resides in Ashtabula; is night ticket agent at the Lake Shore depot; knows nothing of any order being received that night by Mr. Streng concerning throwing water on the fire; had never told any one that such order had been received.

Henry Apthorp testified—Resides in Ashtabula; is employed by the Lake Shore Railroad and the Western Union Telegraph Company jointly; heard the crash of the failing bridge and hastened to the wreck; climbed into a sleeping car and helped one man out who was almost unconscious; thinks that was the only passenger left in that car; went into the next car and found no one; then went in search of the day coaches, which were generally more nearly filled than the sleepers; has no knowledge of any order from any railroad officials that water was not wanted on the fire; thinks Mr. Strong did all in the power of mortal to save the wounded victims of the wreck.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 5.—A dispatch to the Commercial from Fort Wayne says Mrs. Col. Morton, of New-York, formerly Miss Bruns, of Fort Wayne, and but lately married, is supposed to be one of the Ashtabula victims. She left New-York at that time to visit relatives at Fort Wayne, and has not been heard of since.

STORY OF AN EYE-WITNESS.

The Cleveland Herald of Thursday says: "The following description of the scene at Ashtabula, on the night of the railroad disaster, is from an eye-witness, who, at the moment of the crash, was at the railroad station, having come across the fated bridge only a short time before the interrupted passage of 'No. 5.' The wind was blowing so at the time that the noise of the crash was not heard at the station. The first alarm was some one's shouting, 'No. 5 is over the bridge!' Rushing at once to the river the narrator was present just as the wreck was beginning to burn. To borrow his own words: 'As I looked down, I could'at see more than four or five cars at first, they were so buried under each other. They had just started to burn. The Socrates had stopped about 150 feet from the edge, and as I came along the train engineer said to me: 'Great God! the train is over the bridge—all but us.' I rushed right down, and almost the first one I met was the fireman. He was walking about and seemed stunned and dazed. He said he was cold and wanted some one to take care of him. I carried him up the hill to the switch shanty, and then the cars were all in a blaze. The sky was all lighted up and the snow was just coming down from the heavens in waves. You could look right down in there and see them writhing with the horrible agony like worms, and fighting the fire, and Oh, that moaning! —I can't describe it—it was like a long Oh-o-o-o in such a fearful wail, the sound rising and falling, and every once in a while a fearful shriek and a desperate cry for help. Women were swooning, and this moaning cry kept up for—O, I can't tell how long, but it seemed a good while. It seemed to me that 50 people must have passed me up the bank, some climbing, and others being pulled or carried up. It was burning for a long time in the night, but nothing could be done. O, it was awful! and I can't remember what I did down there on the ice, or how long it lasted."

SEVERAL COAL MINES ON FIRE.

PENNSYLVANIA COLLIERIES IN GREAT DANGER—LARGE QUANTITIES OF COAL AND TIMBER CONSUMED—THE LARGEST COLLIERY IN THE WORLD THREATENED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

LYKENS, Jan. 5.—The Short Mountain and Lykens Valley Mines, which produce from 150,000 to 200,000 tons of coal a year, have been on fire since Monday afternoon, and the Lykens Valley Coal Company, which operates the collieries, has already suffered a loss of several hundred thousand dollars, which promises to be largely augmented. Several men, who have been driven from the mines by the fire, are engaged day and night in efforts to stop the work of destruction, but the difficulty of reaching it has rendered their labors only partially successful. The first four days they made no impression on the fire. Appearances to-day, however, indicate that their work is having a beneficial effect; but the temporary check has not relieved the people here of the fear that all the collieries in the county may be visited by the fire. They are connected by subterranean passages, and should an unfavorable draft ensue they would all be in danger of destruction. The principal efforts of the miners are directed toward placing obstructions to the sweep of the fire eastward, where the Big Lyck and Williamston collieries are located, three and five miles above this town. About 30 miners are constantly stationed in the Lykens Valley slope to properly handle hose through which water is being conducted. The smoke is so dense in this locality that they are occasionally prostrated by its effects, and are drawn in cars to the surface to be relieved by others. The course of two small streams have been diverted from their original channels, and the water conducted into the burning mines, several lines of wooden troughs carrying it to points where it is supposed to be most needed. At the mouth of each mine is a large slope-house, into which cars loaded with coal are ordinarily hoisted. These structures have been disconnected with the slopes to save them from destruction. A similar precaution would have prevented the burning of a large engine-house and great damage to the machinery, which cost about $30,000.

Between 80 and 90 mules in the burning mines are supposed to have been suffocated, all way of egress having been cut off by the fire. That no human lives have been lost is, in a great measure, attributable to the fact that the fire occurred on a holiday, when the mines were almost entirely deserted. There is a difference of opinion as to how the fire originated. One theory is that a spark from a miner's lamp started it, while another is that the heat from one of the pumping-engines in the mine was the cause. The fire spread with remarkable rapidity, ascending to the top of the short mountain slope, nearly 500 yards from the supposed point of origin, in six or seven hours. In addition to the large quantity of coal and timber consumed much damage must necessarily have been done to the machinery in the mines, both by fire and water. Should the fire be brought under control, which is by no means certain, it would be impossible to repair the damage and resume mining operations during the Winter. About 900 men were employed in the burning mines. There are four anthracite coal mines in Dauphin County, which employ between 2,500 and 3,000 men. The Williamstown colliery, five miles above this place, is the largest in the world, and produced about 240,000 tons last year, and the year before 301,000 tons. The total shipments from the four mines last year were 390,000 tons, a decrease of 132,000 tons as compared with the previous year. When the mines were kept in steady operation, the business of the coal region amounts to from $1,500,000 to $2,000,000 annually. In this town from $35,000 to $40,000 are paid to miners monthly.

THE BENNET-MAY DIFFICULTY.

STILL THE CHIEF TOPIC OF CONVERSATION IN THE CITY—NOTHING OF A DEFINITE NATURE ASCERTAINED AS TO THE MAIN QUESTION.

The Bennet-May difficulty is still the chief topic of conversation in all circles, and the comments made upon it are as various as the stories of the causes of the rencontre of Wednesday afternoon. There are many persons who pretend to speak authoritatively who declare that a duel will certainly take place between Mr. Bennett and Mr. May. Still nothing, definitely pointing toward this conclusion, has been learned in addition to what was reported in THE TIMES of yesterday. It is certain, however, that Mr. Bennett has not yet formally challenged his assailant of Wednesday last, and that Mr. May is yet in this City, apparently in a pacific mood. Still, there are circumstances that faintly foreshadow a hostile meeting on foreign soil between the adversaries. The laws of this State make the sending of a challenge to fight a duel a criminal offense, but a verbal invitation from one person to another to go abroad and there risk his life in mortal combat is not provided against. Some time ago Senor de Conto, the editor of the Spanish newspaper, El Cronista, of this City, accepted the invitation, given verbally, of a Cuban antagonist, and followed him to Luxembourg, where the two indulged in some sword practice, without either receiving much injury. Dr. May denies that Mr. Bennett has sent a challenge to his son to engage in a duel. It is more than possible however, that a request has been made to Mr. May to go to Europe. Until late yesterday the whereabouts of Mr. Bennett could not be ascertained. Even his most intimate friends and associates declared that they did not know where he was. Some of them stated that though he was desirous to challenge Mr. May he had been overruled and had been induced to leave the City for a short time. Last night, however, it was said that he was in Boston, and this proves to other friends that he is bent upon dueling, and is going to Europe for that purpose, whither Mr. May will follow him. The reason for his going eastward, it is said, is that he believed that he could leave Boston unrecognized. Three vessels start from Boston for Europe to-day—the Olympus, the Palestine, and the Illyrian—all going to Liverpool. The Olympus is a mail steamer, and the fastest of the three. Six steam-ships also start from this port to-day for the other side of the Atlantic. Of these the Oder and Adriatic are fast mail vessels, the former running to Bremen and the latter to Liverpool. It is believed that Mr. Bennett will take passage on the Olympus, and that Mr. May will go on the Oder to Bremen. If this assumed programme is carried out, the two adversaries will be enabled to journey to a dueling place in the Luxembourg without meeting on the way.

A very absurd rumor spread through the City last night, and excited a good deal of discussion. It was to the effect that Messrs. Bennett and May had met yesterday on the field of Bladensburg, near Washington, and that the latter had been killed, and the former wounded in the head by the first shots exchanged. So much uncertainty having existed as to the whereabouts of the two gentlemen for the last two days, the rumor was credited by a large number of persons. Mr. John G. Heckshor could not be found in New-York yesterday, and this fact appears to verify the rumor given in THE TIMES of yesterday that he has left the City to arrange the preliminaries to a duel between Messrs. Bennett and May.

MR BENNETT NOT IN BOSTON.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 5.—The most thorough search has failed to discover Mr. James Gordon Bennett in this city. Mr. Hollis Hunnewell, his most intimate friend in Boston, was seen this afternoon, and again this evening, and he stated positively that Mr. Bennett was not in town, and, furthermore, that he did not know where he was. The principal hotels of the city have also been visited, but Mr. Bennett's name does not appear on any register, and it is believed that he is not in town, though it is thought quite probable that he may have passed through the city. If he is in town, his friends must have determined to swear that he is not.

HONORS TO COMMODORE VANDERBILT.

NASHVILLE, Jan. 5.—A large meeting of citizens was held to-day, Col. John C. Burch, editor of the American, presiding, at which resolutions of respect for the memory and regret at the death of Commodore Vanderbilt were adopted.

Gov. Porter sent a special Message to the Legislature on the same subject, and a committee of that body was appointed to draft appropriate resolutions. An invitation from the Faculty of the Vanderbilt University to participate in the memorial services at that institution on Sunday next, was accepted.

SERIOUS BOILER EXPLOSION.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 5.—The boiler of a portable saw mill owned by Nott & Co., exploded near Marietta, Ohio, to-day and severely injured four workmen, one of whom will probably die.

LATEST NEWS BY CABLE.

THE EASTERN COMPLICATIONS.

THE CONFERENCE—GERMAN OFFICERS FORBIDDEN TO ENTER THE RUSSIAN SERVICE—THE AUSTRIAN SLAVS INDIGNANT OVER THE RUSSIAN SCHEMES OF SUBDIVISION AND ANNEXATION IN THE PRINCIPALITIES — ROUMANIA — THURSDAY'S SESSION OF THE CONFERENCE.

LONDON, Jan. 5.—This afternoon's Pall Mall Gazette says it has reason to believe that the modifications of the European proposals, which a Times' special from Vienna this morning reports, were adopted at a confidential meeting of the European Plenipotentiaries on Tuesday last, and which were detailed in a previous dispatch to the United States, were not mentioned at the sitting of the conference yesterday. A dispatch to the same paper from Berlin says Emperor William has issued a special order forbidding German officers on the active list from entering the Russian Army.

A dispatch from Constantinople says the Austrian Slavs here are becoming more and more incensed against the Russians in consequence of the project of Gen. Ignatieff, the Russian Plenipotentiary, of annexing old Servia to one of the provinces into which Bulgaria, according to Russia's proposals, is to be divided. News has been received confirmatory of the deep indignation of the Greeks at the proposals of the conference, which tend to subordinate the Greeks to the Bulgarians, and sacrifice the Turkish-Greek population to the Slavs. The hope is unanimous that Midhat Pasha, the Grand Vizier, will be able to carry out the reforms single-handed.

A Bucharest dispatch says: "The Roumanian Senate has adopted a resolution declaring that the rights of Roumania shall remain intact, and calling upon the Government to maintain them in a manner worthy of the State."

LONDON, Jan. 6.—The Standard's special from Constantinople, after reviewing the proceedings in Thursday's sitting of the conference, expresses the opinion that the dangerous part of the crisis is over.

The Paris Moniteur, which is in close relation with the French Foreign Office, however, publishes the following paragraph: "We regret to state that the disposition of Turkey was not improved in Thursday's sitting, and leaves very little hope of an arrangement by diplomacy. Although the conference meets again on Monday, if the situation is not modified, it may even now be stated that the task of England is ended."

The Standard's Belgrade dispatch says the Servian Government still continues to arm, and demands that the armistice be abrogated, as Servia cannot bear the prolonged uncertainty which makes it imperative to keep her people in arms.

A Bucharest dispatch says Russian officers are reconnoitering the Lower Danube to find crossing places, and ships are being contracted for to aid in the crossing.

The Vienna correspondent of the Standard says there have been several executions in the Russian mobilized regiments because of gross breaches of discipline and revolutionary meetings.

The Post's telegram from Berlin states that it is affirmed that negotiations will be carried on elsewhere, if broken off at Constantinople. No power except Russia is likely to permanently withdraw its Ambassador in the event of the failure of the conference.

The Cologne Gazette, the Times' Berlin correspondent, and others, state that the Emperor William's order against German officers entering the Russian service was issued in consequence of the Czar's offering Gen. Manteuffel command of the mobilized Army. Gen. Manteuffel, although at first disposed to accept, declined in consequence of the Emperor's prohibition. The Berlin correspondent of the Times says it is stated that Austria and Germany have commenced negotiations upon the expediency of promoting Roumania's desire to have her territory declared independent and neutral to secure its neutrality in the possibly impending conflict. Turkey seemed inclined to favor the idea.

The Russian Telegraphic Agency reports that the Plenipotentiaries remain united, and are resolved to urge on Turkey the unanimous decisions of Europe.

The Times prints prominently a Berlin special dispatch reiterating the statement that there will be no absolute rupture between the European powers and Turkey. If the latter does not yield, the Ambassadors will depart, leaving Chargés d'Affaires to transact the current business and continue negotiations. The Paris correspondent of the Times communicates further details of Thursday's sitting of the conference. He states the Plenipotentiaries submitted to the Porte a programme substituting a consular commission for the executive commission at first proposed, and a plan for a corps of Bulgarian volunteers to be incorporated in cadres, recruited in neutral territory, for what was originally the foreign occupation scheme. The delegates were greatly surprised by Safvet Pasha reading a declaration in which the Porte deemed itself obliged to reject their proposals, because they were contrary to the principles of Ottoman independence and to the new Constitution. The Europeans warned the Porte of the danger it ran in thus defying Europe, as Russia had made preparations which compelled her to go to war unless she obtained adequate satisfaction; and the powers were agreed that a peremptory refusal was the most dangerous affront the Porte could offer Europe. Safvet then said the Porte, to show its desire for an understanding, and deference toward Europe, accepted the Bulgarian volunteer project, believing it thus satisfied all legitimate and even most exaggerated susceptibilities. The conference, after this unexpected and insufficient conclusion, adjourned until Monday, in the hope, meanwhile, of effecting a compromise on other points.

It is said that Sadyk Pasha will meanwhile be appointed Turkish Foreign Minister, which would indicate a favorable change of policy.

The Telegraph's dispatch from Pera, dated Friday, says the Plenipotentiaries will prepare immediately their reply to the memorandum read by Safvet Pasha for presentation to the Porte on Monday. The same paper confirms the report of the acceptance by the Porte of the proposition for the formation of a mixed Militia; but says the question of the definitive constitution of the force is left for future consideration. The Porte maintains its objections to the other proposals of the powers.

The Times' correspondent quotes a letter written by one of the most eminent members of the conference, to show that the complete change in the attitude of the Porte, by which it now proposes terms to Europe instead of vice versa, is due to the fact, of which the Turks are fully aware, that the Russian mobilization has completely broken down, and that none of the other European powers are prepared to exert anything but moral pressure.

FOREIGN BUSINESS AFFAIRS.

BERLIN, Jan. 5.—The Imperial Bank of Germany has reduced the rate of discount for bills to 4 per cent., and for advances on securities to 5 per cent.

LIVERPOOL, Jan. 5.—The circular of the Liverpool Cotton Brokers' Association, in its review of the week ending last night, says: "The cotton market was very firm on Friday, and reopened after the holidays with animation. A very extensive business has been done at advanced prices. American has been in very extensive request, prices advancing one-eighth to a farthing. Business in Sea Island has been moderate, but prices are firm at the extreme rates. In futures, transactions continue large, with considerable fluctuations."

A leading grain circular says: "The grain trade, feeling the influence of the holidays, has remained quiet during the week, upon very limited transactions in wheat. The market was scantily supplied with farmers' samples, and prices are quoted as high as 1s. 2d. dearer. Foreign also occasionally improved, business, however, lacking animation, and millers buying only for the supply of immediate requirements. On the spot, and in the neighboring markets, since Tuesday, transactions in wheat and flour have been at retail, without quotable alteration. Maize has hardened. The supplies of grain are up to a moderate average for the last three days, and were nearly all of wheat. The average for the last three days was nearly all wheat, consisting of California and East India descriptions. The fresh import of ... was very small, with few buyers in attendance. Wheat rates generally dull this morning, white sorts at a reduction of 1d. @2d. per cental; common reds are also rather cheaper, but extra qualities are scarce and exceed Tuesday's rates. Flour is slow of sale, the turn being in buyers' favor. Corn moves with difficulty and is barely obtainable in the limited business doing."

LONDON, Jan. 5.—The Official Gazette announces that the English Minister at Teheran telegraphs that in consequence of an apprehended scarcity, exportation of grain from Bushire and the Persian Gulf is prohibited.

BERLIN, Jan. 5.—The specie in the Imperial Bank of Germany has decreased 10,631,000 marks during the past week.

EXTRADITION TREATY WITH SPAIN.

A TREATY WITH THE UNITED STATES SAID TO HAVE BEEN SIGNED IN MADRID.

MADRID, Jan. 5.—The Extradition Treaty between Spain and the United States has been signed. It applies to all criminal offenses, except those of a political nature. Minister Cushing has for some time been engaged in its negotiation. The draft of the treaty does not differ from others of that character, all being constructed on the same general principle. While the tenth article of the Ashburton treaty with Great Britain, in 1842, provides only for the delivery of persons charged with the crime of murder, or assault with intent to commit murder, or piracy, or arson, or robbery, or forgery, or the utterance of forged paper, later extradition treaties with other countries comprehend in addition to the above the following classes of offenses, namely: Rape, mutiny, burglary, embezzlement of public moneys, and embezzlement by any person or persons, hired or salaried, to the detriment of their employers. The treaty with Spain is not considered to be the most comprehensive which has yet been entered into by the United States with other powers, but, to say the least, it is equally as broad as that of any one of them. The detailed classes of offenses in the treaty with Spain are not yet known in Washington.

MISCELLANEOUS FOREIGN NOTES.

LONDON, Jan. 5.—It is reported that the Anchor Line steamer Assyria, Capt. Donaldson, from New-York, Dec. 16, which arrived at Glasgow Jan. 3, threw overboard part of her cargo on the passage.

The Federal Council of Germany has made an important constitutional concession to Alsace-Lorraine, having agreed to a proposal that measures passed by the Provincial Board of Representatives, if approved by the Federal Council, shall become law without the previous approval or cognizance of the German Parliament.

PARIS, Jan. 5.—At a Cabinet Council to-day, Minister Simon announced the dismissal or transfer of twelve Prefects.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—The Times' Correspondent at Berlin reports that the chiefs of Badakshan principalities, South of Russian Khoband, have complained to the Russian authorities of Turkestan of the Afghan rule, and of the British policy which favors the annexation of Badakshan to Afghanistan.

AMUSEMENTS.

MR. MULLER'S CONCERT.

A concert was given at Steinway Hall last evening by Mr. C. C. Müller, with the object of making known several of that gentleman's compositions. The programme, which consisted wholly of Mr. Müller's works, included two overtures, a symphony, a piano-fantasia, and one or two minor efforts, and was interpreted by Mr. Thomas' orchestra, under Mr. Thomas' direction, and by Master Herman Rietzel. Its execution proved that Mr. Müller has an abundance of bright and graceful ideas, and considerable skill in writing for an orchestra. His creative power, however, is scarcely equal to the requirements of a symphony, and, while the third movement of his principal achievement—a scherzo—was pretty and fanciful, the composition as a whole seemed to lack purpose and symmetry. The happiest number of the programme was unquestionably the overture bearing the inscription "To the Union." "Yankee Doodle" is cleverly suggested rather than embodied in its introductory passages; the whole work is smoothly and richly scored, and a fine setting of "The Star-spangled Banner" is appended to it, much as the "Marseillaise" in Litolff's "Robespierre" overture, and serves as an admirable peroration. The composer was called out at this stage of events last evening, and heartily applauded.

YESTERDAY'S PHILHARMONIC REHEARSAL.

The second rehearsal, preliminary to the third concert of the Philharmonic Society, took place at the Academy of Music, yesterday afternoon. The most important number of the programme was Goldmark's symphony, entitled "Ländliche Hochzeit." As two additional opportunities of hearing this work are to be afforded, it may be well to defer judgment upon its merits. It is not an achievement of great profundity, but its themes are quaint and tuneful, its scoring is graceful and rich almost to sensuousness, and its general impression is thoroughly pleasant. "Ländliche Hochzeit" is divided into five movements, called, respectively, "Wedding March," "Bridal Song," "Serenade," "Garden Scene" and "Dance;" the tone of the symphony partakes of Wagner's "Lohengrin" manner, and suggests, at times, Gounod's suave harmonies. Mrs. Emily Butman, who sang Berlioz's "Absence" on the occasion we refer to, failed, in a measure, to apprehend the sentiment of that poetic romance. The other pieces were a duet, the "Turkish March," from Beethoven's "Ruins of Athens," and Mozart's G minor symphony.

BRIEF MENTION.

The New-York Aquarium may be visited today as usual.

A matinée performance of "Azurine" may be witnessed at Niblo's to-day.

Mr. Heller gives his habitual Saturday matinée at his Wonder Theatre to-day.

Mr. Thomas' third symphony concert takes place at Steinway Hall this evening.

A matinée performance of the "American" occurs at the Fifth Avenue Theatre to-day.

"Rip Van Winkle" will be acted at the Broadway Theatre this afternoon and this evening.

Mr. Lawrence Barrett acts in "Dan'l Druce" at Booth's Theatre this afternoon and this evening.

The usual Saturday matinée entertainment of the San Francisco Minstrels is announced for today.

CHARGED WITH FORGERY.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 5.—W. J. Sandford, City Clerk of Covington, Ky., was charged with forgery by Mr. Shinkle, President of the City Council, at a meeting of that body. Mr. Shinkle stated that several city orders had been raised by Sandford, and the latter's books had been made to agree with the amounts taken. A warrant was sworn out to-day by Mr. Shinkle for Sandford's arrest, but he could not be found. The amount of the forgeries is unknown. The Covington Council to-night suspended him from office.

THE LATE STRIKE ON THE GRAND TRUNK ROAD.

MONTREAL, Jan. 5.—P. M. Arthur, Chief of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, and a Grievance Committee of 10 engine-drivers of the Grand Trunk Railroad, had a long interview with Mr. Hickson, manager of the road, to-day, resulting in a permanent reconciliation between the company and the men.

PASSENGER RATES ON RAILROADS.

CHICAGO, Jan. 5.—Railroad rates to the East are gradually going up to the prices which prevailed before the Erie and New-York Central war. No additional increase was made to-day on through rates, but the general passenger agents advanced the rates to intermediate points from $3 to $5. The rate to Syracuse was made $17, to Rochester $15 40, and to Buffalo $14. It is anticipated that the passenger rates to New-York will soon be advanced to $23

SNOW IN THE STREETS.

DISGRACEFUL CONDITION OF THE PUBLIC THOROUGHFARES.

SCENES ALONG BROADWAY YESTERDAY—MERCHANTS AND TRADESMEN COMPLAINING OF INJURY TO THEIR BUSINESS—THE STREET-CLEANING BUREAU CENSURED FOR ITS INEFFICIENCY—A PROPOSED PLAN FOR REMOVING THE SNOW FROM THE STREETS.

It may be safely said that the streets of New-York were never in a worse condition than they were yesterday. Ever since the storm of the 1st inst. Broadway and the adjacent thoroughfares have been well-nigh impassable, and the delay, confusion, and damage to business resulting therefrom have been very great. The Street-cleaning Bureau of the Police Department, with whom the duty of removing the snow rests, has so far proved inadequate to the task required of it. Whether this arises from lack of funds, as is claimed by the friends of the bureau, or from general incompetency, is still a question; but about the disgraceful condition of the streets there is, unfortunately, no room for doubt. The scene on Broadway yesterday was an extraordinary one. From Wall street to Grace Church, the entire street was a confused mass of struggling vehicles, and bewildered pedestrians laboring painfully through a long channel of mingled ice, dirt and snow. "Omnibuses," trucks, carriages, cabs, milk-carts, tradesmen's wagons, "bob-sleds," and cutters, plowed their way slowly and with difficulty through the unwieldy mass, while crowds of weary passengers waded through the moving throng. The stages had each four horses attached, and even with these they made their way at a rate much slower than usual. The draft horses had a hard time of it. Many of the drays and trucks were heavily laden. The panting horses toiled slowly through the dirt and snow. In some cases an additional horse was provided which was harnessed ahead of the other two in tandem fashion. The use of vile language among the stage and truck drivers rivaled that of the celebrated "army in Flanders," and if the legal fine had been collected for every oath the amount raised would have been sufficient to keep the streets clean for a term of years.

At a few points along the thoroughfare an effort had been made by the business men on either side to clean the cross-walks, and some of the more enterprising had fitted up their special street-sweepers with large linen coats bearing their advertisements in letters that could be read across the street. The feeling among the merchants and tradesmen against the supineness of the authorities has been steadily increasing, and yesterday broke out in vigorous denunciations. Said a Broadway merchant to a TIMES reporter, "What do we pay $30,000,000 a year to this miserable City Government for, if it can't keep the streets clear one day in the week? It is a shame and a disgrace to New-York that this state of things should be allowed to exist. The Police Commissioners say they need an additional appropriation. That is always the way with these fellows. An emergency arises and after days spent in circumlocution and red tape, they discover there is'nt money enough appropriated for the purpose in question and they must appeal to some higher authority for more. Then comes additional red tape and delay, and by the time they get the money I suppose the thaw will be upon us, and the whole town flooded." Another retail merchant on the same street said: "My trade has been injured hundreds of dollars a day by the condition of the streets. People will not come out to do shopping, visitors refuse to come into the City from the suburbs, and trade of all kinds languishes simply because the authorities lack the energy to meet the emergency promptly. There are thousands of men idle about the streets who would jump at the chance of earning $1 per day by cleaning the streets. If we had a City Government that was worth anything the bulk of this snow would have been removed within 48 hours after it fell." Among all classes of tradesmen the complaint is the same, and unless the new Municipal Administration does something, and that speedily, it will incur a load of unpopularity from which it will be difficult to recover.

In that part of Broadway between Canal street and Grace Church the snow is particularly deep, and all along the street from the Battery up, huge blocks of snow are piled on either hand awaiting the coming of the street cleaning carts. A little clearing has been done by the City in Fulton street and elsewhere, but the great mass of the snow both up town and down town is still untouched. On West Broadway the scene equals that on Broadway itself, while to the throng of carts, trucks, &c., are added scores of street-cars moving in different directions. Last evening it took the Eighth avenue cars an hour to make their way from the Astor House to Twenty-third street. In Church street, through which runs the track of the Broadway Railroad, the snow has been removed to a great extent by the company. The same has been done at intervals in the other west side streets, wherever the owners have forced the companies to do so. In Greenwich and Washington streets the snow is deep, but not so mixed with dirt. Along West street the centre of the roadway has been pretty effectually leveled by the constant traffic, but the snow remains piled up on each side in large heaps. On the east side, the Bowery is lumbered up with miniature mountains of snow and dirt, through which, crossings have been cut at intervals. At the junctions of Canal street and Grand street with the Bowery, the snow is heaped up in great huge hillocks, while a mass of mingled snow and dirt covers the streets and renders the passage of all sorts of vehicles, difficult and tedious. In Water street, the Five Points, and other low neighborhoods, the mingling of snow, dirt, ashes, and garbage presents an unsightly spectacle, and in case of a thaw will be likely to prove highly injurious to the health of the inhabitants. Higher up on the East Side of the town the railroad tracks are cleared for the cars, but the snow is piled in great quantities on either hand. Along the streets bordering on Union and Madison squares the accumulations from the roadway form breastworks on either side. East and West Twenty-third street, and in fact all the avenues occupied by cross-town routes, are in a similar state.

The excuse which the officials of the Street Cleaning Bureau give for their failure to cope with the situation, is lack of funds. The total force employed in ordinary times is only 400 men, and a proportionate number of carts; and to effectually deal with the present snow-fall, it is claimed that a much larger force is necessary. Mr. W. H. Morrell, one of the Rapid Transit Commissioners, has submitted to Mayor Ely a plan for removing the snow by the co-operation of the street-car companies and the City authorities. The companies are to furnish the cars and horses and the City the men, the snow to be loaded on the cars of the Second, Third, Fourth and Sixth avenues, and of parallel lines, and to be switched off on to the various cross-town lines, and dumped in the river at the foot of Canal street, Grand street, and the Battery. It is claimed that by this method the vast amount of snow now choking up the public thoroughfares can be removed within from two to three days. The work ought to be done at night time, so as to interfere with travel as little as possible. The Mayor is said to look favorably upon the plan, and there are hopes that some such arrangement will be entered into between the City and the companies. The inability of the present Street-cleaning Bureau to handle the late snow-fall has caused a comparison between its conduct and that of the same department two years ago. In 1875, thanks to the repeated criticisms of THE TIMES, the management of the bureau was all that could be desired. Heavy snow-falls were of frequent occurrence during January, February, and March, of 1875, but such was the discipline of the street-cleaning brigade that the whole of Broadway and the streets leading to the ferries were often swept clean by 12 o'clock of the night succeeding the storm. Much of the efficiency which pervaded this branch of the Police Department was the result of the executive ability and energy of Mr. Diedecker, whom the late Democratic Mayor thought fit to set aside for a Tammany politician whose merits as an organizer are of an exceedingly doubtful character.

THE SAN DIEGO RAILROAD.

SAN DIEGO, Cal., Jan. 5.—A dispatch from San Diego says that the Board of Trustees met the citizens en masse last night to discuss railroad matters. A resolution was adopted indorsing the action of the Trustees, which was strict adherence to a "direct line of railway," with a demand that the work should begin at this end within six months, 30 miles to be completed the first year, and no bonds to be issued for any part of the road without like work at this end.

THE ICE HARVESTERS.

RONDOUT, Jan. 5.—Most of the larger ice companies have resolved to defer cutting ice here until Monday. A few men are at work, and all are peaceable. A dispatch from Catskill to the Daily Freeman says the strike was resumed there this morning with increased vigor. From 400 to 500 men with sticks paraded the streets, in defiance of orders from the authorities, making incendiary threats. Agents of the ice companies have called on the Sheriff for posses of 200 men to guard each of the ice houses at Catskill, Athens, and Coxsackie. If these are not provided, the State authorities will be called upon for protection. The village officials are helpless.

ICE FIVE FEET IN THICKNESS.

QUEBEC, Jan. 5.—Mr. Sewell has telegraphed from Tormentine that the Winter navigation steamer Northern Light reached Georgetown on passage, after breaking through ice five feet in thickness.

FATALLY STABBED.

ELMIRA, Jan. 5.—Seymour Harris, of Syracuse, who was stabbed by William Dickinson in a drinking saloon in this city on Christmas Day, died this morning about 4 o'clock from the effects of the wound.

FATAL POWDER EXPLOSION.

WILMINGTON, Jan. 5.—An explosion occurred at Dupont's Powder mills this afternoon, which demolished one of the buildings and killed a Frenchman, who was an employe of the firm.

SINGULAR DEATH OF AN ENGINEER.

BUFFALO, Jan. 5.—Joseph Perault, an engineer on the Erie Railway, died this morning from the inhalation of steam at the collision at Black Rock last night.

AN ILLICIT STILL SEIZED.

CHICAGO, Jan. 5.—An illicit still of about 50 barrels capacity was discovered by detectives to-day on Carroll street, near Wood, and its proprietors, John D. Fruse, H. N. Allen, and C. M. Jennings were committed in default of bail.

CATHOLIC SEMINARY CLOSED.

The Pittsburg (Penn.) Commercial of Thursday says: "St. Michael's Seminary, located at Glenwood, in the Twenty-third Ward, has been obliged, in consequence of financial stress, to close its doors indefinitely, and its 50 ecclesiastical alumni have been dismissed to their homes for the present. A few of them will be sent abroad to complete their studies; the majority will have to turn either to uncongenial pursuits, or await the remote opening of the Seminary halls. The perpetuation of this theological institution was one the late eminent Bishop O'Connor's most cherished projects, and its collapse, though in a measure inevitable, will be sorely felt by the Catholics of both the Pittsburg and Allegheny Dioceses. For two years past the annual collections for the sustentation fund have been largely insufficient—many say, for lack of thorough effort."

SINGULAR INCIDENT.

The Biddeford (Me.) Journal says: "Last week the sloop Ida May lay at Government wharf, near the mouth of the Kennebunk River, with one man on board, Freeman Gove, who was in the cabin asleep. In the night he was awakened by some one touching him, and saying, 'You will be drowned.' On opening his eyes no one was present, but he immediately turned out, went on deck, and found the side of the vessel caught under the wharf by the tide, and shortly it would have sunk, and cabin and all been under water

FOR

$2,800,000 7 3/10 p. c. Bonds

OF THE

CITY OF CINCINNATI.

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 10, 1877,

AT 2 O'CLOCK P. M., for the whole or any part of the sum of $2,800,000, MUNICIPAL BONDS OF THE CITY OF CINCINNATI, as authorized by an act of the Legislature of the State of Ohio, entitled "an act relating to cities of the first class having a population exceeding one hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants," passed May 4, 1869, and "an act supplementary thereto," passed Feb. 24, 1873, a vote of the people of the CITY OF CINCINNATI, and a resolution of the City Council as prescribed by the said act.

SAID BONDS WILL BEAR INTEREST AT THE RATE OF 7 3-10 PER CENT. PER ANNUM, PAYABLE ON THE 1ST DAY OF MAY AND NOVEMBER IN EACH YEAR, AND THE PRINCIPAL WILL BECOME DUE IN 1906, BOTH PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST BEING PAYABLE AT THE AMERICAN EXCHANGE NATIONAL BANK IN NEW-YORK.

Each proposal should be sealed and indorsed:

"PROPOSALS FOR 7 3-10 PER CENT. BONDS OF THE CITY OF CINCINNATI," AND INCLOSED IN A SECOND ENVELOPE ADDRESSED TO THE AMERICAN EXCHANGE NATIONAL BANK OF NEW-YORK.

The right is reserved on the part of the undersigned to reject any or all of the bids, if, in their judgment, the interests of the city require it.

AWARDS WILL BE MADE ON JAN. 11.

FOR FULL INFORMATION APPLY TO THE UNDERSIGNED AGENTS.

THE ANNUAL ELECTION FOR DIREC

THE LATE MR. VANDERBILT.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE FUNERAL.

THE SERVICES TO BE PERFORMED IN THE CHURCH OF THE STRANGERS — THE BODY TO BE DEPOSITED IN THE FAMILY VAULT ON STATEN ISLAND.

The body of Commodore Vanderbilt still lies in the room in which he died. This morning it will be placed in a plain iron casket, covered with black cloth, with a silver plate on the lid, bearing the following inscription:

CORNELIUS VANDERBILT.
Born May 27, 1794.
Died January 4, 1877.

To-morrow morning the remains will be placed in the main hall of the house, where they will lie until 10 o'clock, at which hour they will be taken to the Church of the Strangers, No. 259 Mercer street, where the funeral services will be performed. The family and personal friends of the deceased will assemble at the house some time before 10 o'clock, and will accompany the remains to the church, and the officials and employes of the railroad corporations of which the deceased was President, to the number of about 200, will march to the house in a body, for the same purpose. An opportunity will then be given to all to look upon the features of the Commodore for the last time, and the body will be carried to the church on a bier, followed by the family and friends, on foot. Upon arriving at the church, the family and friends and railroad employes will be seated first, and free ingress will then be permitted until the edifice is filled. Seats will be also reserved for members of the press. The funeral services will be performed by Rev. Dr. Deems, Pastor of the Church of the Strangers, and the music on the occasion will be very simple, as only a few hymns will be sung, and possibly a chant. Rev. Dr. M. H. Hatton, formerly Pastor of the Dutch Reformed Church on Washington square, has been invited to assist Dr. Deems. This gentleman was the Pastor of the Commodore's first wife, who was much attached to him. The Pastor of the Moravian Church at New-Dorp has also been invited to assist at the ceremonies. After the services the remains will be placed in a hearse and carried to the Staten Island Ferry, followed by the relatives and friends in carriages, which will be in attendance at the church. At the ferry two steam-boats will be in waiting to convey the vehicles to Staten Island, where the procession will again be formed, and will proceed to the cemetery of the old Moravian Church at New-Dorp, where the last rites will be performed.

WHAT THE BANKERS SAY.

MR. VANDERBILT'S DEATH WILL CREATE NO PERCEPTIBLE CHANGE IN BUSINESS —VIEWS OF BANK PRESIDENTS.

Among the bankers yesterday there was but little discussion on the subject of Commodore Vanderbilt's death. A TIMES reporter called upon a number of bank Presidents to learn what would be the effect in business circles of the change of control in Mr. Vanderbilt's affairs, and to ascertain what views were entertained by leading business men of the great "railroad king." The result of the conversation with these gentlemen elicited only the opinion that there would be no perceptible change in business that could be traced as a consequence of Mr. Vanderbilt's death. So far as facts were concerned, nearly every one addressed admitted that the TIMES had given more information than they had ever been able to obtain before from any one source in relation to Mr. Vanderbilt. Then, as for his business, it had never run with or counter to the banks, and as he had invested but little of his money in bank stocks or property, the bankers were not much concerned about the effect his death would have upon their business.

Mr. A. V. Stout, President of the National Shoe and Leather Bank, said that what had struck him most forcibly and favorably was the very attractive development of the tenderer side of Mr. Vanderbilt's nature in his later hours. It had greatly raised the man in his estimation. He had always rejoiced in Vanderbilt's success, for his success meant not only the enrichment of one man, but the extension of trade, the employment of the many, the good of the community. Mr. R. L. Stuart, who was an acquaintance of Mr. Vanderbilt, said he could add nothing to what had been so fully and ably told in THE TIMES of the life of Vanderbilt. His acquaintance was slight with the dead man, being confined to meetings at watering places where the two happened to be staying. He said that Mr. Vanderbilt's life had always been open, the people had kept pretty well along with him while he lived, and now that he is dead there was nothing to be said that most people have not already heard or read.

A TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

MEETING OF THE BOARDS OF DIRECTORS OF THE NEW-YORK CENTRAL, HARLEM, AND LAKE SHORE RAILROAD COMPANIES — EXPRESSION OF REGARD FOR THE MEMORY OF CORNELIUS VANDERBILT, THEIR LATE PRESIDENT.

At a joint meeting of the Boards of Directors of the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company, the New-York and Harlem Railroad Company, and the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway Company, assembled together by the sorrowful announcement of the death of their honored President, Cornelius Vanderbilt, direct that the following expression of their deep and lasting regard for his cherished memory be entered in full upon the minutes of their respective companies.

Though the lamented dead passes away at an age beyond the allotted period of man, and at the close of a complete and rounded career, with his great work in the full course of successful and enduring operation, yet the sense of personal and public loss on the part of his associates is none the less keen and poignant. The entire public will unite in paying the tribute of sincere respect for one who stood as the foremost representative of public enterprise and material progress; but to those who were identified with him in these boards his death comes with a closer and deeper sense. In their personal relations they lose a kindly and beloved friend; in their business relations one whose intrepid, penetrating, and sagacious leadership was the inspiration of unfailing success. While deploring the great loss thus sustained, it is a source of satisfaction to these boards to know, as it was a just source of comfort to our departed friend to reflect, that the gigantic work he inaugurated and the sound policy he established find, in two generations of trained and worthy successors, the complete assurance that they will be faithfully and ably carried out by those who follow him in control. It is the mark of power to leave its impress beyond its own immediate sway; and the truest monument to Cornelius Vanderbilt is the fact that he so organized his creation that the work will go on, though the master workman is gone

His career was a dazzling success. In an age and a country distinguished for their marvelous personal triumphs, his achievements rank among the most extraordinary and distinctive of all. Thoroughly practical and faithfully wrought out, their splendor yet gives them the tinge of romance. Nor was this glittering success due to any early adventitious advantages. He was essentially the creator, not the creature, of the circumstances which he molded to his purposes. He was the architect of his own fortune. Beginning in a humble position, with apparently little scope of action and small promise of opportunity, he rose, by his genius, his indomitable energy and his clear forecast, to the control of vast enterprises involving millions of property, and connected with the interests of millions of people. The diverse and complicated character of his business was as remarkable as its magnitude. He created a large merchant marine, and then turned with equal aptitude and skill to the organization and management of great railroad combinations. And it is to his lasting honor that his unfailing policy was to protect, develop, and improve the interests with which he was connected, instead of seeking a selfish and dishonorable profit through their detriment and sacrifice. The rights and the welfare of the smallest stockholder were as well guarded as his own. In a period of crafty devices for sinister ends he taught the way of success through legitimate means. It was a further evidence of his essential and rugged manhood that, with all his brilliant success, his frank simplicity of character and habits remained unchanged. In the height of his rare fortune he was the same direct, provident, unostentatious man as before he had mounted to his large opportunities. The sterling qualities of his strong and commanding individuality were deeply appreciated by all who were associated with him. He was firm and true in his friendships, and the unerring sagacity with which he selected the best agents to administer his great trusts was only equaled by the sincerity of his attachment for those who proved worthy of his confidence. In his relations with the members of these boards he was uniformly courteous and genial, and the association will ever be a fragrant memory.

As a citizen he was true to the honor and welfare of his country. His public spirit was attested by his liberal donation to the Government in the hour of its need of the steamer bearing his own name, and his contribution, when in critical emergency, when there was an urgent demand for the promptest naval equipment, was even more important than its intrinsic value, great as that was. If his patriotism was thus substantial, his philanthropy was equally generous and effective. Without ostentatious profession, he wrought practical good. His own training had been in the severe experience of affairs, rather than in the fine culture of the schools; but his nature was great enough to appreciate advantages of the finished education he had not himself been permitted to enjoy, and his munificent gift for the endowment of the University at Nashville will be gratefully remembered by the large number who will share its benefits.

While exacting needed and effective discipline among those intrusted with the care of the property and lives of the people, he always manifested a strong attachment for them and a kindly interest in their welfare. It was among his cherished purposes that adequate provision should be made, upon some comprehensive plan, for injured and needy railroad employes; and even while suffering under fatal disease his thoughts and utterances often recurred to those associated in every variety of capacity, with his great enterprises, and evinced his earnest regard for their prosperity. He was peculiarly happy in his domestic relations. Passing beyond the golden anniversary with the cherished companion of his early manhood, whose memory was deeply revered by her survivor and by her children, he was fortunate in the choice of his later life; and his declining years were sustained and brightened by the tender devotion of one whose rare endowments of heart and mind shone throughout their union, who ministered with unaffected grace to his comfort and happiness, and to whom, with the other members of his family, we extend our sincere sympathy in their bereavement.

He endured a protracted and painful illness at a remarkable age with heroic fortitude and Christian spirit; and, when the sun of his life, unclouded through its long day, peacefully sank below the horizon, a true man, a sincere friend, a devoted husband and father, a liberal employer, an extraordinary genius of affairs, and a citizen of high public spirit went to his final rest."

THE COMMODORE'S GIFT TO A SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

About a week ago Commodore Vanderbilt sent $50 to the Sunday-school of the Church of the Strangers as a subscription to the Christmas festival. Sufficient money had previously been collected to defray the expenses of the entertainment, and it was decided to invest the money in flowers. Each one of the Sunday-school children will be presented with a flower-pot, and either a tuberose, hyacinth, or lily bulb. The pupils are expected to cultivate the bulbs and present the same to the Sunday-school next Easter Sunday. Prizes will be awarded to those having the best specimens. Mr. Byron A. Brooks, the Superintendent of the school, and Charles Hammann, the Secretary, have the matter in charge. The idea was conceived by Rev. Dr. Charles F. Deems, the Pastor of the Church of the Strangers, while the death of Commodore Vanderbilt at this time adds special significance to the project.

MR. VANDERBILT EULOGIZED BY MR. BEECHER.

Plymouth Church lecture-room was crowded last night at the regular Friday evening prayer-meeting. After the usual religious exercises, Mr. Beecher addressed the congregation at length. In the course of his remarks he said: "Cornelius Vanderbilt died yesterday. He was one of the most remarkable men that New-York has ever produced, with one of the clearest heads—one who had the art of turning thoughts to things; a man of great sagacity; a man of intense foresight, capable of comprehensive plan and combination, of great energy of will, of clear executive processes, and who took few backward steps. Beginning early he made himself felt upon the commercial interests of his neighborhood, and has gone on through a long series of years, and reached an extraordinary old age of activity with his understanding clear and crisp, and radiant to the very last. He was a man that did a great deal of good, a man that deserves in his rank the honor of that rank. There are few of the commercial forces that have been his equal: perhaps none his superior. But there it stops—there it stops. It is true that he gave a church; it is true that in his last days, thanks to the Christian woman whom God gave him for a companion and good guide, he endowed a university, and the good he has done in these will outrun and outlast, immeasurably, all the other successes of his life. But I am speaking of the man's intentions—his recognized purposes and methods all through his life. He had a wide field and scope; as a mere business man he must be spoken of honorably."

DEATH OF MR. VANDERBILT'S SISTER

MRS. CHARLOTTE EGBERT DIES AT HER RESIDENCE ON STATEN ISLAND—THE FUNERAL TO TAKE PLACE ON MONDAY.

Mrs. Charlotte Egbert, sister of the late Commodore Vanderbilt, died yesterday afternoon between 3 and 4 o'clock at her residence at Tompkinsville, Staten Island, after a brief illness. She passed her days in the quiet enjoyment of rural life upon Staten Island, within a few miles of the old farmhouse where she was born. During the greater part of her life Mrs. Egbert was in comfortable circumstances, and had earned the esteem and respect of all who knew her by her many good qualities and her homely and benevolent disposition. She attained her 85th year on the 29th of December last, and was some two years older than the late Commodore. In her early years she received such an education as was within the reach of the settlers upon the Island at that time, and as she grew up to womanhood, while her brother Cornelius sailed his first boat between New-York and Staten Island, she was occupied in assisting her mother in the duties of the household. She was an especial favorite with her brother Cornelius, who named one of the first vessels he built "Charlotte," as a mark of his affection for her. When about 23 years of age she was married to Capt. John Deforest, who for many years commanded the Charlotte, a large schooner built by Commodore Vanderbilt to run between New-York and Charleston. By this marriage seven children were born, five boys and two girls. One of her sons, Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt Deforest, is at present purchasing agent of the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad, and during the illness of his uncle he was constantly in attendance upon him, and watched at the bedside of the Commodore as often as two or three times in the week. Another son resides at White Plains. Capt. Deforest died about 35 or 40 years ago, and some 8 or 10 years afterward Mrs. Deforest married Mr. Tunis Egbert, who had been a contractor and builder.

After his marriage he lived in the quiet enjoyment of domestic life, without ascertaining any of the responsibilities of business, and died some 20 years ago. No children were born of this marriage. Since that time Mrs. Egbert lived in a plain cottage at Tompkinsville, upon an eminence overlooking the harbor and the cities of New-York and Brooklyn. There she was frequently visited by her brothers, the late Commodore, and Capt Jacob Vanderbilt, whose residence is situated some three miles distant upon the southern part of the Island. On Saturday last she was seized with an attack of pneumonia, and on Thursday evening became unconscious while receiving the ministrations of Rev. Mr. Bayard, of the Dutch Reformed Church of the village. Her brother, Capt. Jacob Vanderbilt, was at her bedside daily during her illness.

At the time of her death Mrs. Egbert was surrounded by her children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren. Among those who were present at her death-bed were: Mrs. Haskel, her daughter, who was constantly in attendance upon her during her illness; her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Van Duzer; her granddaughter, Mrs. Howland, with her little daughter, the great-grandchild of Mrs. Egbert; her two sons, Cornelius Vanderbilt Deforest and Charles Deforest, Mrs. A. Black, and Mrs. D. R. Hitchcock. Her brother, Mr. Jacob Vanderbilt, was at her bedside in the morning, and subsequently took the 10 o'clock boat for New-York to look after the funeral arrangements of his brother the late Commodore. When he returned to the cottage at Tompkinsville, about 5 o'clock in the afternoon, he learned of the death of his sister. Immediately after her death her two sons, Cornelius and Charles, left for New-York to make arrangements for the funeral, which will take place on Monday at 1 P. M., from the Dutch Reformed Church on Brighton Heights. Her remains will be interred in the family vault at New-Dorp. Mrs. Egbert owned property in the vicinity of the village valued at from $30,000 to $40,000.

THE STEAMER GREECE AFLOAT.

The National Line steamer Greece, Capt. Anderson, from this port, on her way to Liverpool, which went ashore on the west bank in the lower bay at noon on Thursday, remained where she struck all night. Tugs were sent to the steamer's assistance, but they were not able to dislodge her until noon yesterday, when she was floated off. She had apparently not been injured, and at 12:45 proceeded on her way. She was in charge of a New-Jersey pilot at the time of grounding.

LOCAL MISCELLANY.

LOCAL METEOROLOGY OF 1876.

INTERESTING FACTS FROM A REPORT PREPARED BY MR. H. I. PENROD, OF THE SIGNAL SERVICE BUREAU.

The year 1876 presented some very unusual and curious meteorological features. It began with mild weather, to the discouragement of ice dealers and the profit of physicians. Its Summer was prolonged and intensely hot, and its close was as intensely cold as its Summer had been torrid. From an annual report prepared by Mr. H. I. Penrod, in charge of the Signal Service Bureau in this City, a number of interesting facts and figures have been obtained. This report records the barometrical and thermometrical changes for each month, the velocity of the wind for each month, and the amount of rainfall, together with the number of aurora seen. The number of miles traveled by the wind was 93,235; average velocity of the wind per hour for the year, 10.6 miles. Number of auroras in the year, two—one (faint) in September, and another in October. The prevailing direction of the wind during the year was north-west. January, 1876, the temperature was very mild, very little snow, and no ice at all formed. In February, unusual range of barometer, very high winds, no ice of any account, very little snow. March brought very high winds and excess of rain. April in the Hudson River open to Albany. Nothing unusual or remarkable in May, but in June there was not one storm and no cautionary signals were displayed. In July there was unusually high temperature in the beginning of the month, with cooler weather toward the end. August was notable for absence of storms, the barometer above the mean, and there was a deficiency of rainfall. In September there were an unusual number of rainy days. The first snow fell at the unusually early date of October 15; the temperature of November was above the mean, and December brought numerous snow-storms. Fifty cautionary signals were displayed during the year, 29 of which were justified, and 21 not justified. The cautionary signals are displayed when the indications are that the wind will blow 25 miles an hour, that velocity being considered dangerous for navigators. The following table explains itself:

	Mean Barometer.	Temperature. Mean.	Max.	Min.	Humidity.	Inches. Rain or Snow.
January	30.123	35.1	64	12	71.2	1.21
February	30.114	31.6	57	7	70.5	5.39
March	30.020	35.0	70	9	68.0	7.79
April	29.986	46.1	68	29	57.5	3.79
May	30.047	58.4	83	34	63.9	3.94
June	30.001	70.8	92	49	70.7	2.87
July	29.954	77.2	99	60	61.8	5.72
August	30.066	73.4	90	55	64.3	2.97
September	29.992	63.5	86	45	67.5	5.24
October	30.001	50.3	73	31	61.2	1.83
November	29.958	44.9	73	21	67.8	4.40
December	29.965	25.5	49	*2	65.8	2.29
Annual mean.	30.024	51.0	74	29	65.8	47.40

*Below zero.

There can be no room for complaint that the year was not one of fair days, as there were but 147 of the 365 days in which rain or snow fell, while there were 239 clear or fair days in the twelve month. The character of the months by days is indicated by the following table:

	Clear.	Fair.	Cloudy.	Rain or Snow.
January	9	11	11	11
February	10	8	11	16
March	9	13	9	14
April	7	18	5	10
May	9	13	9	12
June	5	17	8	13
July	6	18	7	13
August	9	16	6	5
September	3	10	17	17
October	11	9	11	10
November	2	10	18	15
December	6	10	15	12
Total	86	153	127	147

Mr. Penrod has made a careful comparison of the mean temperatures for the different months in the year, which show that the mean for 1876 was much higher than that for 1875, but lower than the average for the series of years covered by the previous observations. The following is the result of his comparisons:

	From a long series of Observations.	1875.	1876.
January	30.2	25.2	35.1
February	30.4	24.9	31.6
March	38.3	32.5	36.0
